PREFACE

---

IT HAS been the purpose of the Editor in preparing this his Third Revision to treat much more fully all encyclopædic titles, except those in which there has been no development in recent years, while adding many dictionary and other minor titles not found in the last Revision. These objects and the great changes since 1898, the date of the last Revision, in the questions which have occupied the courts, have required the extension of the work to three volumes. The titles of both State and Federal cases have for the first time been inserted, as well as the volumes of the different series of reports other than those of the official series. Titles of a statutory and changing nature have been treated less fully, so as to avoid purely ephemeral matter.

Judge Baldwin (Modern Political Institutions 241) quotes Jeremiah Mason as saying that the development of an American Jurisprudence can only be looked for from the courts of the National Government. The Editor has been guided by that thought and sees in it a hope of increasing uniformity of law, towards which the profession, in its work on uniform legislation, is making real progress. He has therefore constantly cited the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and very frequently those of the lower Federal Courts. Of course, on many of the questions now being passed upon by the State Courts, the decisions of the Supreme Court are of binding authority.

The Editor is indebted to George H. Bates for many important titles, such as Constitutional Law, Constitution of the United States, Restraint of Trade and Equity; to R. C. Wildes for valuable assistance throughout; to Charles G. Fenwick, Ph. D. (Johns Hopkins), author of the "Neutrality Laws of the United States," for revising and in many cases rewriting the titles relating to International Law; and to Norman B. Gwyn, M. D., for revising the titles relating to Medical Jurisprudence.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

TO THE difficulties which the author experienced on his admission to the bar, the present publication is to be attributed. His endeavors to get forward in his profession were constantly obstructed, and his efforts for a long time frustrated, for want of that knowledge which his elder brethren of the bar seemed to possess. To find among the reports and the various treatises on the law the object of his inquiry, was a difficult task: he was in a labyrinth without a guide; and much of the time which was spent in finding his way out might, with the friendly assistance of one who was acquainted with the construction of the edifice, have been saved, and more profitably employed. He applied to law dictionaries and digests within his reach, in the hope of being directed to the source whence they derived their learning; but he was too often disappointed: they seldom pointed out the authorities where the object of his inquiry might be found. It is true such works contain a great mass of information, but, from the manner in which they have been compiled, they sometimes embarrassed him more than if he had not consulted them. They were written for another country, possessing laws different from our own, and it became a question how far they were or were not applicable here. Besides, most of the matter in the English law dictionaries will be found to have been written while the feudal law was in its full vigor, and not fitted to the present times, nor calculated for present use, even in England. And there is a great portion which, though useful to an English lawyer, is almost useless to the American student. What, for example, have we to do with those laws of Great Britain which relate to the person of their king, their nobility, their clergy, their navy, their army; with their game laws; their local statutes, such as regulate their banks, their canals, their exchequer, their marriages, their births, their burials, their beer and ale houses, and a variety of similar subjects?

The most modern law dictionaries are compilations from the more ancient, with some modifications and alterations; and, in many instances, they are servile copies, without the slightest alteration. In the mean time the law has undergone a great change. Formerly the principal object of the law seemed to be to regulate real property, in all its various artificial modifications, while little or no attention was bestowed upon the rules which govern personal property and rights. The mercantile law has since arisen, like a bright pyramid, amid the gloom of the feudal law, and is now far more important in practice than that which refers to real estate. The law of real property, too, has changed, particularly in this country.

The English law dictionaries would be very unsatisfactory guides, even in pointing out where the laws relating to the acquisition and transfer of real estate, or the laws of descent in the United States, are to be found. And the student who seeks to find in the Dictionaries of Cowel, Manly, Jacobs, Tomlins, Cunningham, Burn, Montefiore, Pott, Whishaw, Williams, the Termes de la Ley, or any similar compilation, any satisfactory account in relation to international law, to trade and commerce, to maritime law, to medical jurisprudence, or to natural law, will probably not be fully gratified. He cannot, of course, expect to find in them any thing in relation to our government, our constitutions, or our political or civil institutions.

It occurred to the author that a law dictionary, written entirely anew, and calculated to remedy those defects, would be useful to the profession. Probably overrating his strength, he resolved to undertake the task; and, if he should not fully succeed, he will have the consolation to know that his effort may induce some more gifted individual, and better qualified by his learning, to undertake such a task, and to render the American bar an important service. Upon an examination of the constitution and laws of the United States, and of the several states of the American Union, he perceived many technical expressions and much valuable information which he would be able to incorporate in his work. Many of these laws, although local in their nature, will be found useful to every lawyer, particularly those engaged in mercantile practice. As instances of such laws the reader is referred to the articles Acknowledgment, Descent, Divorce, Letters of Administration and Limitation. It is within the plan of this work to explain such technical expressions as relate to the legislative, executive, or judicial departments of the government; the political and the civil rights and duties of the citizens; the rights and duties of persons, particularly such as are peculiar to our institutions, as, the rights of descent and administration; of the mode of acquiring and transferring property; to the criminal law, and its administration. It has also been an object with the author to embody in his work such decisions of the courts as appeared to him to be important, either because they differed from former judgments, or because they related to some point which was before either obscure or unsettled. He does not profess to have examined or even referred to all the American cases: it is a part of the plan, however, to refer to authorities, generally, which will lead the student to nearly all the cases.

The author was induced to believe that an occasional comparison of the civil, canon, and other systems of foreign law, with our own, would be useful to the profession, and illustrate many articles which, without such aid, would not appear very clear; and also to introduce many terms from foreign laws, which may supply a deficiency in ours. The articles Condonation, Extradition, and Novation are of this sort. He was induced to adopt this course because the civil law has been considered, perhaps not without justice, the best system of written reason; and as all laws are, or ought to be, founded in reason, it seemed peculiarly proper to have recourse to this fountain of wisdom: but another motive influenced this decision; one of the states of the Union derives most of its civil regulations from the civil law; and there seemed a peculiar propriety, therefore, in introducing it into an American law dictionary. He also had the example of a Story, a Kent, Mr. Angell, and others, who have ornamented their works from the same source. And he here takes the opportunity to acknowledge the benefits which he has derived from the learned labors of these gentlemen, and of those of Judge Sergeant, Judge Swift, Judge Gould, Mr. Rawle, and other writers on American law and jurisprudence.

In the execution of his plan, the author has, in the first place, defined and explained the various words and phrases, by giving their most enlarged meaning, and then all the shades of signification of which they are susceptible; secondly, he has divided the subject in the manner which to him appeared the most natural, and laid down such principles and rules as belong to it; in these cases he has generally been careful to give an illustration, by citing a case whenever the subject seemed to require it, and referring to others supporting the same point; thirdly, whenever the article admitted of it, he has compared it with the laws of other countries within his reach, and pointed out their concord or disagreement; and, fourthly, he has referred to the authorities, the abridgments, digests, and the ancient and modern treatises, where the subject is to be found, in order to facilitate the researches of the student. He desires not to be understood as professing to cite cases always exactly in point; on the contrary, in many instances the authorities will probably be found to be but distantly connected with the subject under examination, but still connected with it, and they have been added in order to lead the student to matter of which he may possibly be in pursuit.

To those who are aware of the difficulties of the task, the author deems it unnecessary to make any apology for the imperfections which may be found in the work. His object has been to be useful: if that has been accomplished in any degree, he will be amply rewarded for his labor; and he relies upon the generous liberality of the members of the profession to overlook the errors which may have been committed in his endeavors to serve them.

JOHN BOUVIER.

PHILADELPHIA, September, 1839.

the "newness of the letter" of modern statutes. The Mercantile Law, with the large body of exposition by which it has been recently illustrated; the Law of Real Property in the new shape which, especially in America, it has latterly assumed; the technical expressions scattered here and there throughout the Constitution of the United States, and the constitutions and laws of the several States of the American Union,—all these, and more than these, must be within the lawyer's easy reach if he would be spared embarrassment, mortification, and decadence.

A work which should come up to this standard would indeed be an invaluable aid to the profession; but what hope could be reasonably entertained that the requisites essential to its preparation—the learning, the zeal, the acumen to analyze, the judgment to synthesize, the necessary leisure, the persevering industry, and the bodily strength to carry to successful execution—would ever be combined in one man? Mr. Bouvier determined that it should not be his fault if such a work was not at least honestly attempted. Bravely he wrought, month in and out, year in and out, rewarded for his self-denying toil by each well-executed article, and rejoicing, at rare and prized intervals, over a completed letter of the alphabet.

In 1839 the author had the satisfaction of presenting in two octavo volumes the results of his anxious toils to his brethren and the world at large; and the approving verdict of the most eminent judges—Judge Story and Chancellor Kent, for example—assured him that he had "not labored in vain," nor "spent his strength for naught." This was well; but the author himself was the most rigid and unsparing of his critics. Contrary to the practice of many writers, considering the success of the first and second editions as a proper stimulus to additional accuracy, fulness, and completeness in every part, in 1848, when the third edition was called for, the second having been published in 1843, he was able to announce that he had not only "remodelled very many of the articles contained in the former editions," but also had "added upwards of twelve hundred new ones." He also presented the reader with "a very copious index to the whole, which, at the same time that it will assist the inquirer, will exhibit the great number of subjects treated of in these volumes."

He still made collections on all sides for the benefit of future issues, and it was found after the death of the author, in 1851, that he had accumulated a large mass of valuable materials. These, with much new matter, were, by competent editorial care, incorporated into the text of the third edition, and the whole was issued as the fourth edition in 1852. The work had been subjected to a thorough revision,—inaccuracies were eliminated, the various changes in the constitutions of several of the United States were noticed in their appropriate places, and under the head of "Maxims" alone thirteen hundred new articles were added.

That in the ensuing eight years six more editions were called for by the profession, is a tribute of so conclusive a character to the merits of the work that eulogy seems superfluous. Let us, then, briefly examine those features to which the great professional popularity of the Law Dictionary is to be attributed. Some of these, specified as desiderata, have been already referred to with sufficient particularity. But it has been the aim of the author to cover a wider field than the one thus designated. He has included in his plan technical expressions relating to the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the government; the political and the civil rights and duties of citizens; the rights and duties of persons, especially such as are peculiar to the institutions of the United States,—for instance, the rights of descent and administration, the mode of acquiring and transferring property, and the criminal law and its administration.

He was persuaded—and here as elsewhere he has correctly interpreted the wants of the profession—that an occasional comparison of the civil, canon, and other systems of foreign law with our own would be eminently useful by way of illustration, as well as for other purposes too obvious to require recital. We will barely suggest the advantage to the student of civil law or canon law of having at hand a guide of this character. And we would express our hope that the student of civil or of canon law is not hereafter to be that rara avis in the United States which, little to our credit, he has long been. He who would be thoroughly furnished for his high vocation will not be satisfied to slake his thirst for knowledge even at the streams (to which, alas! few aspire) of Bracton, Britton, or Fleta; he will ascend rather to the fountains from which these drew their fertilizing supplies.

To suppose that he who draws up many thousands of definitions, and cites whole libraries of authorities, shall never err in the accuracy of statement or the relevancy of quotation, is to suppose such a combination of the best qualities of a Littleton, a Fearne, a Butler, and a Hargrave, as the world is not likely to behold while law-books are made and lawyers are needed. If Chancellor Kent, after "running over almost every article in" the first edition (we quote his own language), was "deeply impressed with the evidence of the industry, skill, learning, and judgment with which the work was completed," and Judge Story expressed a like favorable verdict, the rest of us, legal and lay, may, without any unbecoming humiliation, accept their dicta as conclusive. We say legal and lay; for the lay reader will make a sad mistake if he supposes that a Law Dictionary, especially this Law Dictionary, is out of "his line and measure." On the contrary, the Law Dictionary should stand on the same shelf with Sismondi's Italian Republics, Robertson's Charles the Fifth, Russell's Modern Europe, Guizot's Lectures, Hallam's Histories, Prescott's Ferdinand and Isabella, and the records of every country in which the influences of the canon law, the civil law, and the feudal law, separately or jointly, moulded society, and made men, manners, and customs what they were, and, to no small extent, what they still are.

In common with the profession on both sides of the water, Judge Bouvier had doubtless often experienced inconvenience from the absence of an Index to Matthew Bacon's New Abridgment of the Law. Not only was this defect an objection to that valuable compendium, but since the publication of the last edition there had been an accumulation of new matter which it was most desirable should be at the command of the law student, the practising lawyer, and the bench. In 1841 Judge Bouvier was solicited to prepare a new edition, and undertook the arduous task. The revised work was presented to the public in ten royal octavo volumes, dating from 1842 to 1846. With the exception of one volume, edited by Judge Randall, and a part of another, edited by Mr. Robert E. Peterson, Judge Bouvier's son-in-law, the whole of the labor, including the copious Index, fell upon the broad shoulders of Judge Bouvier. This, the second American, was based upon the seventh English edition, prepared by Sir Henry Gwillim and Messrs. C. E. Dodd and William Blanshard, and published in eight royal octavos in 1832. In the first three volumes Bouvier confines his annotations to late American decisions; but in the remaining volumes he refers to recent English as well as to American Reports.

But this industrious scholar was to increase still further the obligations under which he had already laid the profession and the public. The preparation of a comprehensive yet systematic digest of American law had been for years a favorite object of contemplation to a mind which had long admired the analytical system of Pothier. Unwearied by the daily returning duties of his office and the bench, and by the unceasing vigilance necessary to the incorporation into the text of his Law Dictionary of the results of recent trials and annual legislation, he laid the foundations of his "Institutes of American Law," and perseveringly added block upon block, until, in the summer of 1851, he had the satisfaction of looking upon a completed edifice. Lawyers who had hailed with satisfaction the success of his earlier labors, and those who had grown into reputation since the results of those labors were first given to the world, united their verdict in favor of this last work.

It is hardly necessary to remark that it was only by a carefully adjusted apportionment of his hours that Judge Bouvier was enabled to accomplish so large an amount of intellectual labor, in addition to that "which came upon him daily,"—the still beginning, never ending, often vexatious duties connected with private legal practice and judicial deliberation. He rose every morning at from four to five o'clock, and worked in his library until seven or eight; then left his home for his office (where, in the intervals of business, he was employed on his "Law Dictionary" or "The Institutes") or his seat on the bench, and after the labor of the day wrought in his library from five o'clock until an hour before midnight.

AND CONCISE ENCYCLOPEDIA

A TABLE OF ABBREVIATIONS WILL BE FOUND UNDER THE TITLE ABBREVIATION

A

A. The first letter of the alphabet.

It is used to distinguish the first page of a folio, the second being marked "b," thus: Coke, Litt. 114a, 114b. It is also used as an abbreviation for many words of which it is the initial letter. See ABBREVIATION.

In Latin phrases it is a preposition, denoting from, by, in, on, of, at, and is of common use as a part of a title.

In French phrases it is also a preposition, denoting of, at, to, for, in, with.

The article "a" is not necessarily a singular term, it is often used in the sense of "any," and is then applied to more than one individual object; National Union Bank v. Copeland, 141 Mass. 266, 4 N. E. 794; Snowden v. Guion, 101 N. Y. 458, 5 N. E. 322; Thompson v. Stewart, 60 Ia. 225, 14 N. W. 247; sometimes as the; 23 Ch. Div. 595.

Among the Romans this letter was used in criminal trials. The judges were furnished with small tables covered with wax, and each one inscribed on it the initial letter of his vote: A (absolvo) when he voted to acquit the accused; C (condemno) when he was for condemnation; and N L (non liquet), when the matter did not appear clearly, and he desired a new argument.

The letter A (l. e. antiquo, "for the old law") was inscribed upon Roman ballots under the Lex Tabellaria, to indicate a negative vote; Tayl. Civ. Law, 191, 192.

An abbreviation of adversus used for versus, indicating the parties to an action.

An adulteress among the Puritans was condemned to wear the initial letter "A" in red cloth on her dress.

From the side of; denoting closeness of intimacy or connexion; as a court held before auditors specialiter a latere regis destinatis; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 4.

ABACTOR (Lat. ab and agere, to lead away). One who stole cattle in numbers. Jacob, Law Dict. One who stole one horse, two mares, two oxen, two she-goats, or five rams. Abigeus was the term more commonly used to denote such an offender.

ABADENGO. Spanish Law. Lands, town, and villages belonging to an abbot and under his jurisdiction. All lands belonging to ecclesiastical corporations, and as such exempt from taxation; Escriche, Dicc. Raz.

Lands of this kind were usually held in mortmain, and hence a law was enacted declaring that no land liable to taxation could be given to ecclesiastical institutions ("ningun Realengo non pase a abadengo"), which is repeatedly insisted on.

ABALIENATIO (Lat. alienatio). The most complete method used among the Romans of transferring lands. It could take place only between Roman citizens. Calvinus, Lex., Abalienatio; Burr. Law. Dic.

ABANDON. To relinquish; forsake; give up. The word includes the intention. And the external act by which it is carried into effect. See ABANDONMENT.

An abandonnee is the person in whose favor the property or right is abandoned. 5 M. & S. 79.

ABANDONED AND CAPTURED PROPERTY ACT. The act of Congress of March 12, 1863, relating to certain property in the Confederate States. It expressly excludes from its operation property which had been used to carry on war against the United States. August 20, 1866, is, as to the operation of the act, the date of the end of the war.

Congress constituted the government trustee for so much of such property as belonged to the faithful Southern people; it was directed to be sold and the proceeds paid into the treasury, claimants having two years to bring suit in the Court of Claims; U. S. v. Anderson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 56, 19 L. Ed. 615. It was the property which had been seized or taken from the enemy's possession by the United States forces; Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 351, 19 L. Ed. 696.

ABANDONMENT. Relinquishment; renunciation; surrender.

Relinquishment of a right or of property with the intention of not reclaiming it or resuming its ownership or enjoyment. The relinquishment or surrender of rights or property by one person to another. This last definition was adopted in Hickman v. Link, 116 Mo. 123, 22 S. W. 472, and therefore it is deemed proper to leave it undisturbed, although it is not technically accurate as to all the sub-titles of Abandonment. This definition first appeared in the edition of 1867, in which the author of the title was Mr. Phillips, author of "Insurance," etc. Abandonment of rights or property generally cannot legally be made to a specified person. As used in Insurance Law, however, it does involve the relinquishment of the property insured to a specified person—the insurer. As Mr. Phillips was not only an able writer on Insurance Law but also president of an insurance company, he doubtless had the particular form of abandonment known in that branch of the law, most prominent in his mind, and it is not improbable that the definition was not intended as a general one, but only of those forms of abandonment to which it applied. This seems manifest from the fact that the term is correctly defined in the sub-titles with reference to their respective subject matters.

It is a matter of intention and consists in giving up a thing without reference to a particular person or purpose; there can be none to a definite person; Norman v. Corbley, 32 Mont. 195, 79 Pac. 1059; or for a consideration; Watts v. Spencer, 51 Or. 262, 94 Pac. 39. As applied to property rights it consists of nonuser and intention; Alamosa Creek Canal Co. v. Nelson, 42 Colo. 140, 93 Pac. 1112. A transaction which falls as a sale cannot be converted into an abandonment; Watts v. Spencer, 51 Or. 262, 94 Pac. 39. Abandonment implies a relinquishment to the public generally, or to the next comer—a surrender to a particular person not being an abandonment; Stephens v. Mansfield, 11 Cal. 363. Of two persons both interested in a water right, neither party can abandon to the other; Norman v. Corbley, 32 Mont. 195, 79 Pac. 1059.

In Civil Law. The act by which a debtor surrenders his property for the benefit of his creditors; Merlin, Repert. See ABANDONMENT FOR TORTS.

In Maritime Law. The act by which the owner of a ship surrenders the ship and freight to a creditor who has become such by contracts made by the master.

The effect of such abandonment is to release the owner from any further responsibility. The privilege in case of contracts is limited to those of a maritime nature; Pothier, Chart. Part. sec. 2, art. 2, § 51; Code de Commerce, lib. 2, tit. 2, art. 216. Similar provisions exist in England and the United States to some extent; 1 Par. Mar. Law, 395; Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Sto. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274; American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 Mich. 368. Under the Act of Congress of 1851, March 3 (Rev. Stat. U. S. § 4285), the liability of the shipowners for a collision may be discharged by surrendering and assigning the vessel and freight to a trustee for the benefit of the parties injured, though these have been diminished in value by the collision; when they are totally destroyed, it would seem that the owners are discharged; Norwich Co. v. Wright, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 104, 20 L. Ed. 585; Wright v. Transp. Co., 8 Blatchf. 14, Fed. Cas. No. 18,087; overruling Walker v. Ins. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 288; Barnes v. Steamship Co., 6 Phila. 479, Fed. Cas. No. 1,021. This is not the case under the English statutes. 2 My. & Cr. 489; 15 M. & W. 391; 2 B. & Ad. 2.

Insurers notified that vessel is abandoned to them, after which owner and master take no steps to save vessel, does not relieve the insurers of liability on policy of insurance; The Natchez, 42 Fed. 169. A schooner was stranded and crew taken off by life-saving crew, the master expecting to return on board, and with no intention of abandoning her; a tug took schooner in tow to New York, and it was held that salvage service should be allowed; The S. A. Rudolph, 39 Fed. 331. A vessel is not abandoned unless its possession is voluntarily forsaken by its owner or master; The Mary, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 123, 4 L. Ed. 200.

By Husband or Wife. The act of a husband or wife who leaves his or her consort willfully, and with an intention of causing perpetual separation. See DESEPTION.

In Insurance. The transfer by an assured to his underwriters of his interest in the insured subject, or the proceeds of it, or claims arising from it, so far as the subject is insured by the policy, in order to recover as for a total loss.

"An abandonment is an act on the part of the assured, by which he relinquishes and transfers to the underwriters his insurable interest, or the proceeds of it, or the claims arising from it, so far as it is insured by the policy." 2 Phil. Ins. § 1490.

The term is used only in reference to risks in navigation; but the principle is applicable in fire insurance, where there are remnants, and sometimes also under stipulations in life policies in favor of creditors; 2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1490, 1514, 1515; 3 Kent 265; Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Duffield, 6 Ohio St. 200, 67 Am. Dec. 339; 6 East 72.

The doctrines which have obtained in marine insurance of constructive total loss and abandonment, salvage and general average, are not applicable in fire insurance; May, Ins. § 421 a; Hicks v. McGehee, 39 Ark. 264.

The object of abandonment being to recover the whole value of the subject of the insurance, it can occur only where the subject itself, or remains of it, or claims on account of it, survive the peril which is the occasion of the loss; 2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1507, 1516; 2 Pars. Mar. Ins. 120; 36 Eng. L. & Eq. 198; 3 Kent 321; 3 Bing. N. C. 266. In such case the assured must elect, immediately on receiving intelligence of a loss, whether to abandon, and not delay for the purpose of speculating on the state of the markets; 2 Phil. Ins. § 1667. He may have a reasonable time to inspect the cargo, but for no other purpose; 3 Kent 320. He must give notice promptly to the insurer of his intention; five days held too late; 5 M. & S. 47; see L. R. 5 C. P. 341. Notice of the abandonment of a vessel need not be given to insurers or reinsurers where there is a constructive total loss; 15 Q. B. D. 11; and delay in giving notice, if it does not prejudice the insurer, will not affect the rights of the insured; Young v. Ins. Co., 24 Fed. 279. In cases of actual total loss, notice of abandonment is unnecessary; Tyser, Mar. Ins. § 33.

In America, it appears that the right of abandonment is to be judged by the facts of each particular case as they existed at the time of abandonment; Peele v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 27, Fed. Cas. No. 10,905; 2 Phil. Ins. § 1536; Bradlie v. Ins. Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 378, 9 L. Ed. 1123. In England, the abandonment may be effected by subsequent occurrences, and the facts at the time of action brought determine the right to recover; 4 M. & S. 394; 2 Burr. 1198. But this rule has been doubted in England; 2 Dow 474; 3 Kent 324.

By the doctrine of constructive total loss, a loss of over one-half of the property insured, or damage to the extent of over one-half its value, by a peril insured against, may be turned into a total loss by abandonment; 2 Beach, Ins. § 948; Dwpuy v. Ins. Co., 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 182; Allen v. Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 154. This does not appear to be the English rule; 9 C. B. 94; 1 H. of L. 513. See Forbes v. Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 371.

The right is waived by commencing repairs; 2 Pars. Mar. Ins. 140; Humphreys v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 429, Fed. Cas. No. 6,871; Dickey v. Ins. Co., 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 658, 20 Am. Dec. 763; Depau v. Ins. Co., 5 Cow. (N.

Y.) 63, 15 Am. Dec. 431; 4 App. Cas. 755; but not by temporary repairs; 2 Phil. Ins. § 1540; but is not lost by reason of the enhancement of the loss through the mere negligence or mistakes of the master or crew. It is too late to abandon after the arrival in specie at the port of destination; 2 Pars. Mar. Ins. 128; 4 H. of L. 24; Pezant v. Ins. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 453. See Peters v. Ins. Co., 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 25. An inexpedient or unnecessary sale of the subject by the master does not strengthen the right; 2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1547, 1555, 1570. But the fact that the master only takes steps for the safety or recovery of the thing insured, will not deprive the owners of the right to abandon; Tyser, Mar. Ins. § 28. See SALVAGE; TOTAL LOSS.

No notice of abandonment is necessary where owner loses his rights in a vessel by sale under decree of court of competent jurisdiction, in consequence of peril insured against; 13 App. Cas. 160.

Abandonment may be made upon information entitled to credit, but if made speculatively upon conjecture, it is null.

In the absence of any stipulation on the subject, no particular form of abandonment is required; it may be in writing or oral, in express terms or by obvious implication (but see 1 Campb. 541); but it must be absolute and unconditional, and the ground for it must be stated; 2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1678, 1679 et seq.; Bullard v. Ins. Co., 1 Curt. C. C. 148, Fed. Cas. No. 2,122; Bell v. Beveridge, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 272, 1 L. Ed. 830; Peirce v. Ins. Co., 18 Pick. (Mass.) 83, 29 Am. Dec. 567; see Macy v. Ins. Co., 9 Metc. (Mass.) 354; Citizens Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 9 Mo. 416. Acceptance may cure a defect in abandonment, but is not necessary to its validity; 2 Phil. Ins. § 1689. Nor is the underwriter obliged to accept or decline. He may, however, waive it; 2 Phil. Ins. § 1698. But it is not subject to be defeated by subsequent events; 2 Phil. Ins. § 1704; Peele v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 27, 61, Fed. Cas. No. 10,905; Humphreys v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 429, Fed. Cas. No. 6,871; Rhinelander v. Ins. Co., 4 Cran. (U. S.) 29, 2 L. Ed. 540; Schieffelin v. Ins. Co., 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 21. See supra. And the subject must be transferred free of incumbrance except expense for salvage; Allen v. Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 154; Depau v. Ins. Co., 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 63, 15 Am. Dec. 431. The right to abandon being absolute under proper circumstances, no acceptance is necessary. It is only when the circumstances do not warrant abandonment that the question of the validity of acceptance arises. If there is an acceptance it must be by some distinct and unequivocal act; 29 N. B. 510; but the insurer is not bound to signify acceptance and his silence justifies the conclusion of non-acceptance; Peele v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 27, Fed. Cas. No. 10,905, per Story, J., whose ruling was followed in L. R. 6 P. C. 224, in preference to 3 Brod. & R. 97, where it was held that the insurer must elect within a reasonable time whether to accept. But if the insurer does not accept, either expressly or by some act amounting to it, he cannot hold the assured to the abandonment; Child v. Ins. Co., 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 76; whether the insurer accepts is a matter of construction of his words and conduct; Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 10 Sup. Ct. 934, 34 L. Ed. 398; Badger v. Ins. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 347; Singleton v. Ins. Co., 132 N. Y. 298, 30 N. E. 839. See note, 45 L. Ed. 1, where the subject is examined. There may be an acceptance though there was not strictly a right of abandonment; Copelin v. Ins. Co., 9 Wall. (U. S.) 461, 19 L. Ed. 739. It may be constructive and is implied from taking possession to raise and repair; Peele v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 27, Fed. Cas. No. 10,905; Gloucester Ins. Co. v. Younger, 2 Curt. 322, Fed. Cas. No. 5,487; but not from partial repairs and restoration of the property; Marmaud v. Melledge, 123 Mass. 173; Peele v. Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 254, 19 Am. Dec. 286; though in such case the return must be made in a reasonable time; id.; Reynolds v. Ins. Co., 22 Pick. (Mass.) 191, 33 Am. Dec. 727; Copelin v. Ins. Co., 46 Mo. 211, 2 Am. Rep. 504; Norton v. Ins. Co., 16 Ill. 235; Copelin v. Ins. Co., 9 Wall. (U. S.) 461, 19 L. Ed. 739; Young v. Ins. Co., 24 Fed. 279. The effect of a valid abandonment is to put the insurer in the place of the insured with no greater right but entitled to all that can be saved; Insurance Co. v. Gossler, 96 U. S. 645, 24 L. Ed. 863; and the owner becomes the agent of the underwriter and is bound to protect his interest; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 139, 7 L. Ed. 809; Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 10 Sup. Ct. 934, 34 L. Ed. 398. See TOTAL LOSS.

Of Public Highway. Non-user of public alley for over 40 years in connection with affirmative acts of abandonment, justifies a finding that it cease to be a public highway; Woodruff v. Paddock, 130 N. Y. 618, 29 N. E. 1021, id., 56 Hun 288, 9 N. Y. Supp. 381. Encroachment on public highway outside of traveled track and use thereof by a private party for 10 years did not necessarily show abandonment of the highway; Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54, 47 N. W. 600.

Of Public Lands. Title from the state, under a patent, is not affected by the doctrine of abandonment, unless, in consequence, title is acquired by adverse possession; Kreamer v. Vonelda, 213 Pa. 74, 62 Atl. 518. The title once passed is never re-vested by abandonment; id., 24 Pa. Super. 347.

It has been held that the use of property for public purposes may be abandoned for so long a time as to prevent the assertion of a private proprietary interest as against an improving possessor; Collett v. Board of Com'rs, 119 Ind. 27, 21 N. E. 329, 4 L. R. A. 321. Failure to pay interest on school lands for 15 years with no assertion of ownership will prevent assertion of title as against subsequent purchaser from the state who has been in possession of property for 10 years; Richardson v. Doty, 25 Neb. 420, 41 N. W. 282.

Of Rights. The relinquishment of a right. It implies some act of relinquishment done by the owner without regard to any future possession by himself, or by any other person, but with an intention to abandon; 14 M. & W. 789; Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 395, 43 Am. Dec. 399; Dawson v. Daniel, 2 Flap. 309, Fed. Cas. No. 3,669. Mere non-user does not necessarily or usually constitute an abandonment; Emerson v. Wiley, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 310; Parkins v. Dunham, 3 Strobb. (S. C.) 224; Elliot v. Rhett, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 405, 57 Am. Dec. 750; Jewett v. Jewett, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 150; see Tud. Lead. Cas. 130; 2 Washb. R. P. 83. There must be actual relinquishment and intention to abandon; Log-Owners' Booming Co. v. Hubbell, 135 Mich. 65, 97 N. W. 157, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 573; Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 441; Eisele v. Oddie, 128 Fed. 941; Foster v. Hobson, 131 Ia. 58, 107 N. W. 1101; Carroll County Academy v. Academy Co., 104 Ky. 621, 47 S. W. 617; Watts v. Spencer, 51 Or. 262, 94 Pac. 39. Intention may be shown by inferential proof; Enno-Sander Mineral Water Co. v. Fishman, 127 Mo. App. 207, 104 S. W. 1156; United Shoe Mach. Co. v. Mach. Co., 197 Mass. 206, 83 N. E. 412. It cannot be inferred from non-user alone; Doty v. Gillett, 43 Mich. 203, 5 N. W. 89. Nor does it result from failure to take possession of land for a period less than would give title by adverse possession; Kreamer v. Vonelda, 24 Pa. Super. 347; from failure to pay taxes; id.; or from mere temporary absence; Hurt v. Hollingsworth, 100 U. S. 104, 25 L. Ed. 569. But failure to pay taxes or exercise rights of ownership for over 20 years, coupled with possession of and improvement by another under color of title is evidence of abandonment; Timber v. Desparois, 18 S. D. 587, 101 N. W. 879; or coupled with other acts showing intention not to repossess himself; Alamosa Creek Canal Co. v. Nelson, 42 Colo. 140, 93 Pac. 1112. For older cases see 5 L. R. A. 259, note.

Abandonment is properly confined to incorporeal hereditaments, as legal rights once vested must be divested according to law, though equitable rights may be abandoned; Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412; see Cringan v. Nicolson's Ex'rs, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 429; and an abandonment combined with sufficiently long possession by another party destroys the right of the original owner; Gregg v. Blackmore, 10 Watts (Pa.) 192;

Barker v. Salmon, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 32; Inhabitants of School Dist. No. 4 v. Benson, 31 Me. 381, 52 Am. Dec. 618. Fee simple title to real estate cannot be lost by abandonment; Barrett v. Coal Co., 70 Kan. 649, 70 Pac. 150; nor transferred by it; Sharkey v. Candiani, 48 Or. 112, 85 Pac. 219, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 791. But under Spanish Law it may be divested, although the question of fact is for the jury; Fine v. Public Schools, 30 Mo. 166.

There may be an abandonment of an easement; Pope v. Devereux, 5 Gray (Mass.) 409; Shelby v. State, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 165; Corning v. Gould, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 531; Crain v. Fox, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 184; 3 B. & C. 332; of a mill site; French v. Mfg. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 216; Farrar v. Cooper, 34 Me. 394; Taylor v. Hampton, 4 McCord (S. C.) 96, 17 Am. Dec. 710; 7 Bingh. 682; an application for land; Com. v. Rahm, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 378; of an improvement; Fisher v. Larick, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 319; of a trust fund; Breedlove v. Stump, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 258; of an invention or discovery; Wyeth v. Stone, 1 Sto. 280, Fed. Cas. No. 18,107; Mellus v. Silsbee, 4 Mas. 111, Fed. Cas. No. 9,404; property sunk in a steamboat and unclaimed; Creevy v. Breedlove, 12 La. An. 745; a mining claim; Davis v. Butler, 6 Cal. 510; Paine v. Griffiths, 86 Fed. 452, 30 C. C. A. 182; a right under a land warrant; Emery v. Spencer, 23 Pa. 271. An easement acquired by grant is not lost by non-user; Butterfield v. Reed, 160 Mass. 361, 35 N. E. 1128.

The burden of proof rests on the party claiming abandonment of an easement; Hennesy v. Murdock, 137 N. Y. 317, 33 N. E. 330.

The question of abandonment is one of fact for the jury; 2 Washb. R. P. 82; Wiggins v. McCleary, 49 N. Y. 346; Banks v. Banks, 77 N. C. 186; Sample v. Robb, 16 Pa. 320.

The effect of abandonment when acted upon by another party is to divest all the owner's rights; Davis v. Butler, 6 Cal. 510; McGoon v. Ankeny, 11 Ill. 558.

It was the ancient law that the owner could, by abandoning a slave or animal which was a cause of damage, relieve himself of liability, and there is a trace of the application of this principle to inanimate things; the new owner became liable, under the doctrine nova caput sequitur. The cause of offense was the slave, animal, or thing, and only as a means of getting at that was the liability of the owner considered; Dig. 9, 1, 1, sec. 12; Inst. 4, 8, sec. 5; Holmes, Com. L. 8.

Abandonment is to be distinguished from Dedication, Surrender, Waiver. See FINDER.

Consult 2 Washb. R. P. 56, 82, 85, 253. See also Curtis, Pat. § 381; Walk. Patents § 87; Ewell, Fict.; Thomp. Homest.; Dicey, Dom. 90. As to Abandonment of Patents, see PATENTS.

ABANDONMENT FOR TORTS. In Civil Law. The relinquishment of a slave or animal who had committed a trespass to the person injured, in discharge of the owner's liability for such trespass or injury. If this were done, the owner could not be held to any further responsibility. Just. Inst. 4, 8, 9. A similar right exists in Louisiana; Fitzgerald v. Ferguson, 11 La. An. 396.

ABANDUM or ABANDONUM. Anything sequestered, proscribed or abandoned. Cunningham.

ABARNARE (Lat.). To discover and disclose to a magistrate any secret crime. Leges Canuti, cap. 10.

ABATAMENTUM (Lat. abatare). An entry by interposition. Co. Litt. 277. An abatement. Yelv. 151.

ABATARE. To abate. Yelv. 151.

ABATE (Fr. abattre, L. Fr. abater). To throw down, to beat down, destroy, quash. 3 Shars. Bla. Com. 168; Case v. Humphrey, 6 Conn. 140. See ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL. In Chancery Practice. A suspension of all proceedings in a suit, from the want of proper parties capable of proceeding therein.

It differs from an abatement at law in this; that in the latter the action is entirely dead and cannot be revived; but in the former the right to proceed is merely suspended, and may be revived by a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of revivor; 3 Bla. Com. 301; Boynton v. Boynton, 21 N. H. 246; Sto. Eq. Pl. § 20 n. § 354; Ad. Eq. 403; Mitf. Eq. Pl., by Jeremy 57; Brooks v. Jones, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 244; Clarke v. Mathewson, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 164, 9 L. Ed. 1041; Kronenberger v. Heinemann, 104 Ill. App. 156; Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511, 9 N. W. 831; where interest is transmitted by act of law, as to personal representative or heir a simple bill of revivor may be used; Story, Eq. Pl. § 364; Feemster v. Markham, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 303, 19 Am. Dec. 131; Putnam v. Putnam, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 139; but where by virtue of act of party, as to devisee, an original bill in the nature of a bill of revivor must be used; Russell v. Craig, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 377; Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mas. 308, Fed. Cas. No. 17,944.

Generally speaking, if any property or right in litigation is transmitted to another, he is entitled to continue the suit, or at least have the benefit of it, if he be plaintiff; Talmage v. Pell, 9 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 410; or it may be continued against him, or at least perfected, if he be defendant; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 332, 442; Sedgwick v. Cleveland, 7 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 290; Sinclair v. Realty Co., 99 Md. 223, 57 Atl. 664. See PARTIES.

Death of a trustee does not abate a suit, but it must be suspended till a new one is appointed; Shaw v. R. Co., 5 Gray (Mass.) 162; and the further proceedings must be by supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, setting forth the proceedings and requiring an answer by the new trustee; Greenleaf v. Queen, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 138, 7 L.

Ed. 85. And where there was a failure to perform duties of a fiduciary nature, carrying compensation, the remedy therefor survived: Warren v. Shoe Co., 166 Mass. 97, 44 N. E. 112.

The death of the owner of the equity of redemption abates a foreclosure suit; Wright v. Phipps, 58 Fed. 552; but the executor of complainant in a bill to redeem was held not entitled to prosecute it; Smith v. Manning, 9 Mass. 422; though now the right of an administrator to redeem is given by statute to an administrator; and in a late case it was held that the right to redeem under a deed absolute on its face, but in fact a mortgage, is based on failure to perform a duty of a fiduciary character and the right of action survives; Clark v. Seagraves, 186 Mass. 430, 71 N. E. 813.

There are some cases, however, in which a court of equity will entertain application notwithstanding the suit is suspended: thus, proceedings may be had to preserve property in dispute; Washington Ins. Co. v. Slee, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 368; to pay money out of court where the right is clear; 6 Ves. 250; or upon consent of parties; 2 Ves. 399; to punish a party for breach of an injunction; Hawley v. Bennett, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 163; to enroll a decree; 2 Dick. 612; or to make an order for the delivery of deeds and writings; 1 Ves. 185. On a bill to set aside a deed, the heirs at law or devisees of a deceased complainant, and not the executor (unless title is vested in him under the will), should file the bill of revivor; Webb v. Janney, 9 App. D. C. 41. The death of the complainant in a bill of discovery after answer abates it and the suit cannot be revived; its purpose is accomplished; Horsburg v. Baker, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 232, 7 L. Ed. 125.

Although abatement in chancery suspends proceedings, it does not put an end to them; a party, therefore, imprisoned for contempt is not discharged, but must move that the complaint be revived in a specified time or the bill be dismissed and himself discharged; Dan. Ch. Pr. (6th Am. ed.) *1543. Nor will a receiver be discharged without special order of court; McCosker v. Brady, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 329. A suit in equity for relief against infringement of a patent does not abate by the death of the plaintiff; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Turrill, 110 U. S. 301, 4 Sup. Ct. 5, 28 L. Ed. 154; nor does a suit in Admiralty for prize money; Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dalb. (U. S.) 54, 1 L. Ed. 507. The assignee of the rights of a complainant may proceed by bill of revivor in the old suit or begin a new one; Botts v. Cozine, 1 Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 79.

In order to recover damages caused by injunction, it is unnecessary to revive a cause in which a preliminary injunction was issued, bond given, and judgment on demurrer for defendant who died; the remedy is by action on the bond; Grissler v. Stuyvesant, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 116, 3 Thomp. & C. 756.

All declinatory and dilatory pleas in equity are said to be pleas in abatement, or in the nature thereof; see Story, Eq. Pl. § 708; Bea. Eq. 55; Coop. Eq. Pl. 236. And such pleas must be pleaded before a plea in bar, if at all; Story, Eq. Pl. § 708; see Saltus v. Tobias, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 214; Kendrick v. Whitfield, 20 Ga. 379. See PLEA.

Of Freehold. The unlawful entry upon and keeping possession of an estate by a stranger, after the death of the ancestor and before the heir or devisee takes possession. It is a species of ouster by intervention between the ancestor or deviser and the heir or devisee, thus defeating the rightful possession of the latter; 3 Bla. Com. 167; Co. Litt. 277a.; Cruise, Dig. B. 1, 60.

By the ancient laws of Normandy, this term was used to signify the act of one who, having an apparent right of possession to an estate, took possession of it immediately after the death of the actual possessor, before the heir entered. Howard, Anciennes, Lois des Français, tome 1, p. 539.

Of Legacies. The reduction of a legacy, general or specific, on account of the insufficiency of the estate of the testator to pay his debts and legacies.

When the estate of a testator is insufficient to pay both debts and legacies, it is the rule that the general legacies must abate proportionally to an amount sufficient to pay the debts; Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 100; Appeal of Trustees of University of Pennsylvania, 97 Pa. 187. If the general legacies are exhausted before the debts are paid, then, and not till then, the specific legacies abate, and proportionally; 2 Bla. Com. 513 and note; Bacon, Abr. Leg. H.; 2 P. Wms. 383; 1 Ves. Sen. 564; Brant v. Brant, 40 Mo. 280; Armstrong's Appeal, 63 Pa. 312. See LEGACY.

In Revenue Law. The deduction from, or the refunding of, duties sometimes made at the custom house, on account of damages received by goods during importation or while in store. See R. S. § 2894.

Of Nuisances. The removal of a nuisance. 3 Bla. Com. 5; Poll. Torts 210. See NUISANCE.

Of Actions at Law. The overthrow of an action caused by the defendant pleading some matter of fact tending to impeach the correctness of the writ or declaration, which defeats the action for the present, but does not debar the plaintiff from recommencing it in a better way. Stephen, Pl. 47; Pepper, Pl. 15; Webb, Poll. Torts; 3 Bla. Com. 301; 1 Chit. Pl. (6th Lond. ed.) 446; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 65.

It has been applied rather inappropriately as a generic term to all pleas of a dilatory nature; whereas the word dilatory would seem to be the more proper generic term, and the word abatement applicable to a certain portion of dilatory pleas;

Com. Dig. Abt. B; 1 Chit. Pl. 440 (6th Lond. ed.); Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 65. In this general sense it has been used to include pleas to the jurisdiction of the court. This usage, being technically inaccurate, results in some confusion in the use of the word by courts with respect to such pleas; Frohlich v. Glass Co., 144 Mich. 278, 107 N. W. 889; Bank of Valley v. Gettinger, 3 W. Va. 309; and by some approved digests and text writers. The distinction is however not lost sight of; Bishop v. Camp, 39 Fla. 517, 22 South. 735; Lewis v. Schwinn, 71 Ill. App. 265. See JURISDICTION; PLEA.

Matter in abatement dehors the record is properly presented by plea in abatement; Schofield v. Palmer, 134 Fed. 753.

AS TO THE PERSON OF THE PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT. It may be pleaded, as to the plaintiff, that there never was such a person in rerum natura; 1 Chit. Pl. (6th Lond. ed.) 448; Guild v. Richardson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 370; Campbell v. Galbreath, 5 Watts (Pa.) 423; Doe v. Penfield, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 308; Bolinger v. Fowler, 14 Ark. 27; Boston Type & Stereotype Foundry v. Spooner, 5 Vt. 93 (except in ejectment; Doe v. Penfield, 19 Johns. [N. Y.] 308); and by one of two or more defendants as to one or more of his co-defendants; Archb. C. P. 312. That one of the plaintiffs is a fictitious person, to defeat the action as to all; Com. Dig. Abt. E, 16; 1 Chit. Pl. 448; Archb. C. P. 304. This would also be a good plea in bar; 1 B. & P. 44. That the nominal plaintiff in the action of ejectment is fictitious, is not pleadable in any manner; 4 M. & S. 301; Jones v. Gardner, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 269. A defendant cannot plead matter which affects his co-defendant alone; Bonzey v. Redman, 40 Me. 336; Harker v. Brink, 24 N. J. Law, 333; Ingraham v. Olcock, 14 N. H. 243; Shannon v. Comstock, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 457, 34 Am. Dec. 262.

An action on contract by a copartnership, the avails of which have been assigned during its pendency to a third person, does not abate by death of one partner, but may be prosecuted to judgment without change on the record; Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Carnahan, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 97. But when the suit involves an adjustment of equities between former partners and new ones, it should be revived as against the representatives of a new partner who died pendente lite; Hausling v. Rheinfrank, 103 App. Div. 517, 93 N. Y. Supp. 121.

Certain legal disabilities are pleadable in abatement, such as outlawry; Bac. Abr. Abt. B; Co. Litt. 128 a; attainder of treason or felony; 3 Bla. Com. 301; Com. Dig. Abt. E, 3; also præmunire and excommunication; 3 Bla. Com. 301; Com. Dig. Abt. E, 5. The law in reference to these disabilities can be of no practical importance in the United States; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 32.

Alienage. That the plaintiff is an alien friend is pleadable only in some cases, where, for instance, he sues for property which he is incapacitated from holding or acquiring; Co. Litt. 129 b; Stramburg v. Heckman, 44 N. C. 250. By the common law, although he could not inherit, yet he might acquire by purchase, and hold as against all but the sovereign. Accordingly he has been allowed in this country to sue upon a title by grant or devise; Sheaffe v. O'Neil, 1 Mass. 256; Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 603, 3 L. Ed. 453; but see Siemssen v. Bofer, 6 Cal. 250; Wacker v. Wacker, 26 Mo. 426. The early English authority upon this point was otherwise; Bac. Abr. Abt. B, 3, Aliens D; Co. Litt. 129 b. He is in general able to maintain all actions relating to personal chattels or personal injuries; 3 Bla. Com. 384; Cowp. 161; Bac. Abr. Aliens D; 2 Kent 34; Co. Litt. 129 b. But an alien enemy can maintain no action except by license or permission of the government; Bac. Abr. Abt. B, 3, Aliens D; 46; 1 Ld. Raym. 282; 6 Term 53, 49; Russel v. Skipwith, 6 Binn (Pa.) 241; Sewall v. Lee, 9 Mass. 363; 3 M. & S. 533; Hamersley v. Lambert, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 508; Russel v. Skipwith, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 310. This will be implied from the alien being suffered to remain, or to come to the country, after the commencement of hostilities without being ordered away by the executive; Clarke v. Morey, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 69. See 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 319. But the disability occurring after suit brought simply suspends the right of action; Hutchinson v. Brock, 11 Mass. 119. The better opinion seems to be that an alien enemy cannot sue as administrator; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 44. That both parties were aliens is no ground for abatement of a suit on a contract made in a foreign country; Rea v. Hayden, 3 Mass. 24. See also Barrell v. Benjamin, 15 Mass. 354; Roberts v. Knights, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 449.

Corporations. A plea in abatement is the proper manner of contesting the existence of an alleged corporation plaintiff; Methodist E. Church v. Wood, Wright (Ohio) 12; Proprietors of Kennebeck Purchase v. Call, 1 Mass. 485; President, etc., Hanover Sav. Fund Soc. v. Suter, 1 Md. 502; Rheem v. Wheel Co., 33 Pa. 356; Pitman v. Perkins, 28 N. H. 93; Yeaton v. Lynn, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 231, 8 L. Ed. 105. To a suit brought in the name of the "Judges of the County Court," after such court has been abolished, the defendant may plead in abatement that there are no such judges; Judges of Fairfield County v. Phillips, 2 Bay (S. C.) 519.

Where a general incorporation law provides for winding up the affairs of corporations by trustees, after dissolution, pending suits do not thereupon abate; Scott v. Oil Co., 142 Fed. 287; Gordon v. Pub. Co., 66 N. Y. Supp. 828; Platt v. Ashman, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 230; until the expiration of the period allowed for winding up; Dundee Mortg. & Trust Inv. Co. v. Hughes, 77 Fed. 855; or, if abated, they may be revived against the trustees; Shayne v. Pub. Co., 168 N. Y. 70, 61 N. E. 115, 55 L. R. A. 777, 85 Am. St. Rep. 654. The annulment of a charter for non-payment of taxes will not abate a suit properly brought and previously prosecuted to judgment before a referee; Pyro-Gravure Co. v. Staber, 30 Misc. 658, 64 N. Y. Supp. 520.

Public Officers. Where a commission created by state law is abolished during the pendency of a suit against it, the officers who are by law authorized to wind up its business are proper parties against whom there may be proceedings for revival; Hemingway v. Stansell, 106 U. S. 399, 1 Sup. Ct. 473, 27 L. Ed. 245. A suit against a public officer in his official capacity does not as a general rule abate by reason of a change in the incumbent of the office; Murphy v. Utter, 186 U. S. 95, 22 Sup. Ct. 776, 46 L. Ed. 1070; Sheehan v. Osborn, 138 Cal. 512, 71 Pac. 622; Nance v. People, 25 Colo. 252, 54 Pac. 631; People v. Coleman, 99 App. Div. 88, 91 N. Y. Supp. 432; nor does a suit by a sheriff for conversion of goods levied by him; Dickinson v. Oliver, 112 App. Div. 806, 99 N. Y. Supp. 432; but a suit against the Secretary of the Interior to compel the issue of patents for public lands, does abate on his resignation; Warner Valley Stock Co. v. Smith, 165 U. S. 28, 17 Sup. Ct. 225, 41 L. Ed. 621; and so does a suit against a town treasurer if his successor is not made a party in due time; Saunders v. Pendleton, 19 R. I. 659, 36 Atl. 425.

A suit against a receiver does not abate by reason of his discharge; Baer v. McCullough, 176 N. Y. 97, 68 N. E. 129; Dougherty v. King, 165 N. Y. 657, 59 N. E. 1121; or his death; Pickett v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 60 S. C. 477, 38 S. E. 160; nor of an order to return the property to the corporation owner; Cowen v. Merriman, 17 App. D. C. 186.

When, pending suit by a guardian, the heir comes of age, there is no abatement and no need of revival; the guardian may be discharged; Shattuck v. Wolf, 72 Kan. 366, 83 Pac. 1093.

Coverture of the plaintiff is pleadable in abatement; Com. Dig. Abt. E, 6; Bac. Abr. Abt. G; Co. Litt. 132; 3 Term 631; 1 Chit. Pl. 439; Hayden v. Attleborough, 7 Gray (Mass.) 338; though occurring after suit brought; 3 Bla. Com. 316; Bac. Abr. Abt. 9; Wilson v. Hamilton, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 238; *Newell v. Y.) 273; but not after plea in bar, unless the marriage arose after the plea in bar; Northum v. Kellogg, 15 Conn. 569; but in that case the defendant must not suffer a continuance to intervene between the happening of this new matter, or its coming to his knowledge, and his pleading it; McCoul v. Lekamp, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 111, 4 L. Ed. 197; Swan v. Wilkinson, 14 Mass. 295; Templeton v. Clary, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 288; Perry v. Boileau, 10 S. &

An action for damages for assault by a female plaintiff does not abate on her marriage; Stevens v. Friedman, 58 W. Va. 78, 51 S. E. 132. Where she sues, not having any interest, the defence is one of substance, and may be pleaded in bar, by demurrer, or on the general issue; 4 Term 361; 1 H. Bla. 108; Cro. Jac. 644, whether she sues jointly or alone. So also where coverture avoids the contract or instrument, it is matter in bar; Steer v. Steer, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 379.

Where a feme covert is sued without her husband for a cause of action that would survive against her, as upon a contract made before, or a tort committed after, marriage, the coverture is pleadable in abatement; 3 Term 626; and not otherwise; 9 M. & W. 299; Com. Dig. Abt. F, 2. If the marriage takes place pending the action, it cannot be pleaded; 2 Ld. Raym. 1525; Crockett v. Ross, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 445; City Council v. Van Roven, 2 McCord (S. C.) 469. It must be pleaded by the feme in person; 2 Saund. 209 b. Any thing which suspends the coverture suspends also the right to plead it; Com. Dig. Abt. F, 2, § 3; Co. Litt. 132 b; 1 B. & P. 358; Gregory v. Paul, 15 Mass. 31. Weller*, 30 Fla. 210, 11 South. 786.

Death of the plaintiff before purchase of the writ may be pleaded in abatement; 1 Archb. C. P. 304; Com. Dig. Abt. E, 17; Camden v. Robertson, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 507; Hurst v. Fisher, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 438; Humphreys v. Irvine, 6 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 205; Alexander v. Davidson, 2 McMul. (S. C.) 49. So may the death of a sole plaintiff who dies pending his suit at common law; *Bac. Abr. (Me.) 127. Otherwise now by statute, in most cases, in most if not all the states, and in England since 1852. Under some statutes the right to revive depends upon the exercise of a sound discretion by the court; Hayden v. Huff, 62 Neb. 375, 87 N. W. 184; Beach v. Reynolds, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 506.

The right to revive an action is solely a statutory right; Ashby v. Harrison's Committee, 1 Pat. & H. (Va.) 1. It is a question of right, not of procedure, and is governed by the lex fori; Martin's Adm'r v. R. Co., 151 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 533, 38 L. Ed. 311; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Joy, 173 U. 19 Sup. Ct. 387, 43 L. Ed. 677; Martin v. R. Co., 142 Fed. 650, 73 C. C. A. 646, 6 Ann. Cas. 582; Sanders' Adm'r v. R. Co., 111 Fed. 708, 49 C. C. A. 565; *Richardson v. R. It was held that the death of the sole complainant did not abate the suit if the cause of action survives; Keep v. Crawford, 92 Ill. App. 587; but, even where there is a statutory provision for revival all proceedings are suspended until it is complied with; King v. Mitchell, 83 Ill. App. 632, judgment affirmed 187 Ill. 452, 58 N. E. 310; Street v. Smith, 75 Neb. 434, 106 N. W. 472. Death of either party abates a divorce case; Bell v. Bell, 181 U. S. 175, 21 Sup. Ct. 551, 45 L. Ed. 804; McCurley v. McCurley, 60 Md. 189, 45 Am. Rep. 717; In re Crandall, 196 N. Y. 127, 89 N. E. 578, 134 Am. St. Rep. 830, 17 Ann. Cas. 874; L. R. 11 P. Div. 103. The personal representatives are usually authorized to act in such cases. The personal representatives of a deceased plaintiff are the proper parties to revive in replevin; Rexroad v. Johnson, 4 Kan. App. 333, 45 Pac. 1008; a suit to redeem property from a tax sale; Clark v. Lancy, 178 Mass. 460, 59 N. E. 1034; foreclosure of mortgage; Van Brocklin v. Van Brocklin, 17 App. Div. 226, 45 N. Y. Supp. 541 (but see Stancill v. Spain, 133 N. C. 76, 45 S. E. 466, where heirs at law or devisees were held necessary parties); on a delivery bond by a deputy sheriff (he having no official successor in office); Tucker v. Potter, 22 R. I. 4, 45 Atl. 741; ejectment, when the land was devised to the executor in trust to sell and dispose of the proceeds; Bell's Adm'r v. Humphrey, 8 W. Va. 1; an action on a sick benefit policy; Columbian Relief Fund Ass'n v. Walker, 26 Ind. App. 25, 59 N. E. 36; an action for personal injuries, commenced by the deceased, though assigned by him; McCafferty v. R. Co., 193 Pa. 339, 44 Atl. 435, 74 Am. St. Rep. 864, 6 Ann. Cas. 384; an action for rescission of contract to cut and remove timber; Isham v. Stave Co., 25 Oh. Cir. Ct. 167.

The heir at law or devisee is the proper party to revive in an action for injury to real estate; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Smith, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 351, 80 S. W. 247.

If the cause of action is such that the right dies with the person, the suit still abates. By statute 8 & 9 Wm. IV. ch. 2, sect. 7, which is understood to enact the common-law rule, where the form of action is such that the death of one of several plaintiffs will not change the plea, the action does not abate by the death of any of the plaintiffs pending the suit.

The death of both parties does not abate an action under a statute providing that no action shall abate if the cause of action survives; McNulta v. Huntington, 62 App. Div. 257, 70 N. Y. Supp. 897; or under one providing that actions for injury to property shall survive; Northern Trust Co. v. Palmer, 171 Ill. 383, 49 N. E. 553, in cases meeting those conditions respectively.

A Code provision forbidding dismissal of a cause by plaintiff without consent of defendant, does not affect the right of revival by personal representatives of plaintiff after his death; Kinzie v. Riely's Ex'r, 100 Va. 709, 42 S. E. 872.

In some cases where an action is saved by statute from abatement on death of plaintiff, the court may permit the continuance of the action by his successor in interest; Overall v. Traction Co., 112 Mo. App. 224, 90 S. W. 402.

The death of the lessor in ejectment never abates the suit; Frier v. Jackson, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 495; Ex parte Swan, 23 Ala. 193; Thomas v. Kelly, 35 N. C. 43; Hatfield v. Bushnell, 1 Blatchf. 393, Fed. Cas. No. 6,211; his heirs are properly substituted on defendant's petition; Ballantine v. Negley, 158 Pa. 475, 27 Atl. 1051.

In Wasserman v. United States, 161 Fed. 722, 88 C. C. A. 582, it was held that the fine of one found guilty of contempt, who had sued out a writ of error, but died before the submission of the case to the higher court, should be considered as a charge against the estate, and that the action did not abate by death.

On death of administrator bringing suit it may be revived by his administrator or by administrator de bonis non; Wood v. Tomlin, 92 Tenn. 514, 22 S. W. 206. In Missouri an action for personal injuries cannot be revived by the administrator after plaintiff's death; Davis v. Morgan, 97 Mo. 79, 10 S. W. 881; nor is such action impliedly saved in West Virginia by the statute giving a right of action after death to the personal representatives; Martin v. R. Co., 151 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 533, 38 L. Ed. 311. In New York a statutory cause of action for death by negligence abates by the death of the wrongdoer; Hegerich v. Keddle, 99 N. Y. 258, 1 N. E. 787, 52 Am. Rep. 25. In Maryland an action by husband to recover damages for the killing of his wife, abates on his death; Harvey v. R. Co., 70 Md. 319, 17 Atl. 88; but in Texas a suit by a husband for personal injury to his wife may be continued by her after his death; Mexican Cent. Ry. Co. v. Goodman, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 109, 48 S. W. 778; and the remedy of a son for his own suffering caused by mutilation of his father's body, is by new action, and not by substitution of himself as plaintiff after the death of his mother in a suit begun by her for her own suffering; Jones v. Miller, 35 Wash. 499, 77 Pac. 811. On the death of a father suing for an injury causing the death of his daughter, her administratrix may revive; Meekin v. R. Co., 164 N. Y. 145, 58 N. E. 50, 51 L. R. A. 235, 79 Am. St. Rep. 635.

The death of a party pending an audit causes a mistrial and new parties must be brought in and the case tried de novo; Carroll v. Barber, 119 Ga. 856, 47 S. E. 181.

The death of plaintiff after judgment and pending motion for a new trial, does not abate the suit; Fowden v. S. S. Co., 149 Cal. 151, 86 Pac. 178; and a decree in equity in favor of husband and wife, after the death of the husband survives to the wife, though she was not a necessary party; Edgerton v. Muse, Dud. Eq. (S. C.) 179. Where a judgment on a cause of action which does not survive was recovered against a decedent and another, it abates as to the former; Hammond v. Hoffman, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 92.

On the death of one of three partners plaintiff the remaining two may prosecute to final judgment in their own names; Davis v. Davis, 93 Ala. 173, 9 South. 736.

An action by two tenants in common, after the death of one who bequeathed to the survivor his interest in a pending action and made him executor, may be continued by him for damages sustained by both; McPhillips v. Fitzgerald, 177 N. Y. 543, 69 N. E. 1126. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 956, providing that an action may be continued by a surviving plaintiff against a surviving defendant without abatement, where the cause of action survives to the surviving plaintiff or against the surviving defendant, an administrator can neither continue nor defend the action; Fox v. Mackay, 1 Alaska 329.

The death of sole defendant pending an action abates it; Bac. Abr. Abt. F; anonymous, 2 N. C. 500; McKee v. Straub, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 1; Carter v. Carr, 1 Gilm. (Va.) 145; Farmer v. Frey, 4 McCord (S. C.) 160; Mackey v. Thomas, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 530, 5 L. Ed. 515; Nutz v. Reutter, 1 Watts (Pa.) 229; Mellen v. Baldwin, 4 Mass. 480; Merritt v. Lumbert, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 129; Petts v. Ison, 11 Ga. 151, 56 Am. Dec. 419; but not after a finding for the plaintiff; Wilkins v. Wainwright, 173 Mass. 212, 53 N. E. 397; or because of the death of a party after verdict; Laidley v. Jasper, 49 W. Va. 526, 39 S. E. 169; but the death of defendant after decision, but before judgment, abates the suit; Fox v. Hopkinson, 19 R. I. 704, 36 Atl. 824. After abatement by reason of the death of defendant, the duty of instituting proceedings for revival rests upon the plaintiff and not on the other defendants; Wilkinson v. Vordermark, 32 Ind. App. 633, 70 N. E. 538; Jameson v. Bartlett, 63 Neb. 638, 88 N. W. 860. When the defendant dies before service, no jurisdiction has attached and the executor cannot be made a party; Connaway v. Overton, 98 Fed. 574; Crowds' Adm'r v. Harrison, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 58.

An action against a surgeon for malpractice abates with the death of the defendant, whatever the form of the action; Boor v. Lowrey, 103 Ind. 468, 3 N. E. 151, 53 Am. Rep. 519.

But where one of several co-defendants dies pending the action, his death is in general no cause of abatement, even by common law; Cro. Car. 426; Bac. Abr. Abt. F; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 93; Tucker v. Utley, 168 Mass. 415, 47 N. E. 198. If the cause of action is such as would survive against the survivor or survivors, the plaintiff may proceed by suggesting the death upon the record; Torry v. Robertson, 24 Miss. 192; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 93. Where one of several plaintiffs or defendants in error dies, the suit does not abate or require a revival in the Supreme Court; Prior v. Kiso, 96 Mo. 316, 9 S. W. 898. The inconvenience of abatement by death of parties was remedied by 17 Car. II, ch. 8, and 8 & 9 Wm. III. ch. 2, ss. 6, 7. In the U. S., on the death of a sole defendant, his personal representatives may be substituted if the action could have been originally prosecuted against them; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 95. The common law rule is that the right of action against a tort-feasor dies with him; Jones v. Barmm, 217 Ill. 381, 75 N. E. 505; Hedekin v. Gillespie, 33 Ind. App. 650, 72 N. E. 143; Stratton's Independence v. Dines, 135 Fed. 449, 68 C. C. A. 161; and such death should be pleaded in abatement; O'Conner v. Corbitt, 3 Cal. 370. Many exceptions to this rule exists by statute. When a party has been so long dead as to require consent to revive, which is refused, it abates; New Hampshire Banking Co. v. Ball, 57 Kan. 812, 48 Pac. 137.

As to the effect of death of parties on suit, see 5 L. Ed. 256, note. And as to the survival of personal actions after the death of the plaintiff, see ACTIO PERSONALIS MORITUR CUM PERSONA. As to the effect of the death of a party in suits for divorce, see that title.

Infancy is pleadable in abatement to the person of the plaintiff, unless the infant appear by guardian or prochein ami; Co. Litt. 135 b; 2 Saund. 117; 3 Bla. Com. 301; Schemerhorn v. Jenkins, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 373; Hinman v. Taylor, 2 Conn. 357; Blood v. Harrington, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 552. He cannot appear by attorney, since he cannot make a power of attorney; 3 Saund. 212; Young v. Young, 3 N. H. 345; Blood v. Harrington, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 552; Smith v. Van Houten, 9 N. J. L. 381; Schemerhorn v. Jenkins, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 373. The death of the next friend bringing suit for minors does not abate suit, nor does the attainment of majority by minors; Tucker v. Wilson, 68 Miss. 693, 9 South. 898. Where an infant sues as co-executor with an adult, both may appear by attorney, for, the suit being brought in autre droit, the personal rights of the infant are not affected, and therefore the adult is permitted to appoint an attorney for both; 3 Saund. 212; Cro. Eliz. 542. At common law, judgment obtained for or against an infant plaintiff who appears by attorney, no plea being interposed, may be reversed by writ of error; 1 Rolle, Abr. 287; Cro. Jac. 441. By statute, however, such judgment is valid, if for the infant; 3 Saund. 212 (n. 5). A suit by a guardian to compel an accounting by a guardian ad litem does not abate by reason of the death of the guardian or the majority of the ward; Smith v. Mingey, 72 App. Div. 103, 76 N. Y. Supp. 194, order affirmed 172 N. Y. 650, 65 N. E. 1122.

Imprisonment. A sentence to imprisonment in New York, either of plaintiff or defendant, abates the action by statute; Graham v. Adams, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 408; O'Brien v. Hagan, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 664; but see Davis v. Duffie, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 617.

Lunacy. A lunatic may appear by attorney, and the court will on motion appoint an attorney for him; Faulkner v. McClure, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 134. But a suit brought by a lunatic under guardianship shall abate; Collard v. Crane, Brayt. (Vt.) 18; but it is held that a suit brought by the committee of an insane person may be revived by the administrator of the latter after his death; Straight v. Ice, 56 W. Va. 60, 48 S. E. 837. Quere whether suit against committee of an insane person may be revived against the administrators of such person; Paradise's Adm'rs v. Cole, 6 Munf. (Va.) 218.

Mandamus, when brought against a public officer, is a personal action which abates at his death or retirement from office, and his successor cannot be substituted without statutory authority; U. S. v. Butterworth, 169 U. S. 600, 18 Sup. Ct. 441, 42 L. Ed. 873, citing the prior cases.

Misjoinder. The joinder of improper plaintiffs may be pleaded in abatement; Archb. C. Pl. 304; 1 Chit. Pl. 8. Advantage may also be taken, if the misjoinder appear on record, by demurrer in arrest of judgment, or by writ of error. If it does not appear in the pleadings, it would be ground of non-suit on the trial; 1 Chit. Pl. 66. Misjoinder of defendants in a personal action is not subject of a plea in abatement; Wooten & Co. v. Nall, 18 Ga. 609; Archb. C. Pl. 68, 310; Durgin v. Smith, 115 Mich. 239, 73 N. W. 361; otherwise where there is found to be no joint liability; Wright v. Reinelt, 118 Mich. 638, 77 N. W. 246. When an action is thus brought against two upon a contract made by one, it is a good ground of defence under the general issue; Clayt. 114; Anderson v. Henshaw, 2 Day (Conn.) 272; Dib- lee v. Best, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 104; 1 Esp. 363; for in such case the proof disproves the declaration. If several are sued for a tort committed by one, such misjoinder is no ground of objection in any manner, as of co-defendants in actions ex delicto, some may be convicted and others acquitted; 1 Saund. 291. In a real action against several persons, they may plead several tenancy; that is, that they hold in severalty, not jointly; Com. Dig. Abt. F, 12; or one of them may take the entire tenancy on himself, and pray judgment of the writ; Com. Dig. Abt. F, 13. Misjoinder of action is waived unless taken before defence; Organ v. R. Co., 51 Ark. 235, 11 S. W. 96. Where a husband is improperly joined in an action concerning his wife's separate interest in land, the action should be abated; West v. Adams (Va.) 27 S. E. 496.

Misnomer of plaintiff, where the misnomer appears in the declaration, must be pleaded in abatement; Jewett v. Burroughs, 15 Mass. 469; Porter v. Cresson, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 257; State v. Dines, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 512; Barnes v. Perine, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 202; Proprietors of Sunapee v. Eastman, 32 N. H. 470; American Bank v. Doolittle, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 123; Trull v. Howland, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 109, 57 Am. Dec. 82; and he must disclose his true name and thereby enable the plaintiff to amend his writ; Com. v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 151; McCrory v. Anderson, 103 Ind. 12, 2 N. E. 211; and where parties were improperly joined in suit on covenants of indemnity and the only relief was in equity, under the statute, the action was abated as to them only; McIlvane v. Lumber Co., 105 Va. 613, 54 S. E. 473. It is a good plea in abatement that the party sues by his surname only; Chappell v. Proctor, Harp. (S. C.) 49; Labat v. Ellis, 1 N. C. 172; Seely v. Boon, 1 N. J. L. 138. A mistake in the Christian name is ground for abatement; Moss v. Flint, 13 Ill. 570; or where the initials merely are used; Smith v. Barrett, Morris (Ia.) 492; City of Menominee v. Lumber Co., 119 Mich. 196, 77 N. W. 704. In England the effect of pleas in abatement of misnomer has been diminished by statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV. ch. 42, s. 11, which allows an amendment at the cost of the plaintiff. The rule embodied in the English statute prevails in this country.

If the defendant is sued or declared against by a wrong name, he may plead the mistake in abatement; 3 Bla. Com. 302; 3 East 167; Bac. Abr. D; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 12 Bush (Ky.) 131; and in abatement only, Thompson v. Elliott, 5 Mo. 118; Salisbury v. Gillett, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 290; Melvin v. Clark, 45 Ala. 285; Carpenter v. State, 8 Mo. 291; Com. v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 151; but one defendant cannot plead the misnomer of another, Com. Dig. Abt. F, 18; Archb. C. P. 312; 1 Nev. & P. 26. But if having been sued by the wrong name, he is served with process, and fails to plead the misnomer in abatement, he will be bound by the judgment; Bloomfield R. Co. v. Burrell, 82 Ind. 83. And a corporation setting up a misnomer in its answer, but failing to state its true name, will be bound by a judgment against it in the name by which it was sued; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 12 Bush (Ky.) 131.

The omission of the initial letter between the Christian and surname of the party is not a misnomer or variance; Franklin v. Talmadge, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 84. Since oyer of the writ has been prohibited, the misnomer must appear in the declaration; Willard v. Missani, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 37. Misnomer of defendant was never pleadable in any other manner than in abatement; Thompson v. Elliott, 5 Mo. 118; Salisbury v. Gillett, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 290; Melvin v. Clark, 45 Ala. 285; Carpenter v. State, 8 Mo. 291; Com. v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 151. In England this plea has been abolished; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. ch. 42, s. 11. And in the states, generally, the plaintiff is allowed to amend a misnomer. The misnomer of one of two defendants, as to his Christian name, if material at all when sued as a firm, must be taken advantage of by plea in abatement; Whittier v. Gould, 8 Watts (Pa.) 485.

In criminal practice the usual pleas in abatement are for misnomer. If the indictment assigns to the defendant no Christian name, or a wrong one, no surname, or a wrong one, he can only object to this matter by a plea in abatement; 2 Gabb. Cr. L. 327. As to the evidence necessary in such case, see 1 M. & S. 453; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 221.

Non-joinder. If one of several joint tenants sue, Co. Litt. 180 b; Bacon, Abr. Joint Tenants, K; 1 B. & P. 73; one of several joint contractors, in an action ex contractu, Archb. C. P. 48, 53; one of several partners, Puschel v. Hoover, 16 Ill. 340; Bellas v. Fagely, 19 Pa. 273; one of several joint executors who have proved the will, or even if they have not proved the will; Newton v. Cocke, 10 Ark. 169; 1 Chit. Pl. 12, 13; one of several joint administrators; id. 13; the defendant may plead the non-joinder in abatement; Com. Dig. Abt. E; 1 Chit. Pl. 12. The omission of one or more of the owners of the property in an action ex delicto is pleaded in abatement; Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388; Weare v. Burge, 32 N. C. 169; Morley v. French, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 130; Reading R. R. v. Boyer, 13 Pa. 497; Edwards v. Hill, 11 Ill. 22. Dormant partners may be omitted in suits on contracts to which they are not privy; Clark v. Miller, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 628; Wilson v. Wallace, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 55; Lord v. Baldwin, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 352; Clarkson v. Carter, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 85. A non-joinder may also be taken advantage of in actions ex contractu, at the trial, under the general issue, by demurrer, or in arrest of judgment, if it appears on the face of the pleadings; Armine v. Spencer, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 409.

Non-joinder of a person as defendant who is jointly interested in the contract upon which the action is brought can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement; 5 Term 651; 3 Campb. 50; Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227; Hine v. Houston, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 161; Johnson v. Ransom, 24 Conn. 531; Potter v. McCoy, 26 Pa. 458; Gove v. Lawrence, 24 N. H. 128; Merrick v. Bank, 8 Gill (Md.) 59; Henderson v. Hammond, 19 Ala. 340; Mershon v. Hobensack, 22 N. J. L. 372; Com. v. Davis, 9 B. Monr. (Ky.) 129; Beasley v. Allan, 23 Ga. 600; Prunty v. Mitchell, 76 Va. 169; unless the mistake appear from the plaintiff's own pleadings, when it may be taken advantage of by demurrer or in arrest of judgment; 1 Saund. 271; Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227. Non-joinder of a co-tenant may be pleaded when the suit respects the land held in common; Southard v. Hill, 44 Me. 92, 69 Am. Dec. 85; State v. Townsend, 2 Harring. (Del.) 277. When the contract is several as well as joint, the plaintiff is at liberty to proceed against the parties separately or jointly; and where one member of a firm is sued separately on an endorsement, the liability being joint and several, he may have the other partners made parties but cannot abate the suit for their non-joinder; Jameson v. Smith, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 90, 46 S. W. 864. In actions of tort the plaintiff may join the parties concerned in the tort, or not, at his election; 1 Saund. 291; 3 B. & P. 54; Gould, Pl. ch. 2, § 118. The non-joinder of any of the wrongdoers is no defence in any form of action; Buddington v. Shearer, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 427.

When husband and wife should be sued jointly, and one is sued alone, the non-joinder may be pleaded in abatement; Archb. C. P. 309. Non-joinder of co-executors or co-administrators may be pleaded in abatement; Com. Dig. Abt. F. The form of action is of no account where the action is substantially founded in contract; 6 Term 369. The law under this head has in a great measure become obsolete in many of the States, by statutory provisions making contracts which by the common law were joint, both joint and several.

Pendency of another action must be pleaded in abatement and not in bar; Mattel v. Conant, 156 Mass. 418, 31 N. E. 487; Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Coleman, 88 Ga. 294, 14 S. E. 382; Danforth v. R. Co., 93 Ala. 614, 11 South. 60; and the judgment of the court below thereon is not subject to review; Stephens v. Bank, 111 U. S. 197, 4 Sup. Ct. 336, 28 L. Ed. 399. But where two or more tribunals have concurrent jurisdiction on the same subject-matter between the same parties, a suit commenced in any one of them is a bar to an action for the same cause in any other; Shelby v. Bacon, 10 How. (U. S.) 56, 13 L. Ed. 326. The rule in equity is analogous to the rule at law; Insurance Co. v. Brune, 96 U. S. 588, 24 L. Ed. 737; but it is no ground for abatement of an action at law, that a suit in equity is pending between the same parties for the same money where the result of the action at law may be required to perfect the decree in equity; Kitredge v. Race, 92 U. S. 116, 23 L. Ed. 488. Prior pendency of an action unless both are in the same jurisdiction is, not cause for abatement; O'Reilly v. R. Co., 16 R. I. 388, 17 Atl. 171, 906, 19 Atl. 244, 5 L. R. A. 364, 6 L. R. A. 719; Stanton v. Embry, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983. It must be the same cause, founded on the same facts, between the same parties, for the same rights and the same relief; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 679, 20 L. Ed. 666; Marchand v. Frellsen, 105 U. S. 423, 26 L. Ed. 1057; Spencer v. Johnston, 58 Neb. 44, 78 N. W. 482; Kansas City S. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 106 La. 583, 31 South. 131; Richardson v. Opelt, 60 Neb. 180, 82 N. W. 377. Pendency of suit in a state court is no ground for a plea in abatement to a suit upon same cause in a Federal court; Wilcox & Gibbs Guano Co. v. Ins. Co., 61 Fed. 199; Piquignot v. R. Co., 16 How. (U. S.) 104, 14 L. Ed. 863; and see Gordon v. Gilfoil, 99 U. S. 168, 25 L. Ed. 383; but see Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 136, 10 L. Ed. 95; Hunt v. Cotton Exchange, 205 U. S. 322, 27 Sup. Ct. 529, 51 L. Ed. 821; Barnsdall v. Waltemeyer, 142 Fed. 415, 73 C. C. A. 515; Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288; Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Morris, 132 Fed. 945, 66 C. C. A. 55, 67 L. R. A. 761; City of Mankato v. Paving Co., 142 Fed. 329, 73 C. C. A. 439; Gamble v. City of San Diego, 79 Fed. 487; but the latter court will stay proceedings until the other suit is determined; Zimmerman v. So Relle, 80 Fed. 417, 25 C. C. A. 518; Bunker Hill & S. Mining & C. Co. v. Mining Co., 109 Fed. 504, 47 C. C. A. 200; or compel an election; Insurance Co. v. Brune, 96 U. S. 588, 24 L. Ed. 737. Pendency of prior suit in one state cannot be pleaded in abatement of suit for same cause and between same parties in another state; Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Earl, 56 Minn. 390, 57 N. W. 938; Renner v. Marshall, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 215, 4 L. Ed. 74; nor is a libel of a vessel, under the Chinese Exclusion Act, for smuggling opium, barred by a prior libel for similar offenses in another Federal Court; The Haytian Republic, 154 U. S. 118, 14 Sup. Ct. 992, 38 L. Ed. 930. Pendency of a suit in a foreign country between the same parties and for same cause would not bar or abate an action; Insurance Co. v. Brune, 96 U. S. 588, 24 L. Ed. 737; Stanton v. Embry, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983, 42 L. R. A. 449, note; Crossman v. Rubber Co., 60 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 68, 16 N. Y. Supp. 609; Harvey v. R. Co., 50 Minn. 405, 52 N. W. 905, 17 L. R. A. 84; North British Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Bank, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 22 S. W. 992. A good answer to plea in abatement of pendency of prior suit, is that such action has been dismissed since trial of second action began; Moore v. Hopkins, 83 Cal. 270, 23 Pac. 318, 17 Am. St. Rep. 248; Nichols v. Clark, 45 Minn. 102, 47 N. W. 462; Warder v. Henry, 117 Mo. 530, 23 S. W. 776; Clark v. Comford, 45 La. Ann. 502, 12 South. 763.

Privilege of defendant from being sued may be pleaded in abatement; Marr v. Johnson, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 1; Bac. Abr. Abt. C. See PRIVILEGE. A peer of England cannot, as formerly, plead his peerage in abatement of a writ of summons; 2 Wm. IV. ch. 39. It is a good cause of abatement that the defendant was arrested at a time when he was privileged from arrest; Hubbard v. Sanborn, 2 N. H. 468; Legrand v. Bedinger, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 539; or that he was served with process when privileged from suits; Van Alstyne v. Dearborn, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 586; Halsey v. Stewart, 4 N. J. L. 366; Greening v. Sheffield, Minor (Ala.) 276; but a statute allowing such plea applies not to persons improvidently arrested, but only to the privileged classes; Bank of Vergennes v. Barker, 27 Vt. 243. The privilege of defendant as member of the legislature has been pleaded in abatement; King v. Coit, 4 Day (Conn.) 129; but the privilege of a non-resident witness cannot be; Wilkins' Adm'r v. Brock, 79 Vt. 57, 64 Atl. 232.

For cases where the defendant may plead non-tenure, see Archb. C. P. 310; Cro. Eliz. 559; Manning v. Laboree, 33 Me. 343.

Where he may plead a disclaimer, see Archb. C. P.; Com. Dig. Abt. F, 15; Mills v. Peirce, 2 N. H. 10.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT TO THE COURT required oyer of the original writ; and, as this cannot now be had, these pleas are, it seems, abolished; 1 Chit. Pl. 405 (6th Lond. ed.); Saund. Pl. Abatement.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT OF THE WRIT.—In general, any irregularity, defect, or informality in the terms, form, or structure of the writ, or mode of issuing it, is a ground of abatement; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 132. Among them may be enumerated want of date, or impossible date; want of venue, or, in local actions, a wrong venue; a defective return; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 133. Oyer of the writ being prohibited, these errors cannot be objected to unless they appear in the declaration, which is presumed to correspond with the writ; Campbell v. Chaffee, 6 Fla. 724; 3 B. & P. 399; 14 M. & W. 161. The objection then is to the writ through the declaration; 1 B. & P. 648; there being no plea to the declaration alone, but in bar; 2 Saund. 209. A variance between writ and declaration may properly be pleaded in abatement; Weld v. Hubbard, 11 Ill. 573; Pierce v. Lacy, 23 Miss. 193.

Such pleas are either to the form of the writ, or to the action thereof.

Those of the first description were formerly either for matter apparent on the face of the writ, or for matter dehors; Com. Dig. Abt. H, 17.

Pleas in abatement to the form of the writ were formerly allowed for very trifling errors apparent on the face of the writ; 2 B. & P. 395, but since oyer has been prohibited, have fallen into disuse; Tidd, Pr. 636.

Pleas in abatement' of the form of the writ are now principally for matters dehors; Com. Dig. Abt. H, 17; existing at the time of suing out the writ, or arising afterwards; such as misnomer of the plaintiff's or defendant's name; Tidd, Pr. 637.

Pleas in Abatement to the Action of the Writ are that the action is misconceived, as if assumpsit is brought instead of account, or trespass when case is the proper action; 1 Show. 71; Tidd, Pr. 579; or that the right of action had not accrued at the commencement of the suit; Cro. Eliz. 325; Com. Dig. Action, E, 1. But these pleas are unusual, since advantage may be taken for the same reasons on demurrer or under the general issue; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 137; 1 C. & M. 492, 768.

Variance. Where the count varies from the writ, or the writ varies from the record or instrument on which the action is brought, it is pleadable in abatement; Cro. Eliz. 722; 1 H. Bla. 249; McNeill v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 154; Carpenter v. Hoyt, 17 Ill. 529; Smith v. Butler, 25 N. H. 521; and not otherwise; Lovell v. Doble, Quincy (Mass.) 88. If the variance is only in matter of mere form, as in time or place, when that circumstance is immaterial, advantage can be taken only by plea in abatement; Riley v. Murray, 8 Ind. 354; Cruikshank v. Brown, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 75; Latch 173; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 97. But if the variance is in matter of substance, as if the writ sounds in contract and the declaration in tort, advantage may also be taken by motion in arrest of judgment; Pitman v. Perkins, 28 N. H. 90; Cro. Eliz. 722. Pleas under this head have been virtually abolished by the rule refusing oyer of the writ; and the operation of this rule extends to all pleas in abatement that cannot be proved without examination of the writ; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 101. It seems that oyer of the writ is allowed in some of the states which retain the old system of pleading, as well as in those which have adopted new systems. In such states these rules as to variance are of force; Pitman v. Perkins, 28 N. H. 90; Carpenter v. Hoyt, 17 Ill. 529; Chapman v. Spence, 22 Ala. 588; Pierce v. Lacy, 23 Miss. 193; Riley v. Murray, 8 Ind. 354; Lary v. Evans, 35 N. H. 172; McNeill v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 154; Giles v. Perryman, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 164; White v. Walker, 1 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 35; Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 280, 6 L. Ed. 474; Garland v. Chattle, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 430; President, etc., of Bank of New Brunswick v. Arrowsmith, 9 N. J. L. 284. See VARIANCE.

QUALITIES OF PLEAS IN ABATEMENT. The defendant may plead in abatement to part, and demur or plead in bar to the residue, of the declaration; 2 Saund. 210. The general rule is that whatever proves the writ false at the time of suing it out shall abate the writ entirely; 1 Saund. 286 (n. 7).

As this plea delays the ascertainment of the merits of the action, it is not favored by the courts; the greatest accuracy and precision are therefore required; and it cannot be amended; 2 Saund. 298; Co. Litt. 392; 13 M. & W. 474; Jenkins v. Pepoon, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 312; 8 Bingh. 416; Getchell v. Boyd, 44 Me. 482; Mandel v. Péet, 18 Ark. 236; Anonymous, 1 Hemp. 215, Fed. Cas. No. 18,224; Roberts v. Heim, 27 Ala. 678. It must contain a direct, full, and positive averment of all the material facts; Morse v. Nash, 30 Vt. 76; Lary v. Evans, 35 N. H. 172; Ellis v. Ellis, 4 R. I. 110; Tweed v. Libbey, 37 Me. 49; Dinsmore v. Pendexter, 28 N. H. 18; Townsend v. Jeffries' Adm'r, 24 Ala. 329; Wales v. Jones, 1 Mich. 254. It must give enough so as to enable the plaintiff by amendment completely to supply the defect or avoid the mistake on which the plea is founded; 4 Term 224; 1 Saund. 274 (n. 4); Wadsworth v. Woodford, 1 Day (Conn.) 28; Rea v. Hayden, 3 Mass. 24; Burrow v. Sellers' Ex'rs, 2 N. C. 501; 2 Ld. Raym. 1178; 1 East 634.

It must not be double or repugnant; 3 M. & W. 607. It must have an apt and proper beginning and conclusion; 3 Term 186; Jenkins v. Pepoon, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 312; Schoonmakers' Ex'rs v. Elmendorf, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 49; 2 Saund. 209. The whole matter of complaint must be covered by the plea; 2 B. & P. 420. It cannot be pleaded after making full defence; 1 Chit. Pl. 441 (6th Lond. ed.).

A plea in abatement and a plea or answer in bar cannot be pleaded together; Southern Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Ins. Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 88; Huntington Mfg. Co. v. Schofield, 28 Ind. App. 95, 62 N. E. 106; Trentman v. Fletcher, 100 Ind. 105; Carmien v. Cornell, 148 Ind. 83, 47 N. E. 216 (in Indiana there is a statute forbidding it; Field v. Malone, 102 Ind. 251, 1 N. E. 507); contra, Fisher v. Fraprie, 125 Mass. 472; O'Loughlin v. Bird, 128 Mass. 600; Parks v. Smith, 155 Mass. 26, 28 N. E. 1044; (where expressions otherwise in Pratt v. Sanger, 4 Gray [Mass.] 84 and Morton v. Sweetser, 12 Allen [Mass.] 134, are characterized as obiter); Hurlburt v. Palmer, 39 Neb. 158, 57 N. W. 1019; Templin v. Kimsey, 74 Neb. 614, 105 N. W. 89 (citing many intermediate cases and establishing the rule that a plea to the merits may be filed with one to the jurisdiction, when the latter sets up an objection dehors the record); and see Reynolds v. Cook, 83 Va. 817, 3 S. E. 710, 5 Am. St. Rep. 317. See also Duke v. Duke, 70 N. J. Eq. 135, 62 Atl. 466; and a plea to the merits filed simultaneously with a plea in abatement waives the latter; Putnam Lumber Co. v. Ellis-Young Co., 50 Fla. 251, 39 South. 193; City of Covington v. Limerick, 40 S. W. 254, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 330; Lassus v. McCarty, 47 Or. 474, 84 Pac. 76; Maupin v. Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 557, 45 S. E. 1003; Crowns v. Land Co., 99 Wis. 103, 74 N. W. 546.

In some states this rule is changed by statute; Moffitt v. Chronicle Co., 107 Ia. 407, 78 N. W. 45; Little Rock Trust Co. v. R. Co., 195 Mo. 669, 93 S. W. 944; Thach v. Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 114 Tenn. 271, 87 S. W. 255; Pyron & Davidson v. Graef, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 405, 72 S. W. 101; or rule of court; National Fraternity v. Circuit Judge, 127 Mich. 186, 86 N. W. 540.

But this rule was held not to apply to a special plea denying partnership of the plaintiffs, filed under a statute requiring denial of the character in which the plaintiff sues in order to control it; Robinson v. Parker, 11 App. D. C. 132.

As to the form of pleas in abatement, see Harvey v. Hall, 22 Vt. 211; 1 Chit. Pl. (6th Lond. ed.) 454; Com. Dig. Abt. I, 19; 2 Saund. 1 (n. 2).

As to the time of pleading matter in abatement, it must be pleaded before any plea to the merits, both in civil and criminal cases, except in cases where it arises or comes to the knowledge of the party subsequently; Turns v. Com., 6 Metc. (Mass.) 224; University of Vermont v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52; Inhabitants of Plantation No. 9 v. Bean, 40 Me. 218; Butts v. Grayson, 14 Ark. 445; Hart v. Turk, 15 Ala. 675; Hatry v. Shuman, 13 Mo. 547; Ricker v. Scofield, 28 Ill. App. 32; and the right is waived by a subsequent plea to the merits; Sheppard v. Graves, 14 How. (U. S.) 505, 14 L. Ed. 518; Hart v. Turk, 15 Ala. 675; Smith v. State, 19 Conn. 493; Saum v. Bd. of Com's, 1 G. Greene (Ia.) 165; Chapman v. Davis, 4 Gill (Md.) 166; Cook v. Burnley, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 659, 20 L. Ed. 29. See PLEA PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE.

Demurrer to complaint for insufficiency of facts, waives all matter in abatement; Marx v. Croisan, 17 Or. 393, 21 Pac. 310.

Of the Affidavit of Truth. Every dilatory plea must be proven to be true, either by affidavit, by matter apparent upon the record, or probable matter shown to the court to induce them to believe it; 3 B. & P. 397; Holden v. Scanlin, 30 Vt. 177; White v. Whitman, 1 Curt. 494, Fed. Cas. No. 17,561; Humphrey v. Whitten, 17 Ala. 30; Knowlton v. Culver, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 16; Bank of Tennessee v. Jones, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 391; Saum v. Bd. of Com's, 1 G. Greene (Ia.) 165. It is not necessary that the affidavit should be made by the party himself; his attorney, or even a third person, will do; 1 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 3 (5th Am. ed.). The plaintiff may waive an affidavit; 5 Dowl. & L. 737; Richmond v. Tallmadge, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 307. The affidavit must be coextensive with the plea; 3 Nev. & M. 260, and leave nothing to be collected by inference; Say. 293. It should state that the plea is true in substance and fact, and not merely that the plea is a true plea; 3 Stra. 705; Day v. Hamburgh, 1 Browne (Pa.) 77; Rapp v. Elliot, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 184, 1 L. Ed. 341.

Plea in abatement on account of non-joinder of joint promisors need not be verified by oath, National Niantic Bank v. Express Co., 16 R. I. 343, 15 Atl. 763.

JUDGMENT ON PLEAS IN ABATEMENT. If issue be joined on a plea in abatement, a judgment for the plaintiff upon a verdict is final; 1 Str. 532; Moore v. Morton, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 234; McCartee v. Chambers, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 649, 22 Am. Dec. 556; Good v. Lehan, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 301; Dodge v. Morse, 3 N. H. 232; Haight v. Holley, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 258; but judgment for plaintiff upon a demurrer to a plea in abatement is not final, but merely respondeat ouster; Ld. Raym. 699; Whitford v. Flanders, 14 N. H. 371; Lambert v. Lagow, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 388. After judgment of respondeat ouster, the defendant has four days' time to plead, commencing after the judgment has been signed; 8 Bingh. 177. He may plead again in abatement, provided the subject-matter pleaded be not of the same degree, or of any preceding degree or class with that before pleaded; Com. Dig. Abt. I, 3; 1 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 4 (5th Am. ed.); Tidd, Pr. 641.

If the plea is determined in favor of the defendant either upon an issue of law or fact, the judgment is that the writ or bill be quashed; Yelv. 112; Bac. Abr. Abt. P; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 159; 2 Saund. 211 (n. 3).

See JUDGMENT.

As to abatement and revival of actions, the power and practice of United States courts are governed by the law of the state in which action is pending at death; Wilhite v. Skeleton, 149 Fed. 67, 78 C. C. A. 635.

ABATOR. One who abates or destroys a nuisance. One who, having no right of entry, gets possession of the freehold to the prejudice of an heir or devisee, after the time when the ancestor died, and before the heir or devisee enters. Litt. § 397; Perk. Conv. § 383; 2 Prest. Abs. 296, 300. See Ad. Ej. 43; 1 Washb. R. P. 225.

ABATUDA. Anything diminished; as moneta abatuda; which is money clipped or diminished in value. Cowell.

ABAVIA. A great-great-grandmother.

ABAVITA. Used for abamita, which see.

ABAVUNCULUS. A great-great-grandmother's brother. Calvinus, Lex.

ABAVUS. A great-great-grandfather, or fourth male ascendant.

ABBACY. The office of an abbot. The dignity of the office.

ABBAT, ABBOT. A spiritual lord or governor having the rule of a religious house. Cunningham.

ABBEY. A monastery or convent for the use of an association of religious persons, having an abbot or abbess to preside over them.

ABBOT. They were prelates in the 13th century who had had an immemorial right to sit in the national assembly. Taylor, Science of Jurispr. 287.

ABBREVIATION. A shortened form of a word, obtained by the omission of one or more letters or syllables from the middle or end of the word.

The abbreviations in common use in modern times consist of the initial letter or letters, syllable or syllables, of the word. Anciently, also, contracted forms of words, obtained by the omission of letters intermediate between the initial and final letters were much in use. These latter forms are now more commonly designated by the term contraction.

Abbreviations are of frequent use in referring to text-books, reports, etc., and in indicating dates, but should be very sparingly employed, if at all, in formal and important legal documents. See 4 C. & P. 51; 9 Co. 48. No part of an indictment should contain any abbreviations except in cases where a facsimile of a written instrument is necessary to be set out. 1 East 180, n. The variety and number of abbreviations are as nearly illimitable as the ingenuity of man can make them; and the advantages arising from their use are, to a great extent, counterbalanced by the ambiguity and uncertainty resulting from the usually inconsiderate selection which is made.

As to how far a judicial record may contain abbreviations of English words without invalidating it, see Stein v. Meyers, 253 Ill. 199, 97 N. E. 297.

The following list is believed to contain all abbreviations in common use. Where a shorter and a longer abbreviation are in common use, both are given.

Inst. Institutes; when preceded by a number denoting a volume (thus 1 Inst.), the reference is to Coke's Institutes; when followed by several numbers (thus Inst. 4, 2, 1), the reference is to the Institutes of Justinian.
1, 2, Inst. (1, 2) Coke's Inst.
Inst., 1, 2, 3. Justinian's Inst. lib. 1, tit. 2, § 3.
Inst., 1, 2, 31. Justinian's Institutes, lib. 1, tit. 2, § 31.
 The Institutes of Justinian are divided into four books,—each book is divided into titles, and each title into paragraphs, of which the first, described by the letters pr., or princip., is not numbered. The old method of citing the Institutes was to give the commencing words of the paragraph and of the title; e. g., § si adversus, Inst. de Nuptiis. Sometimes the number of the paragraph was introduced, e. g., § 12, si adversus, Inst. de Nuptiis. The modern way is to give the number of the book, title, and paragraph, thus;—Inst. I. 10, 12; would be read Inst., Lib. I. tit. 10, § 12.

ABBREVIATORS. Ecc. Law. Officers whose duty it is to assist in drawing up the Pope's briefs, and reducing petitions into proper form, to be converted into Papal Bulls.

ABROCHMENT. Old Eng. Law. The forestalling of a market or fair.

ABBUTTALS. See ABUTTALS.

ABDICATION. A simple renunciation of an office; generally understood of a supreme office.

James II. of England, Charles V. of Germany, and Christiana, Queen of Sweden, are said to have abdicated. When James II. of England left the kingdom, the Commons voted that he had abdicated the government, and that thereby the throne had become vacant. The House of Lords preferred the word deserted; but the Commons thought it not comprehensive enough, for then the king might have the liberty of returning.

It was also declared that abdication meant more than desertion and amounted to a forfeiture by acts and deeds of which the desertion was a part. In England, the constitutional relation between the crown and the nation being in the nature of a contract, the king cannot abdicate without the consent of parliament. The House of Lords finally assented to the word abdicate.

ABDITORIUM. An abditory or hiding place, to hide and preserve goods, plate or money. Jacob.

ABDUCTION. Forcibly taking away a man's wife, his child, or his ward. 3 Bla. Com. 139-141; State v. George, 93 N. C. 567.

The unlawful taking or detention of any female for purposes of marriage, concubinage, or prostitution. 4 Steph. Com. 84.

In many states this offence is created by statute and in most cases applies to females under a given age. The definitions of the crime differ in terms, but not in general results. They usually forbid the taking away or detaining or enticing of a female under a specified age, for purposes of concubinage or prostitution. In Minnesota the taking away for the purpose of marriage under the age of 15 is forbidden; and the statute is valid although some females are authorized by the law of that state to marry at that age; State v. Sager, 99 Minn. 54, 108 N. W. 812.

The important element of the offence is the taking for the unlawful purpose, which is accomplished when the female is removed from the custody of parents or others having control of her, by means of any device, enticement or persuasion; State v. Tucker, 72 Kan. 481, 84 Pac. 126. Unlawful detention and intention of having carnal knowledge are the necessary facts; Com. v. Littrell, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 251.

In some states the fact that a female taken for concubinage was not chaste is no defence; State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480, 22 S. W. 463; People v. Dolan, 96 Cal. 315, 31 Pac. 107; the law presumes a woman's previous life to have been chaste, and the burden of proof to show otherwise rests on the defendant; Slocum v. People, 90 Ill. 274; People v. Parshall, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 129; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 603; State v. Jones, 191 Mo. 653, 90 S. W. 465; State v. Bobbst, 131 Mo. 328, 32 S. W. 1149.

The offence is complete when there is a criminal intent at the time of the taking away, though there may be a subsequent purpose to marry; State v. Adams, 179 Mo. 334, 78 S. W. 588; State v. Sager, 99 Minn. 54, 108 N. W. 812.

Ignorance of the girl's age is no defence; Riley v. State (Miss.) 18 South. 117; Tores v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 880; nor is her request; Griffin v. State, 109 Tenn. 17, 70 S. W. 61; State v. Bussey, 58 Kan. 679, 50 Pac. 891; nor that he believed and with good reason that she was over the statutory age; L. R. 2 C. C. 154; Beckham v. Nacke, 56 Mo. 546; State v. Ruhl, 8 Ia. 447; nor the early abandonment of the relation and the return of the girl to her father with the man's assistance; State v. Neasby, 188 Mo. 467, 87 S. W. 468. It must appear that it was against her will; Hoskins v. Com., 7 Ky. L. Rep. 41; State v. Hromadko, 123 Ia. 665, 99 N. W. 560.

It is stated to be the better opinion, that if a man marries a woman under age, without the consent of her father or guardian, that act is not indictable at common law; but if children are taken from their parents or guardians, or others intrusted with the care of them, by any sinister means, either by violence, deceit, conspiracy, or any corrupt or improper practices, as by intoxication, for the purpose of marrying them, though the parties themselves consent to the marriage, such criminal means will render the act an offence at common law; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 458; 1 Rus. Cr. 962; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 260.

A mere attempt to abduct is not sufficient; People v. Parshall, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 129.

Solicitation or inducement is sufficient, and the taking need not be by force; People v. Seeley, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 190; Slocum v. People, 90 Ill. 274; People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442, 9 N. W. 487.

The remedy for taking away a man's wife was by a suit by the husband for damages, and the offender was also answerable to the king; 3 Bla. Com. 139.

See KIDNAPPING; ENTICE; and as to whether criminals abducted from another state may be prosecuted, see FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; EXTRADITION.

Civil Action. At common law the father had no right of civil action for the abduction of a child, except in case of the heir, in which case there was an action because of the interest in his marriage; Cro. Eliz. 770; but afterwards the right of action was sustained upon the theory of loss of services; 1 Wood. Lect. 270; 3 Bla. Com. 140; and on that ground it has been generally recognized in this country; Caughey v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 244; Wodell v. Coggeshall, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 391; Hills v. Hobert, 2 Root (Conn.) 48; Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mas. 380, Fed. Cas. No. 11,233; Cutting v. Seabury, 1 Sprague 522, Fed. Cas. No. 3,521; Steele v. Thacher, 1 Ware (Dav. 91) 85, Fed. Cas. No. 13,348; Kirkpatrick v. Lockhart, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 276; and the action lies by one standing in loco parentis, as the grandfather of an illegitimate child who has assumed the care of it; Moritz v. Garnhart, 7 Watts (Pa.) 302, 32 Am. Dec. 762. The proper form of action is in some states held to be trespass on the case; Sargent v. Mathewson, 38 N. H. 54; Jones v. Tevis, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 25, 14 Am. Dec. 98; in others, trespass vi et armis; Vaughan v. Rhodes, 2 McCord (S. C.) 227, 13 Am. Dec. 713; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 354. Exemplary damages may be recovered; Magee v. Holland, 27 N. J. L. 86, 72 Am. Dec. 341; Stowe v. Heywood, 7 Allen (Mass.) 118; and mental pain inflicted on the child may be considered; Brown v. Crockett, 8 La. Ann. 30. It is no defence that the abducted girl and her whole family were of loose and immoral character; Dobson v. Cothran, 34 S. C. 518, 13 S. E. 679. The right of action of the mother after the death of the father has been doubted, but is said to be sustained by the better opinion; 13 Am. Dec. 716, n.; see also Com. v. Murray, 4 Bin. (Pa.) 487, 5 Am. Dec. 412; Coon v. Moffet, 3 N. J. Law 583, 4 Am. Dec. 405.

ance to be of good abearance, signifies to be of good behavior. 4 Bla. Com. 251, 256. See Penna. Register 377, where William Penn, sitting judicially, used the term.

ABEREMURDER. In Old Eng. Law. An apparent, plain, or downright murder. It was used to distinguish a wilful murder from chance-medley, or manslaughter. Spel.; Cowell; Blount.

ABET. To encourage or set another on to commit a crime. This word is always applied to aiding the commission of a crime. To abet another to commit a murder, is to command, procure, or counsel him to commit it. Old Nat. Brev. 21; Co. Litt. 475. See AIDING AND ABETTING.

ABETTOR. An instigator, or setter on; one who promotes or procures the commission of a crime. Old Nat. Brev. 21.

The distinction between abettors and accessories is the presence or absence at the commission of the crime; Cowell; Fleta, lib. 1, cap. 34. Presence and participation are necessary to constitute a person an abettor; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 33; Russ. & R. 99; 9 Bingh. N. C. 440; Green v. State, 13 Mo. 382; Connaughty v. State, 1 Wis. 159, 60 Am. Dec. 370; White v. People, 81 Ill. 333; Doan v. State, 26 Ind. 496; King v. State, 21 Ga. 220.

ABEYANCE (Fr. abbayer, to expect). In expectation, remembrance, and contemplation of law; the condition of a freehold when there is no person in being in whom it is vested.

In such cases the freehold has been said to be in nubibus (in the clouds), in pendenti (in suspension), and in gremio legis (in the bosom of the law). It has been denied by some that there is such a thing as an estate in abeyance; Fearn, Cont. Rem. 513. See also the note to 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 107; 1 P. Wms. 516; 1 Plowd. 29.

The law requires that the freehold should never, if possible, be in abeyance. Where there is a tenant of the freehold, the remainder or reversion in fee may exist for a time without any particular owner, in which case it is said to be in abeyance; Lyle v. Richards, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 367; 3 Plowd. 29 a, b, 35 a; 1 Washb. R. P. 47.

It is a maxim of the common law that a fee cannot be in abeyance. It rests upon reasons that now have no existence, and it is not now of universal application. But if it were, being a common-law maxim, it must yield to statutory provisions inconsistent with it; Wallach v. Van Riswick, 92 U. S. 212, 23 L. Ed. 473.

A glebe, parsonage lands, may be in abeyance; Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 47, 3 L. Ed. 650; Weston v. Hunt, 2 Mass. 500; 1 Washb. R. P. 48; or a grant of land to charity; Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 292, 332, 3 L. Ed. 735. So may the franchise of a corporation; Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 691, 4 L. Ed. 629. So, too, personal property may be in abeyance or legal sequestration, as in case of a vessel captured at sea from its captors until it becomes invested with the character of a prize; 1 Kent 102; 1 O. Rob.

Adm. 139; 3 id. 97, n.; or the rights of property of a bankrupt, pending adjudication; Bank v. Sherman, 101 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 866. See Dillingham v. Snow, 5 Mass. 555; Jewett v. Burroughs, 15 Mass. 464.

ABIATICUS (Lat.). A son's son; a grandson in the male line. Spel. Sometimes spelled Aviaticus. Du Cange, Avius.

ABIDE. To accept the consequences of; to rest satisfied with. With reference to an order, judgment, or decree of a court, to perform, to execute. Taylor v. Hughes, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 433; Hodge v. Hodgdon, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 294; Jackson v. State, 30 Kan. 88, 1 Pac. 317; Petition of Griswold, 13 R. I. 125. Where a statute provides for a recognizance "to abide the judgment of the court," one conditioned "to await the action of the court" is not sufficient; Wilson v. State, 7 Tex. App. 38.

To abide by an award. To await the award without revoking the submission. It does not mean to "acquiesce in" or "not dispute," in the sense of not being at liberty to contest the validity of the award when made; Hunt v. Wilson, 6 N. H. 36; Quimby v. Melvin, 35 N. H. 198; Marshall v. Reed, 48 N. H. 36, 40.

To abide the decision. An agreement in a cause of partition "to abide the decision" of a suit in equity involving the title to the same lands did not mean to postpone the former suit until a final decree in the latter, but only that the partition should be in accordance with the title as determined by it; Hodges v. Pingree, 108 Mass. 585.

To abide and satisfy is used to express the execution or performance of a judgment or order by carrying it into complete effect; Erickson v. Elder, 34 Minn. 371, 25 N. W. 804.

ABIDING BY. In Scotch Law. A judicial declaration that the party abides by the deed on which he founds, in an action where the deed or writing is attacked as forged. Unless this be done, a decree that the deed is false will be pronounced. Pat. Comp. It has the effect of pledging the party to stand the consequences of founding on a forged deed. Bell, Dict.

ABIDING CONVICTION. A definite conviction of guilt derived from a thorough examination of the whole case. Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 439, 7 Sup. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708.

ABIGEATORES. See ABIGEUS.

ABIGEATUS. The offence of driving away and stealing cattle in numbers. See ABIGEUS.

ABIGEI. See ABIGEUS.

ABIGERE. See ABIGEUS.

ABIGEUS (Lat. abigere). One who steals cattle in numbers.

This is the common word used to denote a stealer of cattle in large numbers, which latter circumstance distinguishes the abigeus from the fur, who was simply a thief. He who steals a single animal may be called fur (q. v.); he who steals a flock or herd is an abigeus. The word is derived from abigere, to lead or drive away, and is the same in signification as Abactor (q. v.), Abigatores, Abigatores, Abiget. Du Cange; Guyot, Rép. Univ.; 4 Bla. Com. 239.

A distinction is also taken by some writers depending upon the place whence the cattle are taken; thus, one who takes cattle from a stable is called fur. Calvinus, Lex. Abigei.

ABILITY. When the word is used in statutes, it is usually construed as referring to pecuniary ability, as in the construction of Lord Tenterden's Act (q. v.); 1 M. & W. 101.

A Wisconsin Act (1885), making a husband "being of sufficient ability" liable for the support of an abandoned wife, contemplates as well earning capacity as property actually owned; State v. Witham, 70 Wis. 473, 35 N. W. 934; a contrary view was taken in Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 475.

ABJUDICATIO (Lat. abjudicare). A removal from court. Calvinus, Lex. It has the same signification as foris-judicatio both in the civil and canon law. Co. Litt. 100 b. Calvinus, Lex.

Used to indicate an adverse decision in a writ of right: Thus, the land is said to be abjudged from one of the parties and his heirs. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 62.

ABJURATION (Lat. abjuratio, from abjurare, to forswear). A renunciation of allegiance, upon oath.

In Am. Law. Every alien, upon application to become a citizen of the United States, must declare on oath or affirmation before the court where the application is made, amongst other things, that he doth absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity which he owes to any foreign prince, state, etc., and particularly, by name, the prince, state, etc., whereof he was before a citizen or subject. Rawle, Const. 93; Rev. Stat. U. S. § 2165.

In Eng. Law. The oath by which any person holding office in England was formerly obliged to bind himself not to acknowledge any right in the Pretender to the throne of England; 1 Bla. Com. 368; 13 and 14 W. III, c. 6, repealed by 30 and 31 Vic. c. 59.

It also denotes an oath abjuring certain doctrines of the church of Rome.

In the ancient English law, it was a renunciation of one's country and taking an oath of perpetual banishment. A man who had committed a felony, and for safety fled to a sanctuary, might within forty days confess and take the oath of abjuration and perpetual banishment; he was then transported. This was abolished in 1624; Ayliffe, Pareg. 14; Burr. L. Dic., Abjuration of the Realm; 4 Bla. Com. 332.

But the doctrine of abjuration has been referred to, at least, in much later times; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 56, 124, 332; 11 East 301; 2 Kent 156, n.; Termes de la Ley.

In medieval times, every consecrated church was a sanctuary. If a malefactor took refuge therein, he could not be extracted; he had a choice between abjuring the realm and submitting to trial. If he chose the former he left England, bound by his oath never to return. His lands were escheated, his chattels were forfeited, and if he came back he was an outlaw; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 583; Réville, L'Abjuratio regni, Revue historique. 7 Val. 50, p. 1. See SANCTUARY.

ABLE BODIED. An absence of those palpable and physical defects which evidently incapacitate a person from performing the ordinary duties of a soldier. Darling v. Bowen, 10 Vt. 148. Ability to perform ordinary labor is not the test. Town of Marlborough v. Sisson, 26 Conn. 57.

ABLEGATI. Papal ambassadors of the second rank, who are sent with a less extensive commission to a court where there are no nuncios. This title is equivalent to envoy, which see.

ABNEPOS (Lat.). A great-great-grandson. The grandson of a grandson or granddaughter. Calvinus, Lex.

ABNEPTIS (Lat.). A great-great-granddaughter. The granddaughter of a grandson or granddaughter. Calvinus, Lex.

ABODE. The place in which a person dwells. See Vanderpoel v. O'Hanlon, 53 Ia. 246, 5 N. W. 119, 36 Am. Rep. 216. It is the criterion determining the residence of a legal voter, and which must be with the present intention not to change it. Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 302, 10 Am. Rep. 698; Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 181. See RESIDENCE; DOMICIL.

ABOGADO (Sp.). An advocate. See BOZERO.

ABOLITION (Lat. abolitio, from abolere, to utterly destroy). The extinguishment, abrogation, or annihilation of a thing.

In the Civil, French and German law, abolition is used nearly synonymously with pardon, remission, grace. Dig. 39. 4. 3. 3. There is, however, this difference: grace is the generic term; pardon, according to those laws, is the clemency which the prince extends to a man who has participated in a crime, without being a principal or accomplice; remission is made in cases of involuntary homicides, and self-defence. Abolition is different: it is used when the crime cannot be remitted. The prince then may, by letters of abolition, remit the punishment, but the infamy remains, unless letters of abolition have been obtained before sentence. Encycl. de D'Alembert.

As to abolition of slavery, see BONDAGE; SLAVE.

ABORDAGE (Fr.). The collision of vessels. See ADMIRALTY; CODE; COLLISION; NAVIGATION, RULES OF.

ABORTION. The expulsion of the fœtus at a period of utero-gestation so early that it has not acquired the power of sustaining an independent life.

The unlawful destruction, or the bringing forth prematurely, of the human fœtus before the natural time of birth; State v. Mag-nell, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 307, 51 Atl. 606.

Its natural and innocent causes are to be sought either in the mother—as in a nervous, irritable temperament, disease, malformation of the pelvis, im-moderate venereal indulgence, a habit of miscar-riage, plethora, great debility; or in the fœtus or its dependencies; and this is usually disease existing in the ovum, in the membranes, the placenta, or the fetus itself.

The criminal means of producing abortion are of two kinds. General, or those which seek to produce the expulsion through the constitution of the mother, which are venesection, emetics, cathartics, diuretics, emmenagogues, comprising mercury, savin, and the secale cornutum (spurred rye, ergot), to which much importance has been attached; or local or mechanical means, which consist either of external violence applied to the abdomen or loins, or of instruments introduced into the uterus for the purpose of rupturing the membranes and thus bringing on premature action of the womb. The latter is the more generally resorted to, as being the most effectual. These local or mechanical means not unfrequently produce the death of the mother, as well as that of the fetus.

At common law, an attempt to destroy a child en ventre sa mere appears to have been held in England to be a misdemeanor; Rose. Cr. Ev. 4th Lond. ed. 260; 1 Russ. Cr. 3d Lond. ed. 671; 3 Co. Inst. 50; 1 Hawk. c. 13, s. 16; 1 Whart. Crim. L. § 392; though Green, C. J., in State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248, declares that he can find "no precedent, no authority, not even a dictum (prior to Lord Ellenborough's act, 43 Geo. III. c. 58) which recognizes the mere procuring of an abortion as a crime known to the law." It was said to be a misdemeanor only if the child were born dead, but if it were born alive and afterwards died, from injury received in the womb, it would be homicide; 1 Mood. C. C. 346; 3 Inst. 50; and this was true even if the child were still, at the time of death, attached to the mother by the umbilical cord; 1 C. & M. 650; 2 Mood. C. C. 260; see infra. In this country, it has been held that it is not an indictable offence at common law to administer a drug, or perform an operation upon a pregnant woman with her consent, with the intention and for the purpose of causing an abortion and premature birth of the fetus of which she is pregnant, by means of which an abortion is in fact caused, unless, at the time of the administration of such drug or the performance of such operation, such woman was quick with child; Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85; Hatfield v. Gano, 15 Ia. 177; Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248; Sullivan v. State, 121 Ga. 183, 48 S. E. 949; Barrow v. State, 121 Ga. 187, 48 S. E. 950; Mitchell v. Com., 78 Ky. 204, 39 Am. Rep. 227. In Idaho the common law rule is as stated, but by statute the crime may be committed before quickening; State v. Alcorn, 7 Ida. 599, 64 Pac. 1014, 97 Am. St. Rep. 252. But in Pennsylvania a contrary doctrine has been held; Mills v. Com., 13 Pa. 631; Com. v. Demain, 6 Pa. L. J. 29. Wharton supports the latter doctrine on principle; 1 Cr. L. § 592. See also Com. v. Boynton, 116 Mass. 343; Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 69; Com. v. Corkin, 136 Mass. 429. Under the Massachusetts statute forbidding the procuring of a miscarriage, it is not necessary to allege that the child was born alive or that the woman was "quick with child"; Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85; or whether she did or did not die; Com. v. Thompson, 108 Mass. 461. In other states it is held that the death of the mother is not a constituent element of the offence of abortion; Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355, 56 L. R. A. 353, 84 Am. St. Rep. 506; Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. 100, 1 Atl. 314. See QUICKENING. The Iowa cases cited supra were civil suits by husband and wife for slander in charging the latter with having procured an abortion, and it was held that no crime was committed unless the woman was "quick with child."

The former English statutes on this subject, 43 Geo. III. c. 58, and 9 Geo. IV. c. 51, § 14, distinguished between the case where the woman was quick and was not quick with child; and under both acts the woman must have been pregnant at the time; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 216; 3 C. & P. 605. The terms of the act of 24 and 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62, are, "with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman whether she be with child or not." See 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 18; 2 C. & K. 293.

When, in consequence of the means used to secure an abortion, the death of the woman ensues, the offence is criminal homicide, and though the cases are not uniform as to the degree, the preponderance of authority is that the crime is murder; State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 309; Com. v. Parker, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 263, 43 Am. Dec. 396; 1 Hale P. C. 430; 1 East P. C. 230; People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 26 N. W. 291; Wilson v. Com., 60 S. W. 400, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1251; State v. Moore, 25 Ia. 128, 95 Am. Dec. 776; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; Dears. & B. C. C. 288; Mood. C. C. 356; Commonwealth v. Keeper of Prison, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 227; Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 338, 41 Am. Rep. 815; but the defendant may be prosecuted under the special statute for procuring a miscarriage; id. Where the offence is held to be murder, it is usually of the second degree, as in State v. Lodge, 9 Houst. (Del.) 542, 33 Atl. 312, where the defendant was convicted under an indictment specifically for that degree; so also in State v. Moore, 25 Ia. 128, 95 Am. Dec. 776, where Dillon, C. J., upon a careful examination of the authorities, sustained the indictment and held that the death of the mother was, at common law, murder, and under the Iowa statutes murder in the second degree. Conviction upon an indictment for manslaughter will be sustained; People v. Abbott, 116 Mich. 263, 74 N. W. 529; Yundt v. People, 65 Ill. 372; Dears. & B. C. C. 164; 7 Cox C. C. 404. The common law rule that homicide in an attempt to commit a felony is murder, and in the attempt to commit a misdemeanor is manslaughter, has been much discussed and was applied in Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355, 56 L. R. A. 353, 84 Am. St.

Rep. 506, where an attempt to procure an abortion resulting in death was held manslaughter. Under the Pennsylvania act one causing the death of a woman in attempting to procure a miscarriage cannot be indicted for murder; Com. v. Railing, 113 Pa. 37, 4 Atl. 459. In Wisconsin it was held that from murder at common law, the crime was reduced to manslaughter by statute; State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299, 309. A person may be convicted of manslaughter for causing the death of a woman in attempting an abortion, under a statute making it manslaughter to kill another in the performance of an unlawful act; the statute making the attempt to procure an abortion a misdemeanor does not take the offence out of the provisions of the other act; State v. Power, 24 Wash. 34, 63 Pac. 1112, 63 L. R. A. 902. Homicide in attempting an abortion may be either murder or manslaughter, but if the latter, it must be held to be voluntary, and not involuntary; People v. Com., 87 Ky. 487, 9 S. W. 509. Dr. Wharton suggests that where there was no intent to do the mother serious bodily harm, it is proper to indict separately for the manslaughter and the perpetration of the abortion; 1 Cr. L. 390. In North Carolina it was held a misdemeanor, and that a count for it may be joined with a count for murder; State v. Slagle, 82 N. C. 653. In New York, under a statute declaring it manslaughter to administer drugs, etc., to a pregnant woman with intent to destroy the child, an indictment in which the intent was not so alleged, but only to produce a miscarriage, was held not good as an indictment for manslaughter, but the jury could convict of misdemeanor; Lohman v. People, 1 N. Y. 379, 49 Am. Dec. 340.

In East P. C. 230, it is said that if death ensue it is murder, "though the original intent, had it succeeded, would not have been so but only a great misdemeanor," but the modern English decisions are by no means uniform. In a late edition of a book of great authority the annotator says: "And there appears to be considerable divergence of opinion amongst the judges as to the proper direction to the jury in these cases. See 33 L. J. Newsp. 546, 615;" Archb. Cr. Pl. & Pr. (23d Eng. Ed.) 798. A recent English case held that if the woman died as the result of the operation, it was murder, but if the jury were of the opinion that if the prisoner could not as a reasonable man have expected death to result, it was manslaughter; 62 J. P. 711. A note in 13 Harv. L. Rev. 51, criticizes a decision, then recent, remarking that the settled English rule holding that it is murder if death result from an attempt to procure an abortion, was not followed by Mr. Justice Dowling in a case at the Chester assizes, March 6, 1899.

Even if the wound or injury were not of itself sufficient to cause death, if it did so result, owing to the condition of the woman, it is to be treated as the cause of her death; Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740. See an exhaustive note on "Homicide in the Commission of or Attempt to Commit an Abortion"; 63 L. R. A. 902.

If a person, intending to procure abortion, does an act which causes a child to be born so much earlier than the natural time that it is born in a state much less capable of living, and afterwards dies in consequence of its exposure to the external world, such person is guilty of murder; and the mere existence of a possibility that something might have been done to prevent the death will not render it less murder; 2 C. & K. 784. Under statutes the offence of abortion is generally made punishable whether the woman be "quick with child," or no; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; People v. Abbott, 116 Mich. 263, 74 N. W. 529; and in an indictment for causing death in an attempt to procure an abortion it is unnecessary so to allege; People v. Com., 87 Ky. 487, 9 S. W. 509. It is immaterial whether or not the woman was pregnant; Eggart v. State, 40 Fla. 527, 25 South. 144; the intent is the gravamen of the offence; State v. Jones, 4 Pennewill (Del.) 109, 53 Atl. 858.

The crime may be committed by one who, though prescribing medicine and giving directions, was not present when it was taken; McCaughy v. State, 156 Ind. 41, 59 N. E. 169; or by sending it through the mail; State v. Morthart, 109 Ia. 130, 80 N. W. 301; or if the pregnant woman consented to or urged the operation and the defendant was reluctant to do it; State v. Magnell, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 307, 51 Atl. 606; the consent of the woman is no defense; Barrow v. State, 121 Ga. 187, 48 S. E. 950; State v. Lodge, 9 Houst. (Del.) 542, 33 Atl. 312; Peoples v. Com., 87 Ky. 487, 9 S. W. 509; even where the indictment charges force and violence and the evidence showed consent; People v. Abbott, 116 Mich. 263, 74 N. W. 529; nor is it an excuse that prior to the attempt the woman had tried to do it herself, unless such effort by her contributed to her death; State v. Glass, 5 Or. 73.

A child en ventre sa mere ["an unborn quick child"] is not a human being within the meaning of a statute providing that whoever kills any human being, with malice aforethought, is guilty of murder; Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Ia. 274, 66 Am. Dec. 77.

The woman who takes the drug or on whom the criminal operation is performed, to procure an abortion, is not an accomplice; Com. v. Boynton, 116 Mass. 343; Com. v. Follansbee, 155 Mass. 274, 29 N. E. 471; State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 598; People v. McGonegal, 136 N. Y. 62, 75, 32 N. E. 616; and if she had lived would not have been indictable for that offense, her action constituted a different one; id.; nor is one who attempts to procure it on herself indictable under a statute providing "that any person who shall administer to any pregnant woman, etc."; Hatfield v. Gano, 15 Ia. 177; Smith v. Gaffard, 31 Ala. 45.

In New York if a person advises a woman to take medicine to procure a miscarriage the crime of abortion is not complete unless the advice is acted on; People v. Phelps, 133 N. Y. 267, 30 N. E. 1012; id., 61 Hun 115, 15 N. Y. Supp. 440; but in New Jersey it is by statute criminal to advise a woman to take a drug for the purpose and it is unnecessary either to allege or prove that the drug was actually taken; State v. Murphy, 27 N. J. L. 112; one furnishing a residence for a woman who procures an abortion is an accessory before the fact; 12 Cox C. C. 463. An offer of proof by physicians that it is the universal custom for unmarried women, illegitimately pregnant, to take any character of drug to procure a miscarriage was properly rejected; Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740. One who induces a woman to take a harmless drug is not guilty of inciting, but the woman who takes it believing that it will bring on an abortion is guilty of an attempt; 63 J. P. 790. See FETUS; PREGNANCY; EMENAGOGUES; EN VENTRE SA MERE.

ABORTIVE TRIAL. A phrase used "when a case has gone off and no verdict has been pronounced, without the fault, contrivance, or management of the parties." Jebb & B. 51.

ABORTUS. The fruit of an abortion; the child born before its time, incapable of life. See ABORTION; BIRTH; BREATH; DEAD-BORN; GESTATION; LIFE.

ABOUT. Almost or approximately; near in time, quantity, number, quality or degree. The import of the qualifying word "about" is simply, that the actual quantity is a near approximation to that mentioned, and its effect is to provide against accidental variations; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 29 L. Ed. 366. When there is a material and valuable variation, a court of equity upon a petition for specific performance will give the word its proper effect; Stevens v. McKnight, 40 Ohio St. 341.

In a charter party "about to sail" imports just ready to sail; [1893] 2 Q. B. 274.

ABOUTISSEMENT (Fr.). An abuttal or abutment. See Guyot. Répert. Univ. Aboutissans.

ABPATRUUS (Lat.). A great-great-uncle; or, a great-great-grandfather's brother. Du Cange, Patruus. It sometimes means uncle, and sometimes great-uncle.

the substance of it. Brooke, Abr., Com., Dig. Abridgment; 1 Viner, Abr. 109.

To abridge a plaint is to strike out a part of the demand and pray that the tenant answer to the rest. This was allowable generally in real actions where the writ was de libero tenemento, as assize, dower, etc., where the demandant claimed land of which the tenant was not seized. See 1 Wms. Saund. 207, n. 2; 2 id. 24, 330; Brooke, Abr. Abridgment; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 74, 7 L. Ed. 47; Stearns, Real Act 204.

ABRIDGMENT. Condensation; contraction. An epitome or compendium of another and larger work, wherein the principal ideas of the larger work are summarily contained.

Abridgments of the law or digests of adjudged cases serve the very useful purpose of an index to the cases abridged; 5 Co. 25. Coke says they are most profitable to those who make them; Co. Litt., in preface to the table at the end of the work. With few exceptions, the old abridgments are not entitled to be considered authoritative. See AUTHORITY. See 2 Wils. 1, 2; 1 Burr. 364; 1 W. Bla. 101; 3 Term 64, 241; and an article in the North American Review, July, 1826, p. 8, for an account of the principal abridgments, which was written by the late Justice Story, and is reprinted in his "Miscellaneous Writings," p. 79; Warren, Law Stud. 778.

See COPYRIGHT.

ABROGATION. The destruction of or annulling a former law, by an act of the legislative power, or by usage.

A law may be abrogated, or only derogated from: it is abrogated when it is totally annulled; it is derogated from when only a part is abrogated; derogatur legi, cum pars detrahitur; abrogatur legi, cum prorsus tollitur. Dig. 50. 17. 1. 102. Lex rogatur dum fertur (when it is passed); abrogatur dum tollitur (when it is repealed); derogatur idem dum quoddam ejus caput aboletur (when any part of it is abolished); subrogatur dum aliquid ei adficitur (when anything is added to it); abrogatur denique, quoties aliquid in ea mutatur (as often as anything in it is changed). Dupin, Proleg. Jur. art. iv.

Express abrogation is that literally pronounced by the new law either in general terms, as when a final clause abrogates or repeals all laws contrary to the provisions of the new one, or in particular terms, as when it abrogates certain preceding laws which are named.

Implied abrogation takes place when the new law contains provisions which are positively contrary to former laws, without expressly abrogating such laws; for it is a maxim, posteriora derogant prioribus; De Armas' Case, 10 Mart. O. S. (La.) 172; Bernard v. Vignaud, 10 Mart. O. S. (La.) 560; and also when the order of things for which the law has been made no longer exists, and hence the motives which have caused its enactment have ceased to operate; ratione legis omnino cessante, cessat lex; Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. tit. prel. § 11, n. 151; Merlin, Répert. Abrogation.

As to the repeal of statutes by nonuser, see OBSOLETE.

ABSCOND. To go in a clandestine manner out of the jurisdiction of the courts, or to lie concealed, in order to avoid their process. Malvin v. Christoph, 54 Ia. 562, 7 N. W. 6. It has been held synonymous with conceal; Johnstone v. Thompson, 2 La. 411. See ABSCONDING DEBTOR.

ABSCONDING DEBTOR. One who absconds from his creditors. One who with intent to defeat or delay his creditors departs out of England, or being out, remains out. Bankcy. Act, 1883, § 4. The statutes of the various states and the decisions upon them have defined absconding debtors. A person who has been in a state only transiently, or has come into it without any intention of settling therein, cannot be treated as such; In re Fitzgerald, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 318; Dudley v. Staples, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 196; nor can one who openly changes his residence; Dunn v. Myres, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 414; Fitch v. Waite, 5 Conn. 117; House v. Hamilton, 43 Ill. 185; In re Proctor, 27 Vt. 118; Mandel v. Peet, 18 Ark. 236. It is not necessary that the debtor should actually leave the state; Field v. Adreon, 7 Md. 209. If he depart from his usual place of abode secretly or suddenly, or retire or conceal himself from public view in order to avoid legal process; Bennett v. Avant, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 152; Ives v. Curtiss, 2 Root (Conn.) 133; he is an absconder. It is essential that there should be an intention to delay and defraud creditors. The fact of converting a large amount of goods into money by auction sales, at a sacrifice and clandestinely, furnishes a reasonable presumption that the debtor intended to abscond to avoid service of process upon him; Ross v. Clark, 32 Mo. 296. It has been held to mean more than "absent debtor" and that to state that a debtor absents himself is not a compliance with a statute relating to absconding debtors; Conard v. Conard, 17 N. J. L. 154. See ABSENTEE.

ABSENCE. The state of being away from one's domicile or usual place of residence. It may mean non-appearance. L. R. 1 P. & D. 169; 14 L. T. 604; Strine v. Kaufman, 12 Neb. 423, 11 N. W. 867.

ABSENT. Being away from; at a distance from; not in company with. Paine v. Drew, 44 N. H. 306, where it was held that the word when used as an adjective referred only to the condition or situation of the person or thing spoken of at the time of speaking without any allusion or reference to any prior condition or situation of the same person or thing, but when used as a verb implies prior presence. It has also been held to mean "not being in a particular place at the time referred to," and not to import prior presence; [1893] A. C. 339; 62 L. J. C. P. 107; 62 L. T. 159. The term absent defendants does not embrace non-resident defendants but has reference to parties resident in the state, but temporarily absent therefrom; Wash v. Heard, 27 Miss. 400; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 35 Ill. App. 123. Although there is a difference between the act of "absenting oneself," which is purely voluntary, and the fact of "being absent," which is voluntary or involuntary as the case may be, yet the fact that a person is absent under some strong compulsion, which does not amount to physical necessity, does not necessarily negative the voluntary aspect of his act; [1901] 1 Ch. 728.

ABSENTE (Lat.). Being absent; used of one of the judges not present at the hearing of a cause. 2 Mod. 14. Absente Reo (Lat.). The defendant being absent.

ABSENTEE. A landlord who resides in a country other than that from which he draws his rents. McCulloch, Polit. Econ.; 33 British Quart. Rev. 455. One who has left his residence in a state leaving no one to represent him; Bartlett v. Wheeler, 31 La. Ann. 540; or who resides in another state but has property in Louisiana; Penn v. Evans, 23 id. 576. It has been also defined as one who has never been domiciled in the state and who resides abroad. Morris v. Bienvenu, 30 id. 878.

As to grant of administration upon property of persons long absent, see ADMINISTRATION.

ABSOLLE. To pardon; to deliver from excommunication. Staunford, Pl. Cr. 72; Kelham. Sometimes spelled assoile, which see.

ABSOLUTE (Lat. absolvere). Complete; perfect; final; without any condition or encumbrance; as an absolute bond (simplex obligatio) in distinction from a conditional bond; an absolute estate, one that is free from all manner of condition or incumbrance. See CONDITION.

A rule is said to be absolute when on the hearing it is confirmed and made final. A conveyance is said to be absolute, as distinguished from a mortgage or other conditional conveyance; 1 Powell, Mort. 125.

Absolute rights are such as appertain and belong to particular persons merely as individuals or single persons, as distinguished from relative rights, which are incident to them as members of society; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 123; 1 Chit. Pr. 32.

Absolute property is where a man hath solely and exclusively the right and also the occupation of movable chattels; distinguished from a qualified property, as that of a bailee; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 388; 2 Kent 347.

An absolute estate in land is an estate in fee simple; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 543, 5 L. Ed. 681; Fuller v. Missroon, 35 S. C. 314, 14 S. E. 714; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Power Co., 172 U. S. 492, 19 Sup. Ct. 247, 43 L. Ed. 521.

In the law of insurance that is an absolute interest in property which is so completely vested in the individual that there could be no danger of his being deprived of it without his own consent; Hough v. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581; Reynolds v. Ins. Co., 2 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 326; Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 452, 3 Am. Rep. 149; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Power Co., 172 U. S. 492, 19 Sup. Ct. 247, 43 L. Ed. 521.

It may be used in the sense of vested; Williams v. Ins. Co., 17 Fed. 65; Hough v. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 20, 76 Am. Dec. 581.

ABSOLUTELY. Completely. Absolutely void means utterly void; Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. 9. Absolutely necessary may be used to make the idea of necessity more emphatic; State v. Tetrick, 34 W. Va. 137, 11 S. E. 1002.

ABSOLUTION. In Civil Law. A sentence whereby a party accused is declared innocent of the crime laid to his charge.

In Canon Law. A juridical act whereby the clergy declare that the sins of such as are penitent are remitted. The formula of absolution in the Roman Church is absolute; in the Greek Church it is deprecatory; in the Reformed Churches, declaratory. Among Protestants it is chiefly used for a sentence by which a person who stands excommunicated is released or freed from that punishment. Encyc. Brit.

In French Law. The dismissal of an accusation.

The term acquittal is employed when the accused is declared not guilty, and absolution when he is recognized as guilty but the act is not punishable by law or he is exonerated by some defect of intention or will. Merlin, Répert.

ABSOLUTISM. In Politics. A government in which public power is vested in some person or persons, unchecked and uncontrolled by any law or institution.

The word was first used at the beginning of this century, in Spain, where one who was in favor of the absolute power of the king, and opposed to the constitutional system introduced by the Cortes during the struggle with the French, was called absolutista. The term Absolutist spread over Europe, and was applied exclusively to absolute monarchism; but absolute power may exist in an aristocracy and in a democracy as well. Dr. Lieber, therefore, uses in his works the term Absolute Democracy for that government in which the public power rests unchecked in the multitude (practically speaking, in the majority).

ABSQUE ALIQUO INDE REDDENDO (Lat. without reserving any rent therefrom). A term used of a free grant by the crown. 2 Rolle, Abr. 502.

ABSQUE HOC (Lat.). Without this. See TRAVERSE.

ABSQUE IMPETITIONE VASTI (Lat. without impeachment of waste). A term indicating freedom from any liability on the part of the tenant or lessee to answer in damages for the waste he may commit. See WASTE.

ABSQUE TALI CAUSA (Lat. without such cause). A form of replication in an action ex delicto which works a general denial of the whole matter of the defendant's plea of de injuria. Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 10.

ABSTENTION. In French Law. The tacit renunciation of a succession by an heir. Merlin, Répert.

ABSTRACT OF A FINE. A part of the record of a fine, consisting of an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord; naming the parties, the parcel of land, and the agreement. 2 Bla. Com. 351.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE. An epitome, or brief statement of the evidences of ownership of real estate and its encumbrances. See Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 533, 23 Pac. 217; Simon Safe Deposit Co. v. Chisholm, 33 Ill. App. 647; Heinsen v. Lamb, 117 Ill. 549, 7 N. E. 75.

An abstract should set forth briefly, but clearly, every deed, will, or other instrument, every recital or fact relating to the devolution of the title, which will enable a purchaser, or mortgagee, or his counsel, to form an opinion as to the exact state of the title. See 54 L. J. Ch. 466; Kane v. Rippey, 22 Or. 296, 23 Pac. 180.

In England this is usually prepared at the expense of the owner; 1 Dart, Vend. 279. The failure to deliver an abstract in England relieves the purchaser from his contract in law; id. 305. It should run back for sixty years; or, since the Act of 38 and 39 Vict. c. 78, forty years prior to the intended sale, etc.

In the United States, where offices for registering deeds are universal, and conveyancing much less complicated, abstracts are much simpler than in England, and are usually prepared at the expense of the purchaser, etc., or by his conveyancer. A person preparing the abstract must understand fully all the laws that can affect real estate; Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 94 (Gil. 46); and will be held to a strict responsibility in the exercise of the confidence reposed in him; Vallette v. Tedens, 122 Ill. 607, 14 N. E. 52, 3 Am. St. Rep. 502; Brown v. Sims, 22 Ind. App. 317, 53 N. E. 779, 72 Am. St. Rep. 308; Young v. Lohr, 118 Ia. 624, 92 N. W. 684; Security Abstract of Title Co. v. Longacre, 56 Neb. 469, 76 N. W. 1073; but his liability is not that of a guarantor of the title; Dundee Mortgage & Trust Inv. Co. v. Hughes, 20 Fed. 39; Wacek v. Frink, 51 Minn. 282, 53 N. W. 633, 38 Am. St. Rep. 502; and will extend only to his employer; Symms v. Cutter, 9 Kan. App. 210, 59 Pac. 671; Equitable Building & Loan Ass'n v. Bank, 118 Tenn. 678, 102 S. W. 901, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 449, 12 Ann. Cas. 467.

Where an abstract of title is made for a vendor, warranted to be true and perfect, the vendee refusing to take the property without it, the company making it was held liable for omissions in it; Dickle v. Abstract Co., 89 Tenn. 431, 14 S. W. 896, 24 Am. St. Rep. 616. It is not necessary to state that the descriptions of the premises in the various instruments are inconsistent; American Trust Inv. Co. v. Abstract Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 39 S. W. 877. Where the register of deeds records full satisfaction instead of a partial release on the margin of the mortgage record, an abstract maker relying on the marginal entry is guilty of negligence; Wacek v. Frink, 51 Minn. 282, 53 N. W. 633, 38 Am. St. Rep. 502.

See Equitable Bldg. & L. Ass'n v. Bank, 118 Tenn. 678, 102 S. W. 901, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 449, 12 Ann. Cas. 407; Ward. Abstr.; TITLE.

ABSURDITY. That which is both physically and morally impossible. State v. Hayes, 81 Mo. 574.

ABUSE. Everything which is contrary to good order established by usage. Merlin, Répert.

Among the civilians, abuse has another signification, which is the destruction of the substance of a thing in using it. For example, the borrower of wine or grain abuses the article borrowed by using it, because he cannot enjoy it without consuming it.

The word is used in statutes as applied to women with reference only to sexual intercourse, and imports an offence of that nature; 6 H. & N. 193; and is held synonymous with ravish; Pallin v. State, 38 Neb. 862, 57 N. W. 743.

It has been held to include misuse; Erie & North-East R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287; to signify to injure, diminish in value, or wear away by improper use; id.; to be synonymous with injure; Dawkins v. State, 58 Ala. 376, 29 Am. Rep. 754.

Abuse of a female child is an injury to the genital organs in an attempt at carnal knowledge, falling short of actual penetration; Dawkins v. State, 58 Ala. 376, 29 Am. Rep. 754. See RAPE.

Abuse of distress is such use of an animal or chattel distrained as makes the distrainer liable to prosecution as for wrongful appropriation.

Abuse of discretion. A discretion exercised to an end or purpose not justified by and clearly against reason and evidence. Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16 Pac. 345; Murray v. Buell, 74 Wis. 14, 43 N. W. 549; and see People v. R. Co., 29 N. Y. 418.

Abuse of process. Intentional irregularity for the purpose of gaining an advantage over one's opponent.

ABUT. To reach, to touch.

In old law, the ends were said to abut, the sides to adjoin. Cro. Jac. 184.

To take a new direction; as where a bounding line changes its course. Spelman,

Gloss. Abuttare. In the modern law, to bound upon. 2 Chit. Pl. 660.

In Hughes v. R. Co., 130 N. Y. 14, 28 N. E. 765, an abutting lot was defined as a lot bounded on the side of a public street in the bed or soil of which the owner of the lot has no title, estate, interest, or private right except such as are incident to a lot so situated. And see Abendroth v. R. Co., 122 N. Y. 1, 25 N. E. 496, 11 L. R. A. 634, 19 Am. St. Rep. 461. Though the usual meaning of the word is that the things spoken of do actually adjoin, "bounding and abutting" have no such inflexible meaning as to require lots assessed or improved actually to touch the improvement; Cohen v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 190, 1 N. E. 589; 1 Ex. D. 336; contra, Holt v. City Council, 127 Mass. 408.

Bounding or abutting on a street will include the soil of a private road opening into the street; 7 Q. B. 183. Where a strip of ground from one side of a street is appropriated for the purpose of widening such street, the lots fronting on the opposite sides of the street at the part widened will be deemed to abut on the improvement, though the street intervenes between the abutting lots and the strip appropriated; Cincinnati v. Batsche, 52 Ohio St. 324, 40 N. E. 21, 27 L. R. A. 536; and where a sidewalk intervenes between the street improvement and lots bounding on the sidewalk, such lots were subject, as "contiguous" to the proposed improvement, to special taxation to defray the expense of the latter; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. City of Quincy, 136 Ill. 563, 27 N. E. 192, 29 Am. St. Rep. 334.

ABUTMENT. The walls of a bridge adjoining the land which support the end of the roadway and sustain the arches. See Board of Chosen Freeholders of Sussex County v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Dec. 530; Bardwell v. Town of Jamaica, 15 Vt. 438.

ABUTTALS (Fr.). The buttings or boundaries of lands, showing to what other lands, highways, or places they belong or are abutting. Termes de la Ley.

It has been used to express the end boundary lines as distinguished from those on the sides, as "buttals and sidings"; Cro. Jac. 183.

ABUTTER. One whose property abuts, is contiguous or joins at a border or boundary, as where no other land, road or street intervenes.

ABUTTING OWNER. An owner of land which abuts or adjoins. The term usually implies that the relative parts actually adjoin, but is sometimes loosely used without implying more than close proximity. See EMINENT DOMAIN; HIGHWAY.

AC ETIAM (Lat. and also). The introduction of the statement of the real cause of action, used in those cases where it was necessary to allege a fictitious cause of action to give the court jurisdiction, and also the real cause in compliance with the statutes. It was first used in the K. B., and was afterwards adopted by C. J. North in addition to the quare clausum fregit writs of his court upon which writs of capias might issue. He balanced for a time whether he should not use the words nec non instead of ac etiam. It is sometimes written aceti-am. 2 Stra. 922. This clause is no longer used in the English courts. 2 Will. IV. c. 39. 3 Bla. Com. 288. See BILL OF MIDDLESEX.

AC ETIAM BILLÆ. And also to a bill. See AC ETIAM.

ACADEMY. An institution of learning. An association of experts in some particular branch of art, literature or science. See SCHOOL.

ACCEDAS AD CURIAM (Lat. that you go to court). An original writ issuing out of chancery and directed to the sheriff, for the purpose of removing a suit from a Court Baron before one of the superior courts of law. It directs the sheriff to go to the lower court, and enroll the proceedings and send up the record. See Fitzh. N. B. 18; Dy. 169.

ACCEDAS AD VICECOMITEM (Lat. that you go to the sheriff). A writ directed to the coroner, commanding him to deliver a writ to the sheriff, when the latter, having had a pone delivered him, suppressed it. Reg. Orig. 83.

ACCELERATION. The shortening of the time for the vesting in possession of an expectant interest. Wharton.

ACCEPTANCE (Lat. accipere, to receive). The receipt of a thing offered by another with an intention to retain it, indicated by some act sufficient for the purpose. 2 Parsons, Contr. 221. It is necessary that each party should do some act by which he will be bound; 3 B. & Ald. 680.

The element of receipt must enter into every acceptance, though receipt does not necessarily mean in this sense some actual manual taking. To this element there must be added an intention to retain. This intention may exist at the time of the receipt, or subsequently; it may be indicated by words, or acts, or any medium understood by the parties; and an acceptance of goods will be implied from mere detention, in many instances.

An acceptance involves very generally the idea of a receipt in consequence of a previous undertaking on the part of the person offering to deliver such a thing as the party accepting is in some manner bound to receive. It is through this meaning that the term acceptance, as used in reference to bills of exchange, has a relation to the more general use of the term. As distinguished from assent, acceptance would denote receipt of something in compliance with, and satisfactory fulfilment of, a contract to which assent had been previously given, and the word has been held to mean something more than receive; Hall v. Los Angeles County, 74 Cal. 502, 16 Pac. 313. See ASSENT.

Under the statute of frauds delivery and acceptance are necessary to complete an oral contract for the sale of goods, in most cases. In such cases it is said the acceptance must be absolute and past recall; 2 Exch. 290; McCulloch v. Ins. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 278; Mahan v. United States, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 146, 21 L. Ed. 307. If an article is found defective, but is retained and used, it is a sufficient acceptance; Logan v. Apartment House, 3 Misc. Rep. 296, 22 N. Y. Supp. 776. If goods are delivered to a third person by order of the purchaser they are deemed to have been received and accepted by the latter through his agent; Schroder v. Hardware Co., 88 Ga. 578, 15 S. E. 327. Where a verbal contract was made for the sale of goods to be delivered at a specified point where purchaser was to pay freight for the seller, it was held that the acceptance by the carrier and possession of freight after reaching its destination, was not such an acceptance by purchaser as would take it out of the statute; Agnew v. Dumas, 64 Vt. 147, 23 Atl. 634. As to how far a right to make future objections invalidates an acceptance, see 3 B. & Ald. 680; 10 Q. B. 111; 6 Exch. 903. See DELIVERY; BAILMENT; SALE.

Of a Dedication. See that title.

Of Bills of Exchange. An engagement to pay the bill in money when due. 4 East 72; Byles, Bills 288.

An acceptance is said to be:

Absolute, which is a positive engagement to pay the bill according to its tenor.

Conditional, which is an undertaking to pay the bill on a contingency.

The holder is not bound to receive such an acceptance, but if he does receive it, must observe its terms; 4 M. & S. 466; Freeman v. Perot, 2 Wash. C. C. 485, Fed. Cas. No. 5,087; Dan. Neg. Inst. 411. For some examples of what do and what do not constitute conditional acceptances, see 6 C. & P. 218; 3 C. B. 841; Heavenin v. Donnell, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 245, 45 Am. Dec. 302; Campbell v. Pettengill, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 126, 20 Am. Dec. 349; Swansey v. Breck, 10 Ala. 533; Hutton v. Ingraham, 1 Strob. (S. C.) 271; Tasse v. Church, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 346; Cook v. Wolfendale, 105 Mass. 401; Marshall v. Clary, 44 Ga. 513; Ray v. Faulkner, 73 Ill. 469; Stevens v. Power Co., 62 Me. 498; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 407; Palmer v. Rice, 36 Neb. 844, 55 N. W. 256; Vanstrum v. Liljengren, 37 Minn. 191, 33 N. W. 555; Gerow v. Riffe, 29 W. Va. 462, 2 S. E. 104.

Express or absolute, which is an undertaking in direct and express terms to pay the bill.

Implied, which is an undertaking to pay the bill inferred from acts of a character which fairly warrant such an inference.

Where one receives certain goods and sells them, knowing that a draft has been drawn on him for their price, the retaining of the proceeds is equivalent to an acceptance of the draft; Hall v. Bank, 133 Ill. 234, 24 N. E. 546.

If the payee writes upon a bill of exchange drawn upon him the words "payable the 15th day of May, 1883," and signs it, it constitutes a qualified acceptance; Vanstrum v. Liljengren, 37 Minn. 191, 33 N. W. 555.

Partial, which is one varying from the tenor of the bill.

An acceptance to pay part of the amount for which the bill is drawn, 1 Strange 214; Freeman v. Perot, 2 Wash. C. C. 485, Fed. Cas. No. 5,087; or to pay at a different time, 14 Jur. 806; Hatcher v. Stoiworth, 25 Miss. 376; Molloy, b. 2, c. 10, § 20; or at a different place, 4 M. & S. 462, would be partial.

Qualified, which is either conditional or partial, and introduces a variation in the sum, time, mode, or place of payment; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 414.

Supra protest, which is the acceptance of the bill after protest for non-acceptance by the drawee, for the honor of the drawer or a particular indorser. See ACCEPTOR SUPRA PROTEST.

When a bill has been accepted supra protest for the honor of one party to the bill, it may be accepted supra protest by another individual for the honor of another; Beawes, Lex Merc. Bills of Exchange, pl. 52; 5 Camp. 447.

The acceptance must be made by the drawee or some one authorized to act for him. The drawee must have capacity to act and bind himself for the payment of the bill, or it may be treated as dishonored. See ACCEPTOR SUPRA PROTEST; 2 Q. B. 16.

The acceptance and delivery of negotiable paper on Sunday is void between the parties, but if dated falsely as of another day, it is good in the hands of an innocent holder; Harrison v. Powers, 76 Ga. 218.

It may be made before the bill is drawn, in which case it must be in writing; Wilson v. Clements, 3 Mass. 1; Goodrich v. Gordon, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 6; Kendrick v. Campbell, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 522; Williams v. Winans, 14 N. J. L. 339; Vance v. Ward, 2 Dana (Ky.) 95; Read v. Marsh, 5 B. Monr. (Ky.) 8, 41 Am. Dec. 253; Howland v. Carson, 15 Pa. 453; Beach v. Bank, 2 Ind. 488; Lewis v. Kramer, 3 Md. 265; Coolidge v. Payson, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 66, 4 L. Ed. 185; Cassel v. Dows, 1 Blatchf. 335, Fed. Cas. No. 2,502. It may be made after it is drawn and before it comes due, which is the usual course, or after it becomes due; 1 H. Bla. 313; Williams v. Winans, 14 N. J. L. 339; or even after a previous refusal to accept; 5 East 514; Mitchell v. Degrand, 1 Mas. 176, Fed. Cas. No. 9,661. It must be made within twenty-four hours after presentment, or the holder may treat the bill as dishonored; Chit. Bills, 212, 217. And upon refusal to accept, the bill is at once dishonored, and should be protested; Chit. Bills, 217.

It may be in writing on the bill itself or on another paper; 4 East 91; Nimocks v. Woody, 97 N. C. 1, 2 S. E. 249, 2 Am. St. Rep. 268; and it seems that the holder may insist on having a written acceptance, and in default thereof consider the bill as dishonored; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 406; or it may be oral; 6 C. & P. 218; Leonard v. Mason, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 522; Williams v. Winans, 14 N. J. L. 339; Walker v. Lide, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 249, 44 Am. Dec. 252; Edson v. Fuller, 22

N. H. 183; Pierce v. Kittredge, 115 Mass. 374; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. Ed. 245; Sturges v. Bank, 75 Ill. 595; 11 Moore 320 (by the Law Merchant; Poll Contr. 164); an acceptance by telegraph has been held good; Coffman v. Campbell, 87 Ill. 98; Central Sav. Bank v. Richards, 109 Mass. 414; Garrettson v. Bank, 39 Fed. 163, 7 L. R. A. 428; In re Armstrong, 41 Fed. 381; Garrettson v. Bank, 47 Fed. 867; North Atchison Bank v. Garrettson, 51 Fed. 168, 2 C. C. A. 145; but must now be in writing in many states. The usual form is by writing "accepted" across the face of the bill and signing the acceptor's name; 1 Pars. Contr. 223; 1 Man. & R. 90; but the drawee's name alone is sufficient, or any words of equivalent force to accepted. See Byles, Bills 147; 1 Atk. 611; 1 Man. & R. 90; Parkhurst v. Dickerson, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 307; Orear v. McDonald, 9 Gill. (Md.) 350, 52 Am. Dec. 703. So if the drawee writes the word "accept" and signs his name; Cortelyou v. Maiben, 22 Neb. 697, 36 N. W. 159, 3 Am. St. Rep. 284.

The drawee cannot make his acceptance after the bill has been delivered to the holder's agent, though it had not been communicated to the holder; Fort Dearborn Bank v. Carter, 152 Mass. 34, 25 N. E. 27. See Trent Tile Co. v. Bank, 54 N. J. L. 599, 25 Atl. 411.

Unless forbidden by statute, a parol promise upon sufficient consideration to accept a bill of exchange binds the acceptor; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. Ed. 245; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 12 Sup. Ct. 154, 35 L. Ed. 956; Sturges v. Bank, 75 Ill. 595; 11 M. & W. 383; Neumann v. Schroeder, 71 Tex. 81, 8 S. W. 632; Short v. Blount, 99 N. C. 49, 5 S. E. 190; Kelley v. Greenough, 9 Wash. 659, 38 Pac. 158; Barney v. Worthington, 37 N. Y. 112; Bank of Rutland v. Woodruff, 34 Vt. 92; [1894] 2 Q. B. 885; contra, Haerberle v. O'Day, 61 Mo. App. 390; Erickson v. Inman, 34 Or. 44, 54 Pac. 949; but the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act in force in nearly all the states (see NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS) requires a written acceptance; see much learning in Walker v. Lide, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 249, 44 Am. Dec. 253; Allen v. Leavens, 26 Or. 164, 37 Pac. 488, 26 L. R. A. 620, 46 Am. St. Rep. 613; Lindley v. Bank, 76 Ia. 629, 41 N. W. 381, 2 L. R. A. 709, 14 Am. St. Rep. 254.

As to what law governs the mode of acceptance, see 61 L. R. A. 196, n., where the cases are examined and the conclusion reached that the weight of authority is in favor of the law of the place where the agreement to accept was made, rather than that of the place of payment.

Where the holder of an overdue bill of exchange agrees by parol to accept payment in instalments, the failure of acceptor to carry out his contract does not release the drawer; Trotter v. Phillips, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 279.

An acceptance made payable at a bank authorizes its payment and charge to the acceptor's account; 18 L. J. Q. B. 218; Byles, Bills 198. But the acceptor is not liable unless he assented to its being so made payable; id. 188; 14 East 582; and he may prove that he was ready to pay at the place named; Green v. Goings, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 652.

The acceptance of forged paper and its payment by the drawer to a bona fide holder gives no right of action to recover back the money; Hertsman v. Henshaw, 11 How. (U. S.) 177, 13 L. Ed. 653; so also of bills accompanied by a forged bill of lading; Hoffman & Co. v. Bank, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 181, 20 L. Ed. 366.

See CHECK. As to acceptance of offer, see OFFER.

See BILL OF EXCHANGE; PROTEST; ACCEPTOR.

ACCEPTILATION. In Civil Law. A release made by a creditor to his debtor of his debt without receiving any consideration. Ayl. Pand. tit. 26, p. 570. It is a species of donation, but not subject to the forms of the latter, and is valid unless in fraud of creditors. Merlin, Répert.

Acceptilation may be defined verborum conceptio qua creditor debitori, quod debet, acceptum fert; or, a certain arrangement of words by which, on the question of the debtor, the creditor, wishing to dissolve the obligation, answers that he admits as received what in fact he has not received. The acceptilation is an imaginary payment; Dig. 46. 4. 1. 19; Dig. 2. 14. 27. 9; Inst. 3. 30. 1.

ACCEPTOR. One who accepts a bill of exchange. 3 Kent 75.

The party who undertakes to pay a bill of exchange in the first instance.

The drawee is in general the acceptor; and unless the drawee accepts, the bill is dishonored. The acceptor of a bill is the principal debtor, and the drawer the surety. He is bound, though he accepted without consideration and for the sole accommodation of the drawer. By his acceptance he admits the drawer's handwriting; for before acceptance it was incumbent upon him to inquire into the genuineness of the drawer's handwriting; 3 Kent 75; 3 Burr. 1384; 1 W. Bla. 390; Levy v. Bank, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 234, 1 L. Ed. 814.

The drawee by acceptance only vouches for the genuineness of the signature of the drawer and not of the body of the instrument; White v. Bank, 64 N. Y. 316, 21 Am. Rep. 612; Young & Son v. Lehman, Durr & Co., 63 Ala. 519.

See ACCEPTANCE.

ACCEPTOR SUPRA PROTEST. One who accepts a bill which has been protested, for the honor of the drawer or any one of the endorsers.

Any person, even the drawee himself, may accept a bill supra protest; Byles, Bills *262, and two or more persons may become acceptors supra protest for the honor of different persons. A general acceptance supra protest is taken to be for the honor of the drawer; Byles, Bills *263. The obligation of an acceptor supra protest is not absolute but only to pay if the drawee do not; 16 East 391. See Schofield v. Bayard, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 491; Baring v. Clark, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 220; Exeter Bank v. Gordon, 8 N. H. 66. An acceptor supra protest has his remedy against the person for whose honor he accepted, and against all persons who stand prior to that person. If he takes up the bill for the honor of the endorser, he stands in the light of an endorsee paying full value for the bill, and has the same remedies to which an endorsee would be entitled against all prior parties, and he can, of course, sue the drawer and endorser; 1 Esp. 112; 3 Kent 75; Chit. Bills 312. The acceptor supra protest is required to give the same notice, in order to charge a party, which is necessary to be given by other holders; Baring v. Clark, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 220.

If a bill is accepted and is subsequently dishonored, the acceptor cannot then accept for the honor of the endorser, as he is already bound; 13 Ves. Jr. 180.

See ACCEPTANCE.

ACCESS. Approach, or the means or power of approaching.

Sometimes by access is understood sexual intercourse; at other times, the opportunity of communicating together so that sexual intercourse may have taken place, is also called access.

In this sense a man who can readily be in company with his wife is said to have access to her; and in that case her issue are presumed to be his issue. But this presumption may be rebutted by positive evidence that no sexual intercourse took place; 1 Turn. & R. 141.

Parents are not allowed to prove non-access for the purpose of bastardizing the issue of the wife, whether the action be civil or criminal, or whether the proceeding is one of settlement or bastardy, or to recover property claimed as heir at law; Bull. N. P. 113; Bowles v. Bingham, 2 Munf. (Va.) 442, 5 Am. Dec. 497; State v. Pettaway, 10 N. C. 623; Cross v. Cross, 3 Pal. Ch. (N. Y.) 139, 23 Am. Dec. 778; Mink v. State, 60 Wis. 584, 19 N. W. 445, 50 Am. Rep. 386; Bell v. Territory, 8 Okl. 75, 56 Pac. 853; State v. Lavin, 80 Ia. 555, 46 N. W. 553; Egbert v. Greenwalt, 44 Mich. 245, 6 N. W. 654, 38 Am. Rep. 266; Tioga County v. South Creek Township, 75 Pa. 436, where the common law rule was applied in an extreme case, and was held not to be affected by the statute abolishing the disqualification of parties by reason of interest. The rule has been held to be modified by statutes; Evans v. State, 165 Ind. 369, 74 N. E. 244, 75 N. E. 651, 6 Ann. Cas. 813, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619 (where the cases are collected in a note); State v. McDowell, 101 N. C. 734, 7 S. E. 785, which changes the rule as laid down in Boykin v. Boykin, 70 N. C. 263, 16 Am. Rep. 776.

Non-access is not presumed from the mere fact that husband and wife lived apart; 1 Gale & D. 7. See 3 C. & P. 215; 1 Sim. & S. 153; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 28.

In Canon Law. The right to some benefit at some future time.

ACCESSION (Lat.). An increase or addition; that which lies next to a thing, and is supplementary and necessary to the principal thing; that which arises or is produced from the principal thing. Calvinus, Lex.

A manner of acquiring the property in a thing which becomes united with that which a person already possesses.

The doctrine of property arising from accessions is grounded on the rights of occupancy. It is said to be of six kinds in the Roman law.

First. That which assigns to the owner of a thing its products, as the fruit of trees, the young of animals.

Second. That which makes a man the owner of a thing which is made of another's property, upon payment of the value of the material taken. See La. Civ. Code, art. 491. As where wine, bread, or oil is made of another man's grapes or olives; 2 Bla. Com. 404; Babcock v. Gill, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 288.

Third. That which gives the owner of land new land formed by gradual deposit. See ACCRETION; ALLUVION.

Fourth. That which gives the owner of a thing the property in what is added to it by way of adorning or completing it; as if a tailor should use the cloth of B. in repairing A.'s coat, all would belong to A.; but B. would have an action against both A. and the tailor for the cloth so used. This doctrine holds in the common law; F. Moore 20; Poph. 38; Brooke, Abr. Proprietie 23.

Fifth. That which gives islands formed in a stream to the owner of the adjacent lands on either side.

Sixth. That which gives a person the property in things added to his own so that they cannot be separated without damage. Guyot, Répert. Univ.

Accessio includes both accession and accretion as used in the common law.

An accessory obligation, and sometimes also the person who enters into an obligation as surety in which another is principal. Calvinus, Lex.

ACCESSION. Coming into possession of a right or office; increase; augmentation; addition.

The right to all which one's own property produces, whether that property be movable or immovable, and the right to that which is united to it by accessory, either naturally or artificially. 2 Kent 360; 2 Bla. Com. 404.

If a man hath raised a building upon his own ground with the material of another, or if a man shall have built with his own materials upon the ground of another, in either case the edifice becomes the property of him to whom the ground belongs; for every building is an accession to the ground upon which it stands; and the owner of the ground, if liable at all, is only liable to the owner of the materials for the value of them; Inst. 2. 1. 29, 30; 2 Kent 362. And the same rule holds where trees, vines, vegetables, or fruits are planted or sown in the ground of another; Inst. 2. 1. 31, 32.

The building of a rail fence on another's land vests the rails in the owner of the land; Wentz v. Fincher, 34 N. C. 297, 55 Am. Dec. 416. And see Merritt v. Johnson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 473, 5 Am. Dec. 289; Pulcifer v. Page, 32 Me. 404, 54 Am. Dec. 582.

If the materials of one person are united by labor to the materials of another, so as to form a single article, the property in the joint product is, in the absence of any agreement, in the owner of the principal part of the materials by accession; Merritt v. Johnson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 473, 5 Am. Dec. 289; Stevens v. Briggs, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 177; Glover v. Austin, 6 id. 209; Pulcifer v. Page, 32 Me. 404, 54 Am. Dec. 582, and note (where the whole subject is treated); Beers v. St. John, 16 Conn. 322; Inst. 2. 1. 26; Eaton v. Lynde, 15 Mass. 242; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311, 7 Am. Rep. 653; Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 305; Stephens v. Santee, 49 N. Y. 35; Mack v. Snell, 140 N. Y. 193, 35 N. E. 493, 37 Am. St. Rep. 534. But a vessel built of materials belonging to different persons, it has been said, will belong to the owner of the keel, according to the rule, proprietas totius navis carinae causam sequitur; 2 Kent 361; Glover v. Austin, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 209; Merritt v. Johnson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 473, 5 Am. Dec. 289; Johnson v. Hunt, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 139; but see Coursin's Appeal, 79 Pa. 220. It is said to be the doctrine of the civil law, that the rule is the same though the adjunction of materials may have been dishonestly contrived; for, in determining the right of property in such a case, regard is had only to the things joined, and not to the persons, as where the materials are changed in species; Wood, Inst. 93; Inst. 2. 1. 25. And see ADJUNCTION.

The tree belongs to the owner of the land on which the root is, and its fruit is to the owner of the tree; 1 Ld. Raym. 737; although limbs overhang a neighbor's land; Hoffman v. Armstrong, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 337. The original title to ice is in the possessor of the water where it is formed; State v. Pottmeyer, 33 Ind. 402, 5 Am. Rep. 224; Higgins v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 318, 2 N. W. 13, 32 Am. Rep. 160; but the sale of ice in the water is a sale of personality; id.

Where, by agreement, an article is manufactured for another, the property in the article, while making and when finished, vests in him who furnished the whole or the principal part of the materials; and the maker, if he did not furnish the same, has simply a lien upon the article for his pay; Jones v. Gardner, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 268; Eaton v. Lynde, 15 Mass. 242; Worth v. Northam, 26 N. C. 102; Foster v. Warner, 49 Mich. 641, 14 N. W. 673; Eaton v. Munroe, 52 Me. 63.

The increase of an animal, as a general thing, belongs to the owner of the dam or mother; Arkansas Valley Land and Cattle Co. v. Mann, 130 U. S. 69, 9 Sup. Ct. 458, 32 L. Ed. 854; Stewart v. Ball's Adm'r, 33 Mo.

154; Hanson v. Millett, 55 Me. 184; Hazelbaker v. Goodfellow, 64 Ill. 238; but, if it be let to another, the person who thus becomes the temporary proprietor will be entitled to its increase; Putnam v. Wyley, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 435, 5 Am. Dec. 346; Inst. 2. 1. 38; Hanson v. Millett, 55 Me. 184; Stewart v. Ball's Adm'r, 33 Mo. 154; Kellogg v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 131, 8 N. W. 699, 41 Am. Rep. 151; though it has been held that this would not be the consequence of simply putting a mare to pasture, in consideration of her services; Heartley v. Beaum, 2 Pa. 166. The increase of a female animal held under a bailment or executory contract belongs to the bailor or vendor until the agreed price is paid; Allen v. Delano, 55 Me. 113, 92 Am. Dec. 573; Elmore v. Fitzpatrick, 56 Ala. 400. See note as to title to increase of animals; 17 L. R. A. 81. The Civil Code of Louisiana, following the Roman law, made a distinction in respect of the issue of slaves, which, though born during the temporary use or hiring of their mothers, belonged not to the hirer, but to the permanent owner; Inst. 2. 1. 37; and see Jordan v. Thomas, 31 Miss. 557; Seay v. Bacon, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 99, 67 Am. Dec. 601; 2 Kent 361; Fowler v. Merrill, 11 How. (U. S.) 396, 13 L. Ed. 736. But the issue of slaves born during a tenancy for life belonged to the tenant for life; Bohn v. Headley, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 257.

If there be a sale, mortgage, or pledge of a chattel, carried into effect by delivery or by a recording of the mortgage where that is equivalent to a delivery, and other materials are added, afterwards, by the labor of the vendor or mortgagor, these pass with the principal by accession; Farwell v. Smith, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 83; Jenckes v. Goffe, 1 R. I. 511.

If, by the labor of one man, the property of another has been converted into a thing of different species, so that its identity is destroyed, the original owner can only recover the value of the property in its unconverted state, and the article itself will belong to the person who wrought the conversion, if he wrought it believing the material to be his own. Such a change is said to be wrought when wheat is made into bread, olives into oil, or grapes into wine; Inst. 2. 1. 25; Silbury v. McCoon, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 332; Year B. 5 H. VII. 15; Brooke, Abr. Property 23; or bricks out of clay; Baker v. Meisch, 29 Neb. 227, 45 N. W. 685.

But, if there be a mere change of form or value, which does not destroy the identity of the materials, the original owner may still reclaim them or recover their value as thus improved; Brooke, Abr. Property 23; F. Moore 20; Wright v. Douglass, 2 N. Y. 379; Frost v. Willard, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 440. So, if the change have been wrought by a wilful trespasser, or by one who knew that the materials were not his own; in such case, however radical the change may have been, the owner may reclaim them, or recover their value in their new shape; Wooden-Ware Co. v. U. S., 106 U. S. 432, 1 Sup. Ct. 398, 27 L. Ed. 230, thus, where whiskey was made out of another's corn, Wright v. Douglass, 2 N. Y. 379; shingles out of another's trees, Chandler v. Edson, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 362; coals out of another's wood, Curtis v. Groat, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 168, 5 Am. Dec. 204; Riddle v. Driver, 12 Ala. 590; leather out of another's hides, Hyde v. Cookson, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 92; in all these cases, the change having been made by one who knew the materials were another's, the original owner was held to be entitled to recover the property, or its value in the improved or converted state. And see Snyder v. Vaux, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 427, 21 Am. Dec. 466; Betts v. Lee, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 348, 4 Am. Dec. 368; Willard v. Rice, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 493, 45 Am. Dec. 226.

An aerolite which is imbedded to a depth of 3 feet is the property of the owner of the land on which it falls, rather than of the person who finds it; Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Ia. 71, 52 N. W. 1124, 17 L. R. A. 788, 41 Am. St. Rep. 481.

In International Law. The absolute or conditional acceptance, by one or several states, of a treaty already concluded between other sovereignties. Merlin, Répert. Accession.

It may be of two kinds: First, the formal entrance of a third state into a treaty so that such state becomes a party to it; and this can only be with the consent of the original parties. The accession becomes itself a treaty, and is frequently invited or provided for in the original treaty, as in the Declaration of Paris and the Convention of Geneva, 1864, Art. 9, and that of 1868, Art. 15. To the first Geneva Convention the accession of Great Britain was signified Feb. 18, 1865. So the Declaration of St. Petersburg, 1868, relative to explosive bullets is said to have "been acceded to by all the civilized states of the world." Higgins, The Hague and Other Conferences 23. Second, a state may accede to a treaty between other states solely for the purpose of guarantee, in which case, though a party, it is affected by the treaty only as a guarantor. 1 Oppenheim, Int. L. sec. 532.

ACCESSORY. Any thing which is joined to another thing as an ornament, or to render it more perfect.

For example, the halter of a horse, the frame of a picture, the keys of a house, and the like, each belong to the principal thing. The sale of the materials of a newspaper establishment will carry with it, as an accessory, the subscription list; McFarland v. Stewart, 2 Watts (Pa.) 111, 26 Am. Dec. 109; but a bequest of a house would not carry the furniture in it, as accessory to it. Domat, Lois Civ. Part. 2, liv. 4, tit. 2, s. 4, n. 1. Accessorium non ducit sed sequitur principale. Co. Litt. 152, a.

SEE ACCESSION; ADJUNCTION; APPURTENANCES.

In Criminal Law. He who is not the chief actor in the perpetration of the offence, nor present at its performance, but is some way concerned therein, either before or after the fact committed.

An accessory before the fact is one who, being absent at the time of the crime committed, yet procures, counsels, or commands another to commit it. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 615.

Any one who incites persons or commands another to commit a felony is an accessory before fact and punishable as the principal felon. An accessory is never present at the commitment of the crime; Odger, C. L. 132.

In some states an accessory before the fact is treated as a principal, as also in England by statute; 2 C. & K. 887; L. R. 1 C. C. R. 77.

With regard to those cases where the principal goes beyond the terms of the solicitation, the approved test is, "Was the event alleged to be the crime to which the accused is charged to be accessory, a probable effect of the act which he counselled?" 1 F. & F. Cr. Cas. 242; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 181. When the act is committed through the agency of a person who has no legal discretion or will, as in the case of a child or an insane person, the incitor, though absent when the crime was committed, will be considered, not an accessory, for none can be accessory to the acts of a madman, but a principal in the first degree; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 514; U. S. v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 469, 6 L. Ed. 693. But if the instrument is aware of the consequences of his act, he is a principal in the first degree, and the employer, if he is absent when the act is committed, is an accessory before the fact; 1 R. & R. Cr. Cas. 363; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 37; 1 C. & K. 589; or if he is present, as a principal in the second degree; 1 Fost. Cr. Cas. 349; unless the instrument concur in the act merely for the purpose of detecting and punishing the employer, in which case he is considered as an innocent agent.

An accessory after the fact is one who, knowing a felony to have been committed, receives, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon; 4 Bla. Com. 37.

In England one who harbors a felon, knowing him to be a felon (unless it is a wife harboring her husband). This does not apply to a misdemeanor. In treason such person is deemed a principal traitor; Odger, C. L. 132.

No one who is a principal can be an accessory; but if acquitted as principal he may be indicted as an accessory after the fact; State v. Davis, 14 R. I. 283.

In certain crimes, there can be no accessories; all who are concerned are principals, whether they were present or absent at the time of their commission. These are treason, and all offences below the degree of felony; 4 Bla. Com. 35; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 453; Com. v. McAtee, 8 Dana (Ky.) 28; Williams v. State, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 58; Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 448; Schmidt v. State, 14 Mo. 137; Sanders v. State, 18 Ark. 198; Com. v. Burns, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 182; Stevens v. People, 67 Ill. 587; Griffith v. State, 90 Ala. 583, 8 South. 812; U. S. v. Boyd, 45 Fed. 851. Such is the English rule; but in the United States it appears not to be determined as regards the cases of persons assisting traitors; Sergeant, Const. Law 382; In re Burr, 4 Cr. 472, 501; U. S. v. Fries, 3 Dall. 515, 1 L. Ed. 701. See Charge to Grand Jury, 2 Wall. Jr. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 18,276; U. S. v. Hanway, 2 Wall. Jr. 139, Fed. Cas. No. 15,299; Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 147, 21 L. Ed. 426; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 347, 20 L. Ed. 439. That there cannot be an accessory in cases of treason, see Davis, Cr. L. 38. Contra, 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 224.

There can be no accessory when there is no principal; if a principal in a transaction be not liable under our laws, no one can be charged as a mere accessory to him; U. S. v. Libby, 1 Woodb. & M. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 15,597; Armstrong v. State, 28 Tex. App. 526, 13 S. W. 864. But see Searles v. State, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 331. This rule was changed by the Stat. 1 Anne, 2, c. 9, so that if the principal felon was delivered in any way after conviction and before attainder, as by pardon or being admitted to benefit of clergy, the accessory might be tried; and that rule is substantially enacted by the Ga. Penal Code § 49, but the common law is otherwise unchanged in this country; Smith v. State, 46 Ga. 298.

Where two persons are indicted, one as principal and the other as aider or abettor, the latter may be convicted as principal, where the evidence shows he was the perpetrator of the deed; Bengé v. Com., 92 Ky. 1, 17 S. W. 146.

At common law, an accessory cannot be tried, without his consent, before the conviction of the principal; (unless they are tried together; Fost. Cr. Cas. 360; Com. v. Woodward, Thatch. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 63; Baron v. People, 1 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 246; State v. Groff, 5 N. C. 270; Whitehead v. State, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 278; at least not without some special reason, recognized by law, why the principal has not been tried; Smith v. State, 46 Ga. 298). This is altered by statute in most of the states. This rule is said to have been the outcome of strict medieval logic. The trial of the accused being by sacred or supernatural processes, it would be a shame to the law if the principal were acquitted after the accessory had been hanged. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 508.

But an accessory to a felony committed by several, some of whom have been convicted, may be tried as accessory to a felony committed by these last; but if he be indicted and tried as accessory to a felony committed by them all, and some of them have not been proceeded against, it is error; Stoops v. Com., 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 491, 10 Am.

Dec. 482; Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 484, 20 Am. Dec. 534. If the principal is dead, the accessory cannot, by the common law, be tried at all. Com. v. Phillips, 16 Mass. 423; State v. McDaniel, 41 Tex. 229.

If the principal has been tried and acquitted, a person charged as accessory should be discharged on motion, but if the former is not found the latter may by statute be tried and convicted: United States v. Crane, 4 McLean, 317, Fed. Cas. No. 14,888. The trial of an accessory may proceed where the principal enters a plea of guilty, and his withdrawal of it during the trial of the former does not affect the validity of a conviction.

One indicted as an aider and abettor of the crime of murder may be convicted and sentenced for that offence, notwithstanding the principal offender had been tried previously, and convicted and sentenced for manslaughter only; Goins v. State, 46 Ohio St. 457, 21 N. E. 476.

In offenses less than felony all are principals, and on information charging one as principal he may be convicted of aiding and abetting; [1907] 1 K. B. 40.

See ABETTOR; AIDING AND ABETTING; PRINCIPAL.

ACCESSORY ACTIONS. In Scotch Law. Those which are in some degree subservient to others. Bell Dict.

ACCESSORY CONTRACT. One made for assuring the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others; such as suretyship, mortgages, and pledges.

It is a general rule that payment or release of the debt due, or the performance of a thing required to be performed by the first or principal contract, is a full discharge of such accessory obligation; Pothier, Ob. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2, n. 14; id. n. 182, 186; see 8 Mass. 551; Waring v. Smyth, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 119, 47 Am. Dec. 299; Blodgett v. Wadhams, Lator's Supp. (N. Y.) 65; Ackla v. Ackla, 6 Pa. 228; Whittemore v. Gibbs, 24 N. H. 484; and that an assignment of the principal contract will carry the accessory contract with it; Donley v. Hays, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 400; Jackson v. Blodgett, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 202; Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 515; Crow v. Vance, 4 Ia. 434; Whittemore v. Gibbs, 24 N. H. 484.

If the accessory contract be a contract by which one is to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another, it must, under the statute of frauds, be in writing, and disclose the consideration, either explicitly, or by the use of terms from which it may be implied; 5 M. & W. 128; 5 B. & Ad. 1109; Bickford v. Gibbs, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 156; Campbell v. Knapp, 15 Pa. 27; Gates v. McKee, 13 N. Y. 232, 64 Am. Dec. 545; Spencer v. Carter, 49 N. C. 287; Schoch v. McLane, 62 Mich. 454, 29 N. W. 76. Such a contract is not assignable so as to enable the assignee to sue thereon in his own name; True v.

Fuller, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 140; Lamourleux v. Hewit, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 307. A pledge of property to secure the debt of another does not come within the statute of frauds; Smith v. Mott, 76 Cal. 171, 18 Pac. 260.

ACCIDENT (Lat. accidere,—ad, to, and cadere, to fall). An event which, under the circumstances, is unusual and unexpected. An event the real cause of which cannot be traced, or is at least not apparent. Wabash, St. L. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404, 14 N. E. 391, 2 Am. St. Rep. 193.

The happening of an event without the concurrence of the will of the person by whose agency it was caused; or the happening of an event without any human agency. The burning of a house in consequence of a fire made for the ordinary purposes of cooking or warming the house is an accident of the first kind; the burning of the same house by lightning would be an accident of the second kind; 1 Fonbl. Eq. 374, 375, n.; Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 85; Crutchfield v. R. Co., 76 N. C. 322; Hutchcraft's Ex'r v. Ins. Co., 87 Ky. 300, 8 S. W. 570, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484. An accident may proceed or result from negligence; McCarty v. Ry. Co., 30 Pa. 247; Schneider v. Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 257; and see 11 Q. B. 347; but a misfortune in business is not an accident; Langdon v. Bowen, 46 Vt. 512. As to what the term includes see INSURANCE, sub-tit. Accident Insurance. See INEVITABLE ACCIDENT.

In Equity Practice. Such an unforeseen event, misfortune, loss, act, or omission as is not the result of any negligence or misconduct in the party. Francis, Max. 87; Story, Eq. Jur. § 78.

An occurrence in relation to a contract which was not anticipated by the parties when the same was entered into, and which gives an undue advantage to one of them over the other in a court of law; Jeremy, Eq. 358. This definition is objected to, because, as accidents may arise in relation to other things besides contracts, it is inaccurate in confining accidents to contracts; besides, it does not exclude cases of unanticipated occurrence resulting from the negligence or misconduct of the party seeking relief. See also 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 628. In many instances it closely resembles MISTAKE, which see.

In general, courts of equity will relieve a party who cannot obtain justice at law from the consequences of an accident which will justify the interposition of a court of equity.

The jurisdiction which equity exerts in case of accident is mainly of two sorts: over bonds with penalties to prevent a forfeiture where the failure is the result of accident; 2 Freem. Ch. 128; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 629; Rives v. Toulmin, 25 Ala. 452; Garvin v. Squires, 9 Ark. 533, 50 Am. Dec. 224; Chase v. Barrett, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 148; Price's Ex'r v. Fuqua's Adm'r, 4 Munf. (Va.)

68; Streeper v. Williams, 48 Pa. 450; as sickness; Jones v. Woodhull, 1 Root (Conn.) 298; Doty v. Whittlesey, 1 Root (Conn.) 310; or where a bond has been lost; Deans v. Dortch, 40 N. C. 331; but if the penalty be liquidated damages, there can be no relief; Merwin, Eq. § 409. And, second, where a negotiable or other instrument has been lost, in which case no action lay at law, but where equity will allow the one entitled to recover upon giving proper indemnity; 4 Price 176; 7 B. & C. 90; Savannah Nat. Bank v. Haskins, 101 Mass. 370, 3 Am. Rep. 373; Bisph. Eq. § 177. In some states it has been held that a court of law can render judgment for the amount, requiring the defendant to give a bond of indemnity; Bridgeford v. Mfg. Co., 34 Conn. 546, 91 Am. Dec. 744; Swift v. Stevens, 8 Conn. 431; Almy v. Reed, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 421. Relief against a penal bond can now be obtained in almost all common-law courts; Merwin, Eq. § 411.

The ground of equitable interference where a party has been defeated in a suit at law to which he might have made a good defence had he discovered the facts in season, may be referred also to this head; Jones v. Kilgore, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 63; Pearce v. Chastain, 3 Ga. 226, 46 Am. Dec. 423; Brandon v. Green, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 130; Meek v. Howard, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 502; Davis v. Tileston, 6 How. (U. S.) 114, 12 L. Ed. 366; see Pemberton v. Kirk, 39 N. C. 178, but in such case there must have been no negligence on the part of the defendant; Semple v. McGatagan, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 98; Brandon v. Green, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 130; Miller v. McGuire, Morr. (Ia.) 150; Cosby's Heirs v. Wickliffe, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 120.

Under this head equity will grant relief in cases of the defective exercise of a power in favor of a purchaser, creditor, wife, child, or charity, but not otherwise; Bisph. Eq. § 182. So also in other cases, viz., where a testator cancels a will, supposing that a later will is duly executed, which it is not; where boundaries have been accidentally confused; where there has been an accidental omission to endorse a promissory note, etc.; id. § 183.

It is exercised by equity where there is not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law; Tucker v. Madden, 44 Me. 206; but not where such a remedy exists; Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 379; Grant v. Quick, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 612; and a complete excuse must be made; English v. Savage, 14 Ala. 342.

See INEVITABLE ACCIDENT; MISTAKE; FORTUITOUS EVENT; NEGLIGENCE; INSURANCE; ACT OF GOD.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

ACCIDENTAL. Not according to the usual course of things; casual; fortuitous.

United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 9 Sup. Ct. 755, 33 L. Ed. 60.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH. See DEATH; INSURANCE.

ACCOMENDA. A contract which takes place when an individual intrusts personal property with the master of a vessel, to be sold for their joint account.

In such case, two contracts take place: first, the contract called mandatum, by which the owner of the property gives the master power to dispose of it; and the contract of partnership, in virtue of which the profits are to be divided between them. One party runs the risk of losing his capital, the other his labor. If the sale produces no more than first cost, the owner takes all the proceeds: it is only the profits which are to be divided; Emerigon, Mar. Loans, s. 5.

ACCOMMODATION PAPER. Promissory notes or bills of exchange made, accepted, or endorsed without any consideration therefor.

Such paper, in the hands of the party to whom it is made or for whose benefit the accommodation is given, is open to the defence of want of consideration, but when taken by third parties in the usual course of business, is governed by the same rules as other paper; 2 Kent 86; 1 M. & W. 212; 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 282; Piercion v. Boyd, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 33; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Rathbone, 26 Vt. 19, 58 Am. Dec. 200; Yates v. Donaldson, 5 Md. 339, 61 Am. Dec. 283; Mosser v. Criswell, 150 Pa. 409, 24 Atl. 618.

Where an accommodation note is purchased from the payee at a usurious rate, it is void as against the accommodation maker, though it was represented as business paper; Whedon v. Hogan, 8 Misc. Rep. 323, 28 N. Y. Supp. 554.

An endorsement on accommodation paper may be withdrawn before it is discounted unless rights have in the meantime, for valuable consideration, attached to others; Berkeley v. Tinsley, 88 Va. 1001, 14 S. E. 842.

The Neg. Instr. Acts do not change the former rules as to who may become accommodation parties. Selover, Neg. Instr. 105.

ACCOMMODATUM. The same as commodatum, q. v.; Anders. Law Dict., quoting Sir William Jones. The word is not found in Kent, or in Edw. Bailments.

ACCOMPLICE (Lat. ad and complicare—con, with, together, plicare, to fold, to wrap,—to fold together).

In Criminal Law. One who is concerned in the commission of a crime.

"One who is in some way concerned in the commission of a crime, though not as a principal." Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 152, 95 Am. Dec. 474.

"One of many equally concerned in a felony, the term being generally applied to those who are admitted to give evidence against their fellow criminals for the furtherance of justice, which might otherwise be eluded." Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 152, 95 Am. Dec. 474.

"One who being present aids by acts or encourages by words the principal offender in the commission of the offense," is erroneous as a definition; such person is a principal; Smith v. State, 13 Tex. App. 507. He must in some manner assist or participate in the criminal act, and by that connection he becomes equally involved in guilt with the other party; People v. Smith, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 626; Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 152, 95 Am. Dec. 474. The purchaser of liquor sold in violation of the law is not an accomplice; State v. Teahan, 50 Conn. 92; People v. Smith, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 626; nor is a minor child who is coerced into assisting in an unlawful act; People v. Miller, 66 Cal. 468, 6 Pac. 99; Beal v. State, 72 Ga. 200; nor one who does not immediately disclose the fact that a homicide has been committed; Bird v. U. S., 187 U. S. 118, 23 Sup. Ct. 42, 47 L. Ed. 100; nor one who joins in a game with others who are betting, but does not bet himself; Bass v. State, 37 Ala. 469.

The term in its fullness includes in its meaning all persons who have been concerned in the commission of a crime, all participes criminis, whether they are considered in strict legal propriety as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact; Fost. Cr. Cas. 341; 1 Russ. Cr. 21; 4 Bla. Com. 331; 1 Phil. Ev. 28; Merlin, Répert. Complice.

It has been questioned, whether one who was an accomplice to a suicide can be punished as such. A case occurred in Prussia where a soldier, at the request of his comrade, had cut the latter in pieces; for this he was tried capitally. In the year 1817, a young woman named Leruth received a recompense for aiding a man to kill himself. He put the point of a bistoury on his naked breast, and used the hand of the young woman to plunge it with greater force into his bosom; hearing some noise, he ordered her away. The man, receiving effectual aid, was soon cured of the wound which had been inflicted, and she was tried and convicted of having inflicted the wound. Lepage, Science du Droit, ch. 2, art. 3, § 5. The case of Saul, the King of Israel, and his armor-bearer (1 Sam. xxxi. 4), and of David and the Amalekite (2 Sam. i. 2), will doubtless occur to the reader.

It has been held, that, if one counsels another to commit suicide, he is principal in the murder; for it is a presumption of law that advice has the influence and effect intended by the adviser, unless it is shown to have been otherwise, as, for example, that it was received with scoff or manifestly rejected and ridiculed at the time; Commonwealth v. Bowen, 13 Mass. 359, 7 Am. Dec. 154.

It is now finally settled that it is not a rule of law but of practice only that a jury should not convict on the unsupported testimony of an accomplice. Therefore, if a jury choose to act on such evidence only, the conviction cannot be quashed as bad in law. The better practice is for the judge to advise the jury to acquit, unless the testimony of the accomplice is corroborated, not only as to the circumstances of the offence, but also as to the participation of the accused in the transaction; and when several parties are charged, that it is not sufficient that the accomplice should be confirmed, as to one or more of the prisoners, to justify a conviction of those prisoners with respect to whom there is no confirmation; 1 Leach 464; 31 How. St. Tr. 967; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 20; Com. v. Savory, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 535; Collins v. People, 98 Ill. 584, 38 Am. Rep. 105; Flanagan v. State, 25 Ark. 92; People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305; Carroll v. Com., 84 Pa. 107. See 1 Fost. & F. 338; Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 34 Am. Rep. 391, 408.

Though the evidence of an accomplice uncorroborated is sufficient, if the jury are fully convinced of the truth of his statements; Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 143; Collins v. People, 98 Ill. 584, 38 Am. Rep. 105; it is the settled course of practice in England not to convict a prisoner, excepting under very special circumstances, upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice; [1908] 2 K. B. 680; C. of Cr. App. In the federal courts the testimony of an accomplice need not necessarily be corroborated; Ahearn v. U. S., 158 Fed. 606, 85 C. C. A. 428; it should be received with caution; U. S. v. Ybanez, 53 Fed. 536; State v. Minor, 117 Mo. 302, 22 S. W. 1085; State v. Patterson, 52 Kan. 335, 34 Pac. 784.

This general statement is substantially the result of the cases in both countries as to the treatment of the testimony of an accomplice. As to the corroboration required, the cases may be divided into three classes, requiring corroboration—1. Of that part of the testimony which connects the prisoner with the crime. 2. Of a material part of the testimony. 3. Of any portion of the testimony. The cases may be found in an able note in 71 Am. Dec. 671.

An accomplice, upon making a full disclosure, has a just claim but not a legal right to recommendation for a pardon, which cannot however be pleaded in bar to the indictment; U. S. v. Ford, 99 U. S. 594, 25 L. Ed. 399; Ex parte Wells, 18 How. (U. S.) 307, 15 L. Ed. 421; but he may use it to put off the trial, in order to give him time to apply for a pardon; id.; Cowp. 331; 1 Leach 115.

An accomplice is not incompetent when indicted separately; State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452, 22 S. W. 378.

See KING'S EVIDENCE; TROVER; ACCESSORY; ABORTION.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION. An agreement between two parties to give and accept something in satisfaction of a right of action which one has against the other, which when performed is a bar to all actions upon this account; generally used in the phrase "accord and satisfaction." 3 Bla. Com. 15; Bacon, Abr. Accord; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Hamill, 5 Md. 170. It may be pleaded to all actions except real actions; Bacon, Abr. Accord (B); Pulliam v. Taylor, 50 Miss. 257.

Though here correctly defined as now recognized as "an agreement," it should be borne in mind that the acceptance of satisfaction for damages caused by a tort was recognized as a bar to a subsequent action long before the recognition of the validity of contracts. This is shown by Professor Ames in 9 Harv. L. Rev. 285, by authorities as far back as the time of Edward I. The recognition of an accord as a valid bilateral contract was a tardy one as shown by the early cases collected in 17 Harv. L. Rev. 459, though it may now be considered as a contract for the breach of which an action will lie; Very v. Levy, 13 How. (U. S.) 345, 14 L. Ed. 173; Savage v. Everman, 70 Pa. 319, 10 Am. Rep. 680; Schweider v. Lang, 29 Minn. 254, 13 N. W. 33, 43 Am. Rep. 202; White v. Gray, 68 Me. 579; Hunt v. Brown, 146 Mass. 253, 15 N. E. 587; Chicora Fertilizer Co. v. Dunan, 91 Md. 144, 46 Atl. 347, 50 L. R. A. 401; 15 Q. B. 677; 10 C. B. (N. S.) 259.

It must be legal. An agreement to drop a criminal prosecution, as a satisfaction for an assault and imprisonment, is void; 5 East 294; Smith v. Grable, 14 Ia. 429; Walan v. Kerby, 99 Mass. 1.

It must be advantageous to the creditor, and he must receive an actual benefit therefrom which he would not otherwise have had; Keeler v. Neal, 2 Watts (Pa.) 424; Davis v. Noaks, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 497; Hutton v. Stoddart, 83 Ind. 539. Restoring to the plaintiff his chattels or his land, of which the defendant has wrongfully dispossessed him, will not be any consideration to support a promise by the plaintiff not to sue him for those injuries; Bacon, Abra. Accord, A; Jones v. Bullitt, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 49; Blinn v. Chester, 5 Day (Conn.) 360; Williams v. Stanton, 1 Root (Conn.) 426; Le Page v. McCrea, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 164, 19 Am. Dec. 469. The payment of a part of the whole debt due is not a good satisfaction, even if accepted; 1 Stra. 426; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 28; 10 M. & W. 367; 12 Price, Ex. 183; Hardey v. Perkins, 29 Miss. 139, 64 Am. Dec. 136, or an earlier time, it will be sufficient; Goodnow v. Smith, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 414, 29 Am. Dec. 600; and, in general, payment of part suffices if any additional benefit be received; Bowker v. Harris, 30 Vt. 424; Rose v. Hall, 26 Conn. 392, 68 Am. Dec. 402; Keeler v. Salisbury, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 485; Mathis v. Bryson, 49 N. C. 508; Cool v. Stone, 4 Ia. 219; Potter v. Douglass, 44 Conn. 541.

"The result of the modern cases is that the rule only applies when the larger sum is liquidated, and where there is no consideration whatever for the surrender of part of it; and while the general rule must be regarded as well settled, it is considered so far with disfavor as to be confined strictly to cases within it;" Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Clark, 178 U. S. 353, 20 Sup. Ct. 924, 44 L. Ed. 1099, reversing 92 Fed. 968, 35 C. C. A. 120.

Acceptance by several creditors, by way of composition of sums respectively less than their demands, held to bar actions for the residue: Murray v. Snow, 37 Ia. 410; and it makes no difference that one creditor refuses to sign, where the agreement is not upon condition that all should sign; Crawford v. Krueger, 201 Pa. 348, 50 Atl. 931. The receipt of specific property, or the performance of services, if agreed to, is sufficient, whatever its value; Reed v. Bartlett, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 273; Blinn v. Chester, 5 Day (Conn.) 360; Brassell v. Williams, 51 Ala. 349; provided the value be not agreed upon; Howard v. Norton, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 161; but both delivery and acceptance must be proved; Maze v. Miller, 1 Wash. C. C. 328, Fed. Cas. No. 9362; Sinard v. Patterson, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 354; State Bank v. Littlejohn, 18 N. C. 565; Stone v. Miller, 16 Pa. 450; 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 185. See full notes in 20 L. R. A. 785; 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018; 14 id. 954.

It must be certain. An agreement that the defendant shall relinquish the possession of a house in satisfaction, etc., is not valid, unless it is agreed at what time it shall be relinquished; Yelv. 125. See 4 Mod. 88; Bird v. Caritat, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 342, 3 Am. Dec. 433; Frentress v. Markle, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 553; United States v. Clarke, 1 Hempst. 315, Fed. Cas. No. 14,812; Costello v. Cady, 102 Mass. 140.

It must be complete. That is, everything must be done which the party undertakes to do; Comyns, Dig. Accord, B, 4; Cro. Eliz. 46; Eng. L. & Eq. 296; Frentress v. Markle, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 553; Clark v. Dinsmore, 5 N. H. 136; Watkinson v. Inglesby, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 386; Bigelow v. Baldwin, 1 Gray (Mass.) 245; Frost v. Johnson, 8 Ohio 393; Woodruff v. Garland, 8 Md. 188; Overton v. Conner, 50 Tex. 113; Young v. Jones, 64 Me. 563, 18 Am. Rep. 279; but this performance may be merely the substitution of a new undertaking for the old by way of novation if the parties so intended, whereby the original claim is extinguished; 2 B. & Ad. 328; Nassoioy v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 42 N. E. 715, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695; Gerhart Realty Co. v. Assurance Co., 94 Mo. App. 356, 68 S. W. 86; Brunswick & Western R. Co. v. Clem, 80 Ga. 534, 7 S. E. 84; Yazoo & Mississippi Val. R. Co. v. Fulton, 71 Miss. 385, 14 South. 271; Goodrich v. Stanley, 24 Conn. 613; Creager v. Link, 7 Md. 259; 16 Q. B. 1039.

The doctrine that payment by or with the money of a third person is not a discharge of the debtor was established in Cro. Eliz. 541, which was followed in the early American cases, but its doctrine was much limited in 9 C. B. 173, and 10 Exch. 845, where it was held that payment would be good if made either with previous authority or subsequent ratification of the debtor, and that the latter could be made at the trial. This view has prevailed in England and it is held that a plea of payment is sufficient ratification; L. R. 6 Exch. 124.

In this country the weight of authority is in favor of recognizing such payment as a defense, special recognition being accorded to facts showing that the payment was on behalf of the debtor and ratified by him; Snyder v. Pharo, 25 Fed. 398; Hartley v. Sandford, 66 N. J. L. 632, 50 Atl. 454, 55 L. R. A. 206. In New York the early case cited was followed in Bleakley v. White, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 654; Daniels v. Hallenbeck, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 408; Atlantic Dock Co. v. Mayor, 53 N. Y. 64; but in Wellington v. Kelly, 84 N. Y. 543, the question was not decided, but passed with a reference to the limitation in England which had been followed in Clow v. Borst, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 37, which had "not been authoritatively overruled, and we need not now determine whether it should any longer be regarded as authority." And see City of Albany v. McNamara, 117 N. Y. 168, 22 N. E. 931, 6 L. R. A. 212; Windmuller v. Rubber Co., 123 App. Div. 424, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1095. In Kentucky the case cited supra from Stark's Adm'r v. Thompson's Ex'rs, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 302, stands without any subsequent ruling on the point.

The cases are collected in 23 L. R. A. 120, and 17 Harv. L. Rev. 472.

It is a question for the jury whether the agreement or the performance was accepted in satisfaction; Bahrenburg v. Fruit Co., 128 Mo. App. 526, 107 S. W. 440; 16 Q. B. 1039; and in some cases it is sufficient if performance be tendered and refused; 2 B. & Ad. 328. If, however, it was the performance of the accord which was to be the satisfaction, the creditor may sue on either the old cause of action or the accord; Babcock v. Hawkins, 23 Vt. 561; but if he sues on the original claim without giving time for performance, the debtor must not go into equity, but may have his action on the accord; Hunt v. Brown, 146 Mass. 253, 15 N. E. 587.

An accord with tender of satisfaction is not sufficient, but it must be executed; 3 Bingh. N. C. 715; Brooklyn Bank v. De Grauw, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 342, 35 Am. Dec. 569; Simmons v. Clark, 56 Ill. 96; Cushing v. Wyman, 44 Me. 121; Hosler v. Hursh, 151 Pa. 415, 25 Atl. 52; Phinizy v. Bush, 129 Ga. 479, 59 S. E. 259; Clarke v. Hawkins, 5 R. I. 219; but where there is a sufficient consideration to support the agreement, it may be that a tender, though unaccepted, would bar an action; Story, Contr. § 1357; Coit v. Houston, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 243. Satisfaction without accord is not sufficient; 9 M. & W. 596; nor is accord without satisfaction; 3 B. & C. 257.

The burden of proving accord and satisfaction is on him who alleges it; but it may be established by conduct and circumstances, such as the silence of the debtor after notice that the creditor will not accept a tender in full payment; Bahrenburg v. Fruit Co., 128 Mo. App. 526, 107 S. W. 440.

A case of very frequent occurrence is where the amount is disputed or unliquidated and the debtor sends a check for part of the amount as in full if accepted, which the creditor retains and protests that it is received only in part payment. The weight of American authority now holds that there is an accord and satisfaction; Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231, 33 N. E. 1034, 20 L. R. A. 785; Nassoiy v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 42 N. E. 715, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695; Pollman & Bros. Coal & Sprinkling Co. v. City of St. Louis, 145 Mo. 651, 47 S. W. 563; McCormick v. City of St. Louis, 166 Mo. 315, 65 S. W. 1038; Bingham v. Browning, 197 Ill. 122, 64 N. E. 317; Anderson v. Granite Co., 92 Me. 429, 43 Atl. 21, 69 Am. St. Rep. 522; Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Brown, 68 Vt. 239, 35 Atl. 56; Potter v. Douglass, 44 Conn. 541; Talbott v. English, 156 Ind. 299, 59 N. E. 857; Hamilton & Co. v. Stewart, 108 Ga. 472, 34 S. E. 123; Neely v. Thompson, 68 Kan. 193, 75 Pac. 117; Cooper v. R. Co., 82 Miss. 634, 35 South. 162 (where a receipt in full was signed and a verbal protest made to the creditor's agent that no rights were waived); Hull v. Johnson & Co., 22 R. I. 66, 46 Atl. 182 (where the check was specifically marked good only if accepted in full, and those words were stricken out before cashing it). Some cases explicitly require the statement that the payment is in full or circumstances amounting to it in effect; Fremont Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Norton, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 804, 92 N. W. 1058; Whitaker v. Eilenberg, 70 App. Div. 489, 75 N. Y. Supp. 106; Van Dyke v. Wilder, 66 Vt. 579, 29 Atl. 1016.

One New York case requires separate notice. The indebtedness was for legal services and a check was sent for less than the amount named; plaintiff wrote that under no circumstances would he accept it in full but would apply it on account; having waited two days for a reply and received none, he collected the check; held no accord and satisfaction; Maek v. Miller, 87 App. Div. 359, 84 N. Y. Supp. 440. See 17 Harv. L. Rev. 272, 469.

In other states it is held to be no satisfaction, but only, as tendered, a payment on account; Krauser v. McCurdy, 174 Pa. 174, 34 Atl. 518; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Helm, 109 Ky. 388, 59 S. W. 323; Demeules v. Tea Co., 103 Minn. 150, 114 N. W. 733, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 123 Am. St. Rep. 315; and with these courts is the English Court of Appeal; 22 Q. B. D. 610, where it was held that the keeping of the check sent in satisfaction of a claim for a larger amount was not in law conclusive, but that whether there was an accord and satisfaction was a question for the jury.

It must be by the debtor or his agent; Booth v. Smith, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 66; Ellis v. Bibb, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 84; and if made by a stranger, will not avail the debtor in an action at law; Stra. 592; Stark's Adm'r v. Thompson's Ex'rs, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 302; Clow v. Borst, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 37. His remedy in such a case is in equity; 3 Taunt. 117; 5 East 294. It is often difficult to distinguish whether an agreement for compromise is an accord without satisfaction or a novation. It is the tendency of the courts to construe a doubtful case as the latter, which extinguishes the old contract; see 16 Y. L. J. 133. It was held that an agreement to pay less than the amount contemplated in an unmatured and contingent obligation, for which the plaintiff had no cause of action, was a novation and that no recovery could be had on the original contract; Bandman v. Finn, 185 N. Y. 508, 78 N. E. 175, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1134. The new undertaking may be executory; Morehouse v. Bank, 98 N. Y. 503; but if it appears directly or inferentially that it is accepted in satisfaction, the original cause of action is extinguished; Kromer v. Heim, 75 N. Y. 574, 31 Am. Rep. 491; as also if the new contract is inconsistent with the old; Renard v. Sampson, 12 N. Y. 561; Stow v. Russell, 36 Ill. 18. The original claim need not have been valid, but must have been bona fide; Flegal v. Hoover, 156 Pa. 276, 27 Atl. 162; Wehrum v. Kuhn, 61 N. Y. 623. The cases are collected in Clark, Cont. 125. When the consideration is executory, the original obligation continues until the new agreement is executed; and if that fails, it is revived; Ramborger's Adm'r v. Ingraham, 38 Pa. 147. It is not the new agreement, but its execution, which discharges the old one; Rogers v. Rogers, 139 Mass. 440, 1 N. E. 122; Thomson v. Poor, 147 N. Y. 402, 42 N. E. 13.

Where an accord and satisfaction is the substitution of a new contract for an old one, and the promise is accepted without performance, it is a novation; Harrison v. Henderson, 67 Kan. 194, 72 Pac. 875, 62 L. R. A. 760, 100 Am. St. Rep. 393. In case of a disputed claim, an agreement to pay part to a third person in satisfaction of the whole is a good consideration; Mitchell v. Knight, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 204.

Certain English rules are thus stated: Where there has been no performance and a right of action has accrued to one party, the other party may offer a different performance and other amends, which if accepted and executed will discharge his liability.

Where performance is to be the payment of a sum of money, payment of a smaller sum is not accord and satisfaction. There must be some other consideration. But if paid at an earlier date, or in a different place than that agreed, it is a discharge. A negotiable instrument for a less amount may be a satisfaction if accepted for the purpose; Odger, C. L. 757.

Accord with satisfaction, when completed, has two effects: it is a payment of the debt; and it is a species of sale of the thing given by the debtor to the creditor, in satisfaction; but it differs from it in this, that it is not valid until the delivery of the article, and there is no warranty of the thing thus sold, except perhaps the title; for in regard to this it cannot be doubted that if the debtor gives on an accord and satisfaction the goods of another, there would be no satisfaction. But the intention of the parties is of the utmost consequence; Bowker v. Harris, 30 Vt. 424; Sutherland v. Bloomer, 50 Or. 398, 93 Pac. 135; as the debtor will be required only to execute the new contract to that point whence it was to operate a satisfaction of the pre-existing liability.

An accord and satisfaction may be rescinded by subsequent agreement; Heavenrich v. Steele, 57 Minn. 221, 58 N. W. 982; Alexander v. R. Co., 54 Mo. App. 66; it may be avoided on account of fraud; Butler v. R. Co., 88 Ga. 594, 15 S. E. 668; Ball v. McGeoch, 81 Wis. 160, 51 N. W. 443.

In America accord and satisfaction may be given in evidence under the general issue in assumpsit, but it must be pleaded specially in debt, covenant and trespass; 2 Greenl. Ev. (15th ed.) § 29. In England it must be pleaded specially in all cases; Rosc. N. P. 569. See PAYMENT; ACCEPTANCE; AGREEMENT; NOVATION.

ACCOUCHEMENT. The act of giving birth to a child. It is frequently important to prove the filiation of an individual; this may be done in several ways. The fact of the accouchement may be proved by the direct testimony of one who was present, as a physician, a midwife, or other person; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 314. See BIRTH.

ACCOUNT. A detailed statement of the mutual demands in the nature of debit and credit between parties, arising out of contracts or some fiduciary relation; Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 216; Blakeley v. Biscoe, 1 Hempst. 114, Fed. Cas. No. 18,239; Portsmouth v. Donaldson, 32 Pa. 202, 72 Am. Dec. 782; Turgeon v. Cote, 88 Me. 108, 33 Atl. 787.

A statement of the receipts and payments of an executor, administrator, or other trustee of the estate confided to him.

An open account is one in which some term of the contract is not settled by the parties, whether the account consists of one item or many; Sheppard v. Wilkins, 1 Ala. 62; Goodwin v. Hale, 6 Ala. 438; Dunn v. Fleming's Estate, 73 Wis. 545, 41 N. W. 707.

A form of action called also account render, in which such a statement, and the recovery of the balance which thereby appears to be due, is sought by the party bringing it.

In Practice. In Equity. Jurisdiction concurrent with courts of law is taken over matters of account; Post v. Kimberly, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 470; Bruce v. Burdet, 1 J. J. Marsh (Ky.) 82; Nelson v. Allen, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 360; McLaren v. Steapp, 1 Ga. 376, on three grounds: mutual accounts; 18 Beav. 575; dealings so complicated that they cannot be adjusted in a court of law; 1 Sch. & L. 305; 2 H. L. Cas. 28; Hickman v. Stout, 2 Leigh (Va.) 6; Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 216; Cullum v. Bloodgood, 15 Ala. 34; Print-up v. Mitchell, 17 Ga. 553, 63 Am. Dec. 258; Kaston v. Paxton, 46 Or. 308, 80 Pac. 209, 114 Am. St. Rep. 871; McMullen Lumber Co. v. Strother, 136 Fed. 205, 69 C. C. A. 433; Chase v. Phosphate Co., 32 App. Div. 400, 53 N. Y. Supp. 220; the existence of a fiduciary relation between the parties; 1 Sim. Ch. n. s. 573; Massachusetts General Hospital v. Assur. Co., 4 Gray (Mass.) 227; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 9 Sup. Ct. 594, 32 L. Ed. 1005. A bill for an account must show by specific allegations one of these grounds of equity; Walker v. Brooks, 125 Mass. 241; and it must appear in the stating part of the bill; a prayer for an account is not sufficient; Bushnell v. Avery, 121 Mass. 148.

In addition to these peculiar grounds of jurisdiction, equity will grant a discovery in cases of account on the general principles regulating discoveries; Knotts v. Tarver, 8 Ala. 743; Wilson v. Mallett, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 112; Walker v. Cheever, 35 N. H. 339; Sheridan v. Ferry Co., 214 Pa. 117, 63 Atl. 418; Saunborn v. Kittredge, 20 Vt. 632, 50 Am. Dec. 58; and will afterwards proceed to grant full relief in many cases; 6 Ves. 136; Rathbone v. Warren, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 587; Fowle v. Lawrason, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 495, 8 L. Ed. 204. But "to say that whenever there is a right of discovery there must be an account allowed is rather reversing the thing. Discovery, on the contrary, is incident to the order to account. The two things are separate." 2 H. L. Cas. 28.

The remedy of part owners of a ship for adjustments of accounts between themselves is in equity; Milburn v. Guyther, 8 Gill (Md.) 92, 50 Am. Dec. 681; State v. Watts, 7 La. 440, 26 Am. Dec. 507; and so it is when business is carried on upon joint account, whether as partners or not; Clarke v. Pierce, 52 Mich. 157, 17 N. W. 780; Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451, 55 Pac. 147.

Equitable jurisdiction over accounts applies to the appropriation of payments; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (8th Ed.) § 459; agency; Henderson v. McClure, 2 McCord, Eq. (S. C.) 469; including factors, bailiffs, consignees, receivers, and stewards, where there are mutual or complicated accounts; 9 Beav. 284; 2 H. L. Cas. 28 (where, however, it was held that the relation of banker and customer is not such fiduciary relation as to give jurisdiction; id. 35); Rembert v. Brown, 17 Ala. 667; trustees' accounts; 1

Story, Eq. Jur. § 465; 2 M. & K. 664; Scott v. Gamble, 9 N. J. Eq. 218; administrators and executors; Adams' Heirs v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50; Stong v. Wilkson, 14 Mo. 116; Fleming v. McKesson, 56 N. C. 316; Colbert v. Daniel, 32 Ala. 314; Guardians, etc.; Moore v. Hood, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 311, 70 Am. Dec. 210; Johnson v. Miller, 33 Miss. 553; tenants in common, joint tenants of real estate or chattels; 4 Ves. 752; 1 Ves. & B. 114; partners; Perkins v. Perkins' Ex'r, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 364; Carter v. Holbrook, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 331; Washburn v. Washburn, 23 Vt. 576; Hough v. Chaffin, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 238; Long v. Majestre, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 305; directors of companies, and similar officers; 1 Y. & C. 326; apportionment of apprentice fees; 2 Bro. C. C. 78; or rents; 2 P. Wms. 176, 501; see 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 480; contribution to relieve real estate; 3 Co. 12; 2 Bos. & P. 270; Cheesbrough v. Millard, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 409, 7 Am. Dec. 494; Stevens v. Cooper, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 425, 7 Am. Dec. 499; Taylor v. Porter, 7 Mass. 355; general average; 4 Kay & J. 367; Sturges v. Cary, 2 Curt. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 13,572; between sureties; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 492; Uens; Skeel v. Spraker, 8 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 182; Patty v. Pease, 8 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 277, 35 Am. Dec. 683; rents and profits between landlord and tenant; 1 Sch. & L. 305; Livingston v. Livingston, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 287, 8 Am. Dec. 562; in case of torts; Bacon, Abr. Accompt, B; a levy; 1 Ves. Sen. 250; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 285; and in other cases; McClandish v. Edloe, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 330; waste; 1 P. Wms. 407; 6 Ves. 88; tithes and moduses; Com. Dig. Chancery (3 C.), Distress (M. 13).

But equity will not entertain a suit for a naked account of profits and damages against an infringer of a patent; Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U. S. 252, 11 Sup. Ct. 334, 34 L. Ed. 923; Root v. Railway Co., 105 U. S. 189, 26 L. Ed. 975; nor will an account for infringing a trademark be ordered where the infringer acted in good faith, or the profits were small; Saxlehner v. Siegel-Cooper Co., 179 U. S. 42, 21 Sup. Ct. 16, 45 L. Ed. 77. Neither will an account be ordered merely to establish by testimony the allegations of the bill; Tilden v. Maslin, 5 W. Va. 377; nor when the accounts are all on one side and no discovery is needed; Graham v. Cummings, 208 Pa. 516, 57 Atl. 943.

On a bill for an account the right of the defendant to affirmative relief is as broad as that of complainant; Wilcoxon v. Wilcoxon, 111 Ill. App. 90; even if the answer contains no demand for it; Consolidated Fruit Jar Co. v. Wisner, 110 App. Div. 99, 97 N. Y. Supp. 52, affirmed 188 N. Y. 624, 81 N. E. 1162.

A decree for an accounting under a decree is not necessarily delayed or prevented by the fact that it may affect the interests of persons not then in being, as after-born children, and the latter may be bound by it; as in the case of trustees of land subject to a life tenancy; 2 Vern. 526; Harrison v. Wallton's Ex'r, 95 Va. 721, 30 S. E. 372, 41 L. R. A. 703, 64 Am. St. Rep. 830; decrees of probate courts construing a will; Ladd v. Weiskopf, 62 Minn. 29, 64 N. W. 99, 69 L. R. A. 785; or distributing a decedent's estate; Rhodes v. Caswell, 41 App. Div. 232, 58 N. Y. Supp. 470.

Equity follows the analogy of the law in refusing to interfere with stated accounts; 2 Sch. & L. 629; 3 Bro. C. C. 639, n.; Lewis v. Baird, 3 McLean 83, Fed. Cas. No. 8,316; Robinson v. Hook, 4 Mas. 143, Fed. Cas. No. 11,956; Piatt v. Vattier, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 405, 9 L. Ed. 173. See ACCOUNT STATED.

Equity does not deal with accounts upon the principle of mercantile bookkeeping. It requires the items of charge and discharge; Langd. Eq. Pl. § 75, n. Producing books of account is not stating an account.

The approved practice is to enter an interlocutory decree for an account, but a failure to do so is not error; Hollahan v. Sowers, 111 Ill. App. 263; but see Silliman v. Smith, 72 App. Div. 621, 76 N. Y. Supp. 65; but the court has power to pass on the account without the intervention of a master; Glover v. Jones, 95 Me. 303, 49 Atl. 1104; Davis v. Hofer, 38 Or. 150, 63 Pac. 56; Darby v. Gilligan, 43 W. Va. 755, 28 S. E. 737. A reference will not be ordered to afford opportunity for evidence to support the bill; Beale v. Hall, 97 Va. 383, 34 S. E. 53; Ammons v. Oil Co., 47 W. Va. 610, 35 S. E. 1004.

At Law. The action lay against bailiffs, receivers and guardians, in socage only, at the common law, and, by a subsequent extension of the law, between merchants; 11 Co. 89; Sargent v. Parsons, 12 Mass. 149.

Privity of contract was required, and it did not lie by or against executors and administrators; 1 Wms. Saund. 216, n.; until statutes were passed for that purpose, the last being that of 3 & 4 Anne, c. 16; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 445.

In several states, the action has received a liberal extension; Curtis v. Curtis, 13 Vt. 517; Dennison v. Goehring, 7 Pa. 175, 47 Am. Dec. 505; Barnum v. Landon, 25 Conn. 137; Knowles v. Harris, 5 R. I. 402, 73 Am. Dec. 77.

In general it lies "in all cases where a man has received money as the agent of another, and where relief may be had in chancery"; Bredin v. Kingland, 4 Watts (Pa.) 421. It is said to be the proper remedy for one partner against another; Irvine v. Hanlin, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 220; Beach v. Hotchkiss, 2 Conn. 425; Wiswell v. Wilkins, 4 Vt. 137; Kelly v. Kelly, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 419; Young v. Pearson, 1 Cal. 448; for money used by one partner after the dissolution of the firm; Fowle v. Kirkland, 18 Pick.

(Mass.) 299; though equity seems to be properly resorted to where a separate tribunal exists; Calloway v. Tate, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 9; Long v. Majestre, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 305. The action lies for salary of an officer of a corporation; Talbotton R. Co. v. Gibson, 106 Ga. 229, 32 S. E. 151; timber taken from land; Bernstein v. Smith, 10 Kan. 60; club dues; Elm City Club v. Howes, 92 Me. 211, 42 Atl. 392; for materials furnished and superintendence of work under an agreement existing for so long as both parties should see fit; Quin v. Distilling Co., 171 Mass. 283, 50 N. E. 637; commissions to a real estate agent on a sale; Reynolds-McGinness Co. v. Green, 78 Vt. 28, 61 Atl. 556; work and labor and money lent; Miller v. Armstrong, 123 Ia. 86, 98 N. W. 561; Horning v. Poyer, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 732; Hartsell v. Masterson, 132 Ala. 275, 31 South. 616; use and occupation of land; Ketcham v. Barbour, 102 Ind. 576, 26 N. E. 127; the price of land sold and conveyed; Curran v. Curran, 40 Ind. 473; money received by an attorney for his client; Bredin v. Kingland, 4 Watts (Pa.) 421.

In other states, reference may be made to an auditor by order of the court, in the common forms of actions founded on contract or tort, where there are complicated accounts or counter-demands; Pierce v. Thompson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 193; King v. Lacey, 8 Conn. 499; Brewster v. Edgerly, 13 N. H. 275; Farley v. Ward, 1 Tex. 646; and see Cozzens v. Hodges, 1 R. I. 491. See AUDITOR. In the action of account, an interlocutory judgment of quod computet is first obtained; McPherson v. McPherson, 33 N. C. 391, 53 Am. Dec. 416; Lee v. Abrams, 12 Ill. 111, on which no damages are awarded except ratione interplacitationis; Cro. Eliz. 83; Gratz v. Phillips, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 564.

The account is then referred to an auditor, who now generally has authority to examine parties; Hoyt v. French, 24 N. H. 198 (though such was not the case formerly); before whom issue of law and fact may be taken in regard to each item, which he must report to the court; 2 Ves. 388; Thompson v. Arms, 5 Vt. 546; King v. Hutchins, 26 N. H. 139; Crousillat v. McCall, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 433; on their decision the auditors make up the account, report it and are discharged; id. Upon the facts reported by the auditor the court decides the law of the case; Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 433. Only the controverted items need be proved in an action on a verified account; Shuford v. Chinski (Tex.) 26 S. W. 141.

A final judgment quod recuperet is entered for the amount found by him to be due; and the auditor's account will not be set aside except upon a very manifest case of error; Appeal of Stehman, 5 Pa. 413; Tourne v. Riviere, 1 La. Ann. 380. See AUDITOR.

In case of mutual accounts the statute of limitations commences to run from the date of the last item on either side; 2 Wood, Lim. 714; where the last item of a mutual running account is within six years from the commencement of a suit, the statute does not apply; McFarland v. O'Neil, 155 Pa. 260, 25 Atl. 756; Chadwick v. Chadwick, 115 Mo. 581, 22 S. W. 479; but in Vermont the debt runs from the date of the last credit, and not from the last debit; George v. Mach. Co., 65 Vt. 287, 26 Atl. 722.

If the defendant is found in surplusage, that is, is creditor of the plaintiff on balancing the accounts, he cannot in this action recover judgment for the balance so due. He may bring an action of debt, or, by some authorities, a sci. fa., against the plaintiff, whereon he may have judgment and execution against the plaintiff. See Palm, 512; 1 Leon. 219; 3 Kebl. 362; 1 Rolle, Abr. 599, pl. 11; Brooke, Abr. Accord, 62; 1 Rolle 87.

As the defendant could wage his law; 2 Wms. Saund. 65 a; Cro. Eliz. 479; and as the discovery, which is the main object sought; 5 Taunt. 431; can be more readily obtained and questions in dispute more readily settled in equity, resort is generally had to that jurisdiction in those states where a separate tribunal exists, or under statutes to the courts of law; Gay v. Rogers' Estate, 18 Vt. 345; Brewster v. Edgerly, 13 N. H. 275; King v. Lacey, 8 Conn. 499; Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 216.

The fact that one possesses an open account in favor of another is not presumptive evidence of the holder's ownership; Gregg v. Mallett, 111 N. C. 74, 15 S. E. 936. In a statement of account it is not necessary to say "E. & O. E."; that is implied; 6 El. & Bl. 69.

ACCOUNT BOOK. A book kept by a merchant, trader, mechanic, or other person, in which are entered from time to time the transactions of his trade or business. Such books, when regularly kept, may be admitted in evidence; Greenl. Ev. §§ 115-118; Bicknell v. Mellett, 160 Mass. 328, 35 N. E. 1130; Kohler v. Lindenmeyr, 129 N. Y. 498, 29 N. E. 957.

See ORIGINAL ENTRIES, BOOK OF.

ACCOUNT CURRENT. An open or running account between two parties.

ACCOUNT RENDER. See ACCOUNT.

ACCOUNT STATED. An agreed balance of accounts. An account which has been examined and accepted by the parties. 2 Atk. 251.

An account cannot become an account stated with reference to a debt payable on a contingency; Tuggle v. Minor, 76 Cal. 96, 18 Pac. 131. Although an item of an account may be disputed, it may become an account stated as to the items admittedly correct; Mulford v. Caesar, 53 Mo. App. 263.

In Equity. Acceptance may be inferred

From circumstances, as where an account is rendered to a merchant and no objection is made, after sufficient time; 1 Sim. & S. 333; Murry v. Toland, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 569; Freeland v. Heron, 7 Cra. 147, 3 L. Ed. 297; Pratt v. Weyman, 1 McCord Ch. (S. C.) 156; Wood v. Gault, 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 433; Dows v. Durfee, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 213. Such an account is deemed conclusive between the parties; 2 Bro. C. C. 62, 310; Desha v. Smith, 20 Ala. 747; Consequa v. Fanning, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 587; Stiles v. Brown, 1 Gill. (Md.) 350; Farmer v. Barnes, 56 N. C. 109; to the extent agreed upon; Troup v. Haight, 1 Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 239; unless some fraud, mistake, or plain error is shown; Barrow v. Rhinelander, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 550; Pratt v. Weyman, 1 McCord Ch. (S. C.) 156; and in such case, generally, the account will not be opened, but liberty to surcharge or falsify will be given; 9 Ves. 265; 1 Sch. & L. 192; Hutchins v. Hope, 7 Gill (Md.) 119. A consideration and legal liability for each item, aside from the stated account, is not essential to sustain an action for the balance; Patillo v. Commission Co., 131 Fed. 680, 65 C. C. A. 508.

At Law. An account stated is conclusive as to the liability of the parties, with reference to the transactions included in it; Murray v. Toland, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 569; except in cases of fraud or manifest error; 1 Esp. 159; Goodwin v. Insurance Co., 24 Conn. 591; Martin v. Beckwith, 4 Wis. 219; White v. Walker, 5 Fla. 478. See Ogden v. Astor, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 311; Neff v. Wooding, 83 Va. 432, 2 S. E. 731.

Acceptance by the party to be charged must be shown; Bussey v. Gant's Adm'r, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 238; Lee v. Abrams, 12 Ill. 111. The acknowledgment that the sum is due is sufficient; 2 Term 480; though there be but a single item in the account; 13 East 249; 5 M. & S. 65.

The acceptance need not be in express terms; Powell v. R. R., 65 Mo. 658; Volkening v. De Graaf, 81 N. Y. 268. Acceptance may be inferred from retaining the account a sufficient time without making objection; Freeland v. Heron, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 147, 3 L. Ed. 297; Jones v. Dunn, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 109; Dows v. Durfee, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 213; Ogden v. Astor, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 311; Patillo v. Commission Co., 131 Fed. 680, 65 C. C. A. 508; and from other circumstances; Berry v. Pierson, 1 Gill (Md.) 234.

If the parties had already come to a disagreement when the account is rendered, assent cannot be inferred from silence; Edwards v. Hoeflinghoff, 38 Fed. 635.

A definite ascertained sum must be stated to be due; Andrews v. Allen, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 241.

It must be made by a competent person, excluding infants and those who are of unsound mind; 1 Term 40.

Husband and wife may join and state an account with a third person; 2 Term 483; 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 290.

An agent may bind his principal; Murray v. Toland, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 569; but he must show his authority; Thalhimer v. Brinckerhoff, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 394, 21 Am. Dec. 155; Harvey v. Ry. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 392. Partners may state accounts; and an action lies for the party entitled to the balance; Ozeas v. Johnson, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 434, 1 L. Ed. 897; Lamalere v. Caze, 1 Wash. C. C. 435, Fed. Cas. No. 8,003; Kidder v. Rixford, 16 Vt. 169, 42 Am. Dec. 504.

The acceptance of the account is an acknowledgment of a debt due for the balance, and will support assumpsit. It is not, therefore, necessary to prove the items, but only to prove an existing debt or demand, and the stating of the account; Ware v. Dudley, 16 Ala. 742; Auzeais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60, 15 Pac. 371.

Facts known to a party when he settles an account stated cannot be used later to impeach it; Marmon v. Waller, 53 Mo. App. 610; and it should not be set aside except for clear showing of fraud or mistake; Greenhow v. Edler, 51 Fed. 117; Marmon v. Waller, 53 Mo. App. 610.

On an account stated and a balance due, a promise is implied to pay this balance on demand; a subsequent promise differing therefrom is nudum pactum. Odger, C. L. 683.

ACCOUNTANT. One who is versed in accounts. A person or officer appointed to keep the accounts of a public company.

He who renders to another or to a court a just and detailed statement of the property which he holds as trustee, executor, administrator, or guardian. See 16 Viner, Abr. 155.

ACCOUNTANT GENERAL. An officer of the English Court of Chancery, by whom the moneys paid into court are received, deposited in bank, and disbursed. The office appears to have been established by an order of May 26, 1725, and 12 Geo. I. c. 32, before which time the effects of the suitors were locked up in the vaults of the Bank of England, under the care of the masters and two of the six clerks; 1 Smith, Ch. Pr. 22.

ACCOUNTANTS, CHARTERED. Persons skilled in the keeping and examination of accounts, who are employed for the purpose of examining and certifying to the correctness of accounts of corporations and others. The business is usually carried on by corporations. See AUDITOR.

ACCOUPLE. To unite; to marry.

ACCREDIT. In International Law. To acknowledge; send (an envoy) with credentials.

Used of the act by which a diplomatic agent is acknowledged by the government to which he is sent. This at once makes his public character known and becomes his protection. It is used also of the act by which his sovereign commissions him. This latter use is now the accepted one.

ACCRESCE (Lat.). To grow to; to be united with; to increase.

The term is used in speaking of islands which are formed in rivers by deposit; Calvinus, Lex.; 3 Kent 428.

It is used in a related sense in the common-law phrase jus accrescendi, the right of survivorship; 1 Washb. R. P. 426.

In Pleading. To commence; to arise; to accrue. Quod actio non accrevit infra sex annos, that the action did not accrue within six years; 3 Chit. Pl. 914.

ACCRETION (Lat. accrescere, to grow to). The increase of real estate by the addition of portions of soil, by gradual deposition through the operation of natural causes, to that already in possession of the owner. 3 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) 50.

The term alluvion is applied to the deposit itself, while accretion rather denotes the act.

If an island in a non-navigable stream results from accretion, it belongs to the owner of the bank on the same side of the flum aquæ; 3 Washb. R. P. 60; 2 Bla. Com. 261, n.; 3 Kent 428; Hargrave, Law Tracts 5; Hale, de Jur. Mar. 14; 3 Barn. & C. 91, 107; Ex parte Jennings, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 537, 16 Am. Dec. 417; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 268, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Woodbury v. Short, 17 Vt. 387, 44 Am. Dec. 344.

"It is generally conceded that the riparian title attaches to subsequent accretions to the land effected by the gradual and imperceptible operation of natural causes. But whether it attaches to land reclaimed by artificial means from the bed of the river, or to sudden accretions produced by unusual floods, is a question which each state decides for itself;" Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 337, 24 L. Ed. 224; Missouri v. Nebraska, 196 U. S. 23, 25 Sup. Ct. 155, 49 L. Ed. 372; Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Ia. 71, 52 N. W. 1124, 17 L. R. A. 788, 41 Am. St. Rep. 481. As a general rule, such accretions do not belong to the riparian owner; City of Victoria v. Schott; 9 Tex. Civ. App. 332, 29 S. W. 681; Cox v. Arnold, 129 Mo. 337, 31 S. W. 592, 50 Am. St. Rep. 450; Cooley v. Golden, 117 Mo. 33, 23 S. W. 100, 21 L. R. A. 300; but if, after an avulsion, an accretion forms within the original land line, it belongs to the riparian owner, though separated from the main land by a slough; Minton v. Steele, 125 Mo. 181, 28 S. W. 746. Land remade by accretion after it has been washed away belongs to the original proprietor; Ocean City Ass'n v. Shriver, 64 N. J. L. 550, 46 Atl. 690, 51 L. R. A. 425, n., which see as to the right of the owner to follow accretions across a division line previously submerged by the action of the water.

However accretions may be commenced or continued, the right of one who is the owner of uplands to follow and appropriate them ceases when the formation passes laterally the land of his contiguous neighbor; Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 425, 3 N. E. 581, 53 Am. Rep. 206, where a bar separated from the mainland by a lagoon was claimed as an accretion by the owner of the portion of the bar where the formation began. This bar merely replaced a formation which had been in part washed away, and the court said that the owner of the nucleus of the bar could not, even if the process of its extension was effected by accretion, claim beyond the point where such accretions began to be adjacent to the property of adjoining owners. See 51 L. R. A. 425, n.

An accretion formed on the other side of a public street which bounds the property of an individual belongs to the street, if the fee of that is in the public; Ellinger v. R. Co., 112 Mo. 525, 20 S. W. 800; City of St. Louis v. R. Co., 114 Mo. 13, 21 S. W. 202. A reliction formed by the gradual drying up of a lake belongs to the riparian owners; Poynter v. Chipman, 8 Utah, 442, 32 Pac. 690; Olson v. Huntamer, 6 S. D. 364, 61 N. W. 479; but not one formed by artificial drainage; Noyes v. Collins, 92 Ia. 566, 61 N. W. 250, 26 L. R. A. 609, 54 Am. St. Rep. 571.

See AVULSION; ALLUVION; RIPARIAN PROPRIETOR; ISLAND; RELICTION.

ACCRUACH. To attempt to exercise royal power. 4 Bla. Com. 76.

A knight who forcibly assaulted and detained one of the king's subjects till he paid him a sum of money was held to have committed treason on the ground of accroachment; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 80.

In French Law. To delay. Whishaw.

ACCRUAL, CLAUSE OF. A clause in a deed of settlement or a will providing that the share of one dying shall vest in the survivor or survivors.

ACCRUE. To grow to; to be added to; to become a present right or demand, as the interest accrues on the principal. Accruing costs are those which become due and are created after judgment; as the costs of an execution. See Johnson v. Ins. Co., 91 Ill. 95, 33 Am. Rep. 47; Strasser v. Staats, 59 Hun 143, 13 N. Y. Supp. 167.

To rise, to happen, to come to pass; as the statute of limitation does not commence running until the cause of action has accrued; Scheerer v. Stanley, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 277; Braddee v. Wiley, 10 Watts (Pa.) 363; Bacon, Abr. Limitation of Actions (D, 3); Emerson v. The Shawano City, 10 Wis. 433. A cause of action accrues when suit may be commenced for a breach of contract; Amy v. Dubuque, 98 U. S. 470, 25 L. Ed. 228. It is distinguished from sustain; Adams v. Brown, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 7; and from owing; 6 C. B. N. S. 429; Gross v. Partenheimer, 159 Pa. 556, 28 Atl. 370; but see Cutcliff v. McAnally, 88 Ala. 507, 7 South. 331; Fay v. Holloran, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

ACCUMULATION, TRUST FOR. See PETUITY.

ACCUMULATIVE LEGACY. See LEGACY.

ACCUSATION. A charge made to a competent officer against one who has committed a crime, so that he may be brought to justice and punishment.

A neglect to accuse may in some cases be considered a misdemeanor, or misprision (which see); 1 Brown, Civ. Law 247; 2 id. 339; Inst. lib. 4, tit. 18.

It is a rule that no man is bound to accuse himself or testify against himself in a criminal case; 7 Q. B. 126. A man is competent, though not compellable, to prove his own crime; 14 Mees. & W. 256. See EVIDENCE; INTEREST; WITNESS.

ACCUSE. To charge or impute the commission of crime or immoral or disgraceful conduct or official delinquency. It does not necessarily import the charge of a crime by judicial procedure; State v. South, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 489, 493; Com. v. O'Brien, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 84; Robbins v. Smith, 47 Conn. 182; 1 C. & P. 479. See People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 460, where the court was divided as to the meaning of the term, Cooley, C. J., and Christiancy, J., holding that it meant any public accusation of crime as well as a formal complaint, and Graves and Campbell, JJ., contra; and Com. v. Cawood, 2 Va. Cas. 527 where, Barbour, J., dissenting, it was held that one is not accused until indicted.

ACCUSED. One who is charged with a crime or misdemeanor. See People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 468. The term cannot be said to apply to a defendant in a civil action; Castle v. Houston, 19 Kan. 417, 37 Am. Rep. 127; and see Mosby v. Ins. Co., 31 Gratt. (Va.) 629.

Where irrigation is necessary, as in New Mexico, there is much legislation respecting public ditches and streams, and those used for the purpose of irrigation are declared to be "public ditches or acequias"; Comp. L. N. Mex. tit. 1, ch. 1, § 6.

ACHAT, also ACHATE, ACHATA, ACH-ET. In French Law. A purchase.

It is used in some of our law-books, as well as achator, a purchaser, which in some ancient statutes means purveyor. Stat. 36 Edw. III.; Merlin, Répert.

ACHERSET. An ancient English measure of grain, supposed to be the same with our quarter, or eight bushels.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. The act of one who has executed a deed, in going before some competent officer or court and declaring it to be his act or deed.

The acknowledgment is certified by the officer or court; and the term acknowledgment is sometimes used to designate the certificate.

The function of an acknowledgment is two-fold: to authorize the deed to be given in evidence without further proof of its execution, and to entitle it to be recorded. The same purposes may be accomplished by a subscribing witness going before the officer or court and making oath to the fact of the execution, which is certified in the same manner; but in some states this is only permitted in case of the death, absence, or refusal of the grantor. In some of the states a deed is void except as between the parties and their privies, unless acknowledged or proved.

Nature of. In some states the act is held to be a judicial or quasi-judicial one; Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351; Harmon v. Magee, 57 Miss. 410; Grider v. Mortgage Co., 99 Ala. 281, 12 South. 775, 42 Am. St. Rep. 58 (changing the rule of earlier cases); Thompson v. Mortgage Security Co., 110 Ala. 400, 18 South. 315, 55 Am. St. Rep. 29; Hellman v. Kroh, 155 Pa. 1, 25 Atl. 751; Murrell v. Diggs, 84 Va. 900, 6 S. E. 461, 10 Am. St. Rep. 893; while in others it is held to be a ministerial act; Lynch v. Livingston, 6 N. Y. 422; Loree v. Abner, 57 Fed. 159, 6 C. C. A. 302; Ford v. Osborne, 45 Ohio St. 1, 12 N. E. 526; Learned v. Riley, 14 Allen (Mass.) 109.

Who may take. An officer related to the parties; Lynch v. Livingston, 6 N. Y. 422; Remington Paper Co. v. O'Dougherty, 81 N. Y. 474. The presumption is that the officer took it within his jurisdiction; Morrison v. White, 16 La. Ann. 100; Rackleff v. Norton, 19 Me. 274; Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 33; and that it was duly executed; Albany County Savings Bank v. McCarty, 71 Hun 227, 24 N. Y. Supp. 991.

In some states a notary cannot take acknowledgment in another county than the one within which he was appointed and resides; Utica & Black River R. Co. v. Stewart, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 312; Rehkoph v. Miller, 59 Ill. App. 662; nor the attorney of record; Gilmore v. Hempstead, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 153; Thurman v. Cameron, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 91; Hughes v. Wilkinson's Lessee, 37 Miss. 482; Hedger v. Ward, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 106; nor if his term has expired; Gilbraith v. Gallivan, 78 Mo. 452; Carlisle v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 542. In Pennsylvania, by statute, a notary may act anywhere within the state; Acts, 1893, p. 323.

Taking an acknowledgment is not public business such as may not be transacted on a legal holiday; Slater v. Schack, 41 Minn. 269, 43 N. W. 7.

One cannot take an acknowledgment of a deed in which he has any interest; Beaman v. Whitney, 20 Me. 413; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329; Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351; Brown v. Moore, 38 Tex. 645; Withers v. Baird, 7 Watts (Pa.) 227, 32 Am. Dec. 754. Contra, Davis v. Beazley, 75 Va. 491; Dail v. Moore, 51 Mo. 589; West v. Krebaum, 88 Ill. 263; Green v. Abraham, 43 Ark. 420.

Sufficiency of. Certificate need only substantially comply with the statute. The fact of acknowledgment and the identity of the parties are the essential parts, and must be stated: Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 461, 68 Am. Dec. 340; Morse v. Clayton, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 373; Alexander v. Merry, 9 Mo. 514.

The general rule applied in cases of grammatical or clerical errors is that the courts will disregard obvious mistakes, and read into the acknowledgment the proper word, if such word can be easily ascertained; Merritt v. Yates, 71 Ill. 636, 23 Am. Rep. 128; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Parrott, 92 Ill. 194; Durst v. Daugherty, 81 Tex. 650, 17 S. W. 388; McCardia v. Billings, 10 N. D. 373, 87 N. W. 1008, 88 Am. St. Rep. 729; Frostburg Mut. Bldg. Ass'n v. Brace, 51 Md. 508; Hughes v. Wright, 100 Tex. 511, 101 S. W. 789, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643, 123 Am. St. Rep. 827; but it is held that important words omitted cannot be supplied by intent; Jackway v. Gault, 20 Ark. 190, 73 Am. Dec. 494; Hayden v. Westcott, 11 Conn. 129; Newman v. Samuels, 17 Ia. 528; Wetmore v. Laird, 5 Biss. 160, Fed. Cas. No. 17,467.

In the following cases it was held that the statute must be strictly complied with; Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145; Rogers v. Adams, 66 Ala. 600; Myers v. Boyd, 96 Pa. 427; Wetmore v. Laird, 5 Biss. 160, Fed. Cas. No. 17,467; Tully v. Davis, 30 Ill. 103, 83 Am. Dec. 179; Ridgely v. Howard, 3 H. & McK. (Md.) 321. Where a notary takes the acknowledgment and attaches his seal, but fails to sign his name, it is not sufficient; Clark v. Wilson, 127 Ill. 429, 19 N. E. 860, 11 Am. St. Rep. 143.

Effect of. Only purchasers for value can take advantage of defects; Mastin v. Halley, 61 Mo. 196.

An acknowledged deed is evidence of seizure in the grantee, and authorizes recording it; Kellogg v. Loomis, 16 Gray (Mass.) 48.

An unacknowledged deed is good between the parties and subsequent purchasers with actual notice; Gray v. Ulrich, 8 Kan. 112; Kellogg v. Loomis, 16 Gray (Mass.) 48; Stevens v. Hampton, 46 Mo. 404; Bishop v. Schneider, 46 Mo. 472, 2 Am. Rep. 533; Ryan v. Carr, 46 Mo. 483.

The certificate will prevail over the unsupported denial of the grantor; Lickmon v. Harding, 65 Ill. 505.

Identification of Grantor. An introduction by a common friend is sufficient to justify officer in making certificate; Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513, 19 L. Ed. 426. Contra, Jones v. Bach, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 568; Nippel v. Hammond, 4 Col. 211. See ACQUAINTED.

A notary imposed upon by a personation is liable only for clear negligence. It is a legal presumption that he acted on reasonable information, and his absence of memory as to details of what occurred does not destroy that presumption; Com. v. Haines, 97 Pa. 228.

Bouv.—8

The certificate is not invalidated by want of recollection of the officer; Tooker v. Sloan, 30 N. J. Eq. 394; nor by mistake in, or omission of, the date; Huxley v. Harrold, 62 Mo. 516; Kelly v. Rosenstock, 45 Md. 389; Webb v. Huff, 61 Tex. 677; Yorty v. Palae, 62 Wis. 154, 22 N. W. 137.

It is always permissible to show that the party never appeared before the officer and acknowledged the deed; Donahue v. Mills, 41 Ark. 421; Pickens v. Knisely, 29 W. Va. 1, 11 S. E. 932, 6 Am. St. Rep. 622; but if he appeared, the recitals in the certificate of acknowledgment can only be impeached for fraud or imposition, with knowledge brought home to the grantee; Bouvier-Jaeger Coal Land Co. v. Sypher, 186 Fed. 660.

Correction. Where a notary fails to set forth the necessary facts, he may correct his certificate, and may be compelled by mandamus, but equity has no jurisdiction to correct it; Wannall v. Kem, 51 Mo. 150; Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 63 Cal. 286; Merritt v. Yates, 71 Ill. 636, 23 Am. Rep. 128.

See paper by Judge Cooley, 4 Amer. Bar Assoc. 1881.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT MONEY. A sum paid by tenants of copyhold in some parts of England, as a recognition of their superior lords. Cowell; Blount. Called a fine by Blackstone; 2 Bla. Com. 98.

ACOLYTE. An inferior church servant, who, next under the sub-deacon, follows and waits upon the priests and deacons, and performs the offices of lighting the candles, carrying the bread and wine, and paying other servile attendance. Spelman; Cowell.

ACQUAINTED. Having personal knowledge of. Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U. S. 710, 24 L. Ed. 544. Acquaintance expresses less than familiarity; In re Carpenter's Estate, 94 Cal. 406, 29 Pac. 1101. It is "familiar knowledge"; Wyllis v. Haun, 47 Ia. 614; Chauvin v. Wagner, 18 Mo. 531. To be "personally acquainted with," and to "know personally," are equivalent terms; Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U. S. 710, 24 L. Ed. 544. When used with reference to a paper to which a certificate or affidavit is attached, it indicates a substantial knowledge of the subject-matter thereof. Bohan v. Casey, 5 Mo. App. 101; U. S. v. Jones, 14 Blatchf. 90, Fed. Cas. No. 15,491.

ACQUEREUR. In French and Canadian Law. One who acquires title, particularly to immovable property, by purchase.

ACQUEST. An estate acquired by purchase. 1 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law 56.

ACQUETS. In Civil Law. Property which has been acquired by purchase, gift, or otherwise than by succession. Immovable property which has been acquired otherwise than by succession. Merlin, Répert.

The profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact, of the produce of the joint industry of both husband and wife, and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations made jointly to them both, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even although the purchase be only in the name of one of the two, and not of both.

This is the signification attached to the word in Louisiana; La. Civ. Code 2371. The rule applies to all marriages contracted in that state, or out of it, when the parties afterward go there to live, as to acquets afterward made there. The acquets are divided into two equal portions between the husband and wife, or between their heirs at the dissolution of their marriage.

The parties may, however, lawfully stipulate there shall be no community of profits or gains; but have no right to agree that they shall be governed by the laws of another country; Bourcier v. Lanusse, 3 Mart. O. S. (La.) 581; Saul v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 571, 16 Am. Dec. 212. See 2 Kent 153, n. See COMMUNITY; CONQUETS.

As to the sense in which it is used in Canada, see 2 Low. Can. 175.

ACQUIESCENCE. A silent appearance of consent. Worcester, Dict.

Failure to make any objections. 2 Phil. 117; 8 Ch. Div. 286; Scott v. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 26 Pac. 898. Submission to an act of which one had knowledge. See Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578, 25 L. Ed. 420. It imports full knowledge; 3 De G. F. & J. 58. Tacit assent to an ultra vires act, after knowledge of it, causing innocent third persons to assume positions of which they cannot be deprived without loss. Rabe v. Dunlap, 51 N. J. Eq. 40, 25 Atl. 959; Kent v. Mining Co., 78 N. Y. 159.

It is to be distinguished from avowed consent, on the one hand, and from open discontent or opposition, on the other. It amounts to a consent which is impliedly given by one or both parties to a proposition, a clause, a condition, a judgment, or to any act whatever.

It implies active, as distinguished from laches, which implies passive assent; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674.

When a party is bound to elect between a paramount right and a testamentary disposition, his acquiescence in a state of things which indicates an election, when he was aware of his rights, will be prima facie evidence of such election. See 2 Rop. Leg. 439; 1 Ves. 335; 12 id. 136; 3 P. Wms. 315. The acts of acquiescence which constitute an implied election must be decided rather by the circumstances of each case, than by any general principle; 1 Swans. 382, note, and the numerous cases there cited.

Acquiescence in the acts of an agent, or one who has assumed that character, will be equivalent to an express authority; 2 Kent 478; Story, Eq. Jur. § 255; U. S. v. Snyder, 4 Wash. C. C. 559, Fed. Cas. No.

16,351; Richmond Manuf'g Co. v. Starks, 4 Mas. 296, Fed. Cas. No. 11,802; Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 69, 81, 7 L. Ed. 606; Erick v. Johnson, 6 Mass. 193; Towle v. Stevenson, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 110; Vianna v. Barclay, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 281.

Mere delay in repudiating an agent's unauthorized contract will not ratify it, but is evidence from which the jury may so infer; Meyer v. Smith, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 37, 21 S. W. 995; but the disapproval must be within a reasonable time; Johnson v. Carrere, 45 La. Ann. 847, 13 South. 195; and if payment has been made to an agent after his authority has been revoked, the presumption is that he has accounted to the principal when there is long-continued silence on the latter's part; Long v. Thayer, 150 U. S. 520, 14 Sup. Ct. 189, 37 L. Ed. 1167.

See AGENCY; ESTOPPEL.

ACQUIETANDIS PLEGIIS. A writ of justices, formerly lying for the surety against a creditor who refuses to acquit him after the debt has been satisfied. Reg. of Writs 158; Cowell; Blount.

ACQUIRE (Lat. ad, for, and querere, to seek). To make property one's own. To gain permanently.

It is regularly applied to a permanent acquisition. A man is said to obtain or procure a mere temporary acquisition. It has been held to include a taking by devise; Santa Clara Female Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 375, 6 N. E. 183, 56 Am. Rep. 776.

ACQUISITION. The act by which a person procures the property in a thing.

The thing the property in which is secured.

Original acquisition is that by which a man secures a property in a thing which is not at the time he acquires it, and in its then existing condition, the property of any other individual. It may result from occupancy; 2 Kent 289; accession; 2 Kent 293; intellectual labor—namely, for inventions, which are secured by patent rights; and for the authorship of books, maps, and charts, which is protected by copyrights; 1 Bouv. Inst. 508, n.

Derivative acquisitions are those which are procured from others, either by act of law or by act of the parties. Goods and chattels may change owners by act of law in the cases of forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, insolvency, and intestacy; or by act of the parties, as by gift or sale.

An acquisition may result from the act of the party himself, or those who are in his power acting for him, as his children while minors; Gale v. Parrot, 1 N. H. 28. See Dig. 41. l. 53; Inst. 2. 9. 3.

ACQUITMENT. See ABSOLUTION.

ACQUITTAL. A release or discharge from an obligation or engagement.

According to Lord Coke, there are three kinds of acquittal, namely: by deed, when the party releases the obligation; by prescription; by tenure; Co. Litt. 100 a.

The absolution of a party charged with a crime or misdemeanor.

The absolution of a party accused on a trial before a traverse jury. Shackleford v. Smith, 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 36; Teague v. Wilks, 3 McCord (S. C.) 461. Though frequently expressed as "by the jury," it is in fact by the judgment of the court; 7 M. & G. 481.

Acquittals in fact are those which take place when the jury, upon trial, finds a verdict of not guilty.

Acquittals in law are those which take place by mere operation of law; as where a man has been charged merely as an accessory, and the principal has been acquitted. Coke, 2 Inst. 364.

An acquittal is a bar to any future prosecution for the offence alleged in the first indictment.

If accused is placed upon trial under a valid indictment before a legal jury, and the latter is discharged by the court without good cause and without defendant's consent, it is equivalent to an acquittal; State v. Walker, 26 Ind. 346; Mount v. State, 14 Ohio 295, 45 Am. Dec. 542; Klock v. People, 2 Parker Cr. R. (N. Y.) 676. There may be an acquittal by reason of a discharge without a trial on the merits; Junction City v. Keefe, 40 Kan. 275, 19 Pac. 735. Acquittal discharges from guilt, pardon only from punishment; Younger v. State, 2 W. Va. 579, 98 Am. Dec. 791.

When a prisoner has been acquitted, he becomes competent to testify either for the government or for his former co-defendants; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 341. And it is clear, that where a married defendant is entirely removed from the record by a verdict pronounced in his favor, his wife may testify either for or against any other persons who may be parties to the record; 12 M. & W. 49; 8 Carr. & P. 284. See JEOPARDY; AUTREFOIS ACQUIT; AUTREFOIS CONVICT.

ACQUITTANCE. An agreement in writing to discharge a party from an engagement to pay a sum of money. It is evidence of payment, and differs from a release in this, that the latter must be under seal, while an acquittance need not be under seal. Pothier, Oblig. n. 781. See 3 Salk. 298; Co. Litt. 212 a, 273 a; Milliken v. Brown, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 391.

ACQUITTED. See ACQUITTAL.

ACRE. A quantity of land containing one hundred and sixty square rods of land, in whatever shape. Cro. Eliz. 476, 665; 6 Co. 67; Co. Litt. 5 b. The word formerly signified an open field; whence acre-fight, a contest in an open field. Jacob, Dict.

The measure seems to have been variable in amount in its earliest use, but was fixed by statute at a remote period. As originally used, it was applicable especially to meadowlands; Cowell. Originally a strip in the fields that was ploughed in the forenoon. Maitland, Domesday and Beyond 387.

ACRE RIGHT. "The share of a citizen of a New England town in the common lands. The value of the acre right was a fixed quantity in each town, but varied in different towns. A 10-acre lot or right in a certain town was equivalent to 113 acres of upland and 12 acres of meadow, and a certain exact proportion was maintained between the acre right and salable lands." Messages, etc., of the Presidents, Richardson, X, 230.

ACROSS. From side to side. Transverse to the length of. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Packet Co., 125 U. S. 260, 8 Sup. Ct. 874, 31 L. Ed. 731; but see Appeal of Bennett's Branch Imp. Co., 65 Pa. 242. It may mean over; Brown v. Meady, 10 Me. 391, 25 Am. Dec. 248. See Comstock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 163, where a grant of a right of way across a lot of land was held not to mean a right to enter at one side, go partly across and come out at a place on the same side.

ACT (Lat. agere, to do; actus, done). Something done or established.

In its general legal sense, the word may denote something done by an individual, as a private citizen, or as an officer; or by a body of men, as a legislature, a council, or a court of justice; including not merely physical acts, but also decrees, edicts, laws, judgments, resolves, awards, and determinations. Some general laws made by the Congress of the United States are styled joint resolutions, and these have the same force and effect as those styled acts.

An instrument in writing to verify facts. Webster, Dict.

It is used in this sense of the published acts of assembly, congress, etc. In a sense approaching this, it has been held in trials for treason that letters and other written documents were acts; 1 Post. Cr. Cas. 198; 2 Stark. 116.

In Civil Law. A writing which states in a legal form that a thing has been done, said, or agreed. Merlin, Répert.

Private acts are those made by private persons as registers in relation to their receipts and expenditures, schedules, acquittances, and the like. Nov. 73, c. 2; Code 7. 32. 6; 4. 21; Dig. 22. 4; La. Civ. Code art. 2231 to 2254; 8 Toullier, Droit Civ. Français 94.

Acts under private signature are those which have been made by private individuals under their hands. An act of this kind does not acquire the force of an authentic act by being registered in the office of a notary; Marie Louise v. Caucholx, 11 Mart. O. S. (La.) 243; Priou v. Adams, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 693; unless it has been properly acknowledged before the officer by the parties to it; Bullard v. Wilson, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 196.

Public acts are those which have a public authority, and which have been made before public officers, are authorized by a public seal, have been made public by the authority of a magistrate, or which have been extracted and been properly authenticated from public records.

In Evidence. The act of one of several conspirators, performed in pursuance of the common design, is evidence against all of them. And see TREASON; PARTNER; PARTNERSHIP; AGENT; AGENCY.

In Legislation. A statute or law made by a legislative body; an approved bill.

The words bill and law are frequently used synonymously with act, but incorrectly; Sedgwick County Com'rs v. Bailey, 13 Kan. 600; a bill being only the draft or form of the act presented to the legislature but not enacted; Southwark Bank v. Com., 26 Pa. 446.

General or public acts are those which bind the whole community. Of these the courts take judicial cognizance.

Private or special acts are those which operate only upon particular persons and private concerns.

The recitals of public acts are evidence of the facts recited, but in private acts they are only evidence against the parties securing them; Branson v. Wirth, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 32, 21 L. Ed. 566.

Judicial Act. An act performed by a court touching the rights of parties or property brought before it by voluntary appearance, or by the prior action of ministerial officers; in short by ministerial acts. Flournoy v. Jeffersonville, 17 Ind. 173, 79 Am. Dec. 468; Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 700, 761, 25 L. Ed. 496.

See STATUTE; CONSTITUTIONAL; CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION; PUNCTUATION.

Act in pais. An act performed out of court, and which is not a matter of record.

A deed or an assurance transacted between two or more private persons in the country, that is, according to the old common law, upon the very spot to be transferred, is matter in pais. 2 Bla. Com. 294.

ACT OF BANKRUPTCY. An act which subjects a person to be proceeded against as a bankrupt. See BANKRUPT; BANKRUPT LAWS; INSOLVENCY.

ACT OF GOD. Any accident due to natural causes directly and exclusively without human intervention, such as could not have been prevented by any amount of foresight and pains, and care reasonably to have been expected. L. R. 1 C. P. D. 423. See also L. R. 10 Ex. 255. The civil law employs, as a corresponding term, vis major.

The term generally applies, broadly, to natural accidents, such as those caused by lightning, earthquakes, and tempests; Story, Bailm. § 511; Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393. A severe snow-storm, which blocked up railroads, held within the rule;

Ballentine v. R. Co., 40 Mo. 491, 93 Am. Dec. 315. So where fruit-trees were frozen, in transit, it was held to be by the act of God, unless there had been improper delay on the part of the carrier; Vail v. R. Co., 63 Mo. 230. Also where fruit is in transit; Swetland v. R. Co., 102 Mass. 276. The freezing of a canal or river held within the rule; Parsons v. Hardy, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 215, 28 Am. Dec. 521; Bowman v. Teall, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 306, 35 Am. Dec. 562; Harris v. Rand, 4 N. H. 259, 17 Am. Dec. 421; Allen v. Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 437, 4 Am. Rep. 700. A frost of extraordinary severity; 11 Ex. 781; and an extraordinary fall of snow; 28 L. J. Ex. 51; have been held to be the act of God. A sudden failure of wind has been held to be an act of God; Colt v. McMechen, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 160, 5 Am. Dec. 200; but this case has been doubted; 1 Sm. L. C. Am. ed. 417; and Kent, Ch. J., substantially dissented; see also McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 190. Also a sudden gust of wind or tempest; Gillett v. Ellis, 11 Ill. 579; City of Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649. Losses by fire have not generally been held to fall under the act of God; 1 T. R. 33; Miller v. Navigation Co., 10 N. Y. 431; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 69 Ill. 285, 18 Am. Rep. 613; Merchants' Dispatch Co. v. Smith, 76 Ill. 542 (the Chicago fire); though otherwise when the fire is caused by lightning; Parker v. Flagg, 26 Me. 181, 45 Am. Dec. 101; but where a distant forest fire was driven by a tornado, to where a carrier's cars were on the track awaiting a locomotive, their destruction was held to be by the act of God; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Fries, 87 Pa. 234; but see Chevallier v. Straham, 2 Tex. 115, 47 Am. Dec. 639, contra. When a flood had risen higher than ever before, destruction of goods thereby was held to be by act of God; Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426, or where there is a flood; Long v. R. Co., 147 Pa. 343, 23 Atl. 459, 14 L. R. A. 741, 30 Am. St. Rep. 732; Livezey v. Philadelphia, 64 Pa. 106, 3 Am. Rep. 578. The bursting of a boiler does not come within the act of God; M'Call v. Brock, 5 Strob. (S. C.) 119. See Sherman v. Wells, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 403; Fergusson v. Brent, 12 Md. 9, 71 Am. Dec. 582; Sprowl v. Kellar, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 382; Hill v. Sturgeon, 28 Mo. 323. If water in a spring failed by reason of drouth, there is no breach of contract for its supply; Ward v. Vance, 93 Pa. 502. If a person is thrown from his horse and injured, the resulting illness was considered an act of God; People v. Tubbs, 37 N. Y. 586; so where a railroad engineer became insane; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Hall, 124 Ga. 322, 52 S. E. 679, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170, 4 Ann. Cas. 128.

In 1 C. P. D. 34, 423, Cockburn, C. J., held, in an action for the loss of a horse on ship-board, that if a carrier "uses all the known means to which prudent and experienced carriers usually have recourse, he does all that can be reasonably required of him, and if under such circumstances he is overpowered by storm or other natural agency, he is within the rule which gives immunity from the effects of such vis major as the act of God." The accident, to come within the rule, must be due entirely to natural causes without human intervention; ibid., also Mershon v. Hobensack, 22 N. J. L. 373; Backhouse v. Sneed, 5 N. C. 173; Ewart v. Street, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 157, 23 Am. Dec. 143; Smyrl v. Niolon, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 421, 23 Am. Dec. 146.

The term is sometimes defined as equivalent to inevitable accident; Neal v. Saunderson, 2 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 572, 41 Am. Dec. 609; Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393; but incorrectly, as there is a distinction between the two; although Sir William Jones proposed the use of inevitable accident instead of Act of God; Jones, Bailm. 104. See Story, Bailm. § 25; 2 Bla. Com. 122; 4 Dougl. 287; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 190; Neal v. Saunderson, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 572, 41 Am. Dec. 609; Bolton v. Burnett, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 222.

Where the law casts a duty on a party, the performance shall be excused if it be rendered impossible by the act of God; lex neminem cogit ad impossibilia; 1 Q. B. D. 548; but where the party by his own contract engages to do an act, it is deemed to be his own fault that he did not thereby provide against contingencies, and exempt himself from responsibilities in certain events; and in such case (that is, in the instance of an absolute general contract) the non-performance is not excused by an inevitable accident, or other contingency, although not foreseen by, nor within the control of, the party; 3 M. & S. 267; L. R. 5 C. P. 586; L. R. 4 Q. B. 134; Leake, Contr. 683.

ACT OF GOVERNMENT. The usual name of Cromwell's Constitution vesting the supreme power in a Protector and two houses of Parliament, passed March 25, 1657.

ACT OF GRACE. A term sometimes applied to a general pardon or the granting or extension of some privilege at the beginning of a new reign or the coming of age or marriage of a sovereign.

ACT OF HONOR. An instrument drawn up by a notary public, after protest of a bill of exchange, when a third party is desirous of paying or accepting the bill for the honor of any or all of the parties to it.

The instrument describes the bill, recites its protest, and the fact of a third person coming forward to accept, and the person or persons for whose honor the acceptance is made. The right to pay the debt of another, and still hold him, is allowed by the law merchant in this instance, and is an exception to the general rule of law; and the right can only be gained by proceeding in the form and manner sanctioned by the law; Gazzam v. Armstrong's Ex'r, 3 Dana (Ky.) 554; Bayley, Bills.

ACT OF INDEMNITY. An act or decree absolving a public officer or other person who has used doubtful powers or usurped an authority not belonging to him from the technical legal penalties or liabilities therefor or from making good losses incurred thereby. Cent. Dict.

ACT OF INSOLVENCY. Within the meaning of the national currency act, an act which shows a bank to be insolvent; such as non-payment of its circulating notes, etc., failure to make good the impairment of capital or to keep good its surplus or reserve; any act which shows the bank is unable to meet its liabilities as they mature or to perform those duties which the law imposes for the purpose of sustaining its credit; In re Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 5 Biss. 504, Fed. Cas. No. 9,051; Irons v. Bank, 6 Biss. 301, Fed. Cas. No. 7,068. See INSOLVENCY.

ACT OF PARLIAMENT. See STATUTE.

ACT ON PETITION. A form of summary proceeding formerly in use in the High Court of Admiralty, in England, in which the parties stated their respective cases briefly, and supported their statements by affidavit. 2 Dods. Adm. 174, 184; 1 Hagg. Adm. 1, note.

The suitors of the English Admiralty were, under the former practice, ordinarily entitled to elect to proceed either by act on petition, or by the ancient and more formal mode of "plea and proof;" that is, by libel and answer, and the examination of witnesses; W. Rob. Adm. 169, 171, 172.

ACT OF SETTLEMENT. In English Law. The statute of 12 & 13 Will. III. c. 2, by which the crown of England was limited to the present royal family. 1 Bla. Com. 128; 2 Steph. Com. 290. It excluded the sons and successors of James II. and all other Roman Catholics, entailed the crown on the Electress Sophia of Hanover as the nearest Protestant heir in case neither William III. nor Anne (afterwards queen) should leave issue. The electress was a daughter of Elizabeth, sister of Charles I. One clause of it made the tenure of judges' office for life or good behavior independent of the crown.

ACT OF STATE. See GOVERNMENTAL ACT.

ACT OF SUPREMACY. An act of 26 Hen. VIII. c. 1, which recognized the king as the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England having full power to correct all errors, heresies, abuses, offenses, contempts and enormities. The oath, taken under the act, denies to the Pope any other authority than that of the Bishop of Rome.

ACT OF UNIFORMITY. An act for the regulation of public worship obliging all the clergy to use only the Book of Common Prayer; 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4.

ACT OF UNION. The statutes uniting England and Wales, 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, confirmed by 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 26; England and Scotland, 5 Anne, c. 8; Great Britain and Ireland, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67.

The act uniting the three lower counties (now Delaware) to the province of Pennsylvania, passed at Upland, Dec. 7, 1682, is so called.

ACTA DIURNA (Lat.). A formula often used in signing. Du Cange.

Daily transactions, chronicles, journals, registers. I do not find the thing published in the acta diurna (daily records of affairs); Tacitus, Ann. 3, 3; Ainsworth, Lex.; Smith, Lex.

ACTA PUBLICA (Lat.). Things of general knowledge and concern; matters transacted before certain public officers. Calvinus, Lex.

ACTING. Performing; operating. See Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 603, 605. When applied to a supervising executive, it designates, not an appointed incumbent, but merely a locum tenens. Fraser v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 507. See AD INTERIM.

ACTIO. In Civil Law. A specific mode of enforcing a right before the courts of law: e. g. legis actio; actio sacramenti. In this sense we speak of actions in our law, e. g. the action of debt. The right to a remedy, thus; ex nudo pacto non oritur actio; no right of action can arise upon a naked pact. In this sense we rarely use the word action; 3 Ortolan, Inst. § 1830; 5 Savigny, System 10; Mackeldey, Civ. L. (13th ed.) § 193.

The first sense here given is the older one. Justinian, following Celsus, gives the well-known definition: Actio nihil aliud est quam jus persequendi in iudicio quod sibi debetur, which may be thus rendered: An action is simply the right to enforce one's demands in a court of law. See Inst. Jus. 4, 6, de Actionibus; Pollock, Expansion of C. L. 92.

In the sense of a specific form of remedy, there are various divisions of actiones.

Actiones civiles are those forms of remedies which were established under the rigid and inflexible system of the civil law, the jus civile. Actiones honorariæ are those which were gradually introduced by the prætors and ædiles, by virtue of their equitable powers, in order to prevent the failure of justice which too often resulted from the employment of the actiones civiles. These were found so beneficial in practice that they eventually supplanted the old remedies, of which in the time of Justinian hardly a trace remained. Mackeldey, Civ. L. § 194; 5 Savigny, System.

Directæ actiones, as a class, were forms of remedies for cases clearly defined and recognized as actionable by the law. Utiles actiones were remedies granted by the magistrate in cases to which no actio directæ was applicable. They were framed for the special occasion, by analogy to the existing forms, and were generally fictitious; that is, they proceeded upon the assumption that a state of things existed which would have entitled the party to an actio directæ, and the cause was tried upon this assumption, which the other party was not allowed to dispute. 5 Savigny, System § 215.

Again, there are actiones in personam and actiones in rem. The former class includes all remedies for the breach of an obligation, and are considered to be directed against the person of the wrong-doer. The second class comprehends all remedies devised for the recovery of property, or the enforcement of a right not founded upon a contract between the parties, and are therefore considered as rather aimed at the thing in dispute, than at the person of the defendant. Mackeldey, Civ. L. § 195; 5 Savigny, System, § 206; 3 Ortolan, Inst. § 1952.

In respect to their object, actions are either actiones rei persequendæ causa comparatæ, to which class belong all in rem actiones, and those of the actiones in personam which were directed merely to the recovery of the value of a thing, or compensation for an injury; or they are actiones pœnales, called also actiones ex delicto, in which a penalty was recovered of the delinquent, or actiones mixtæ, in which were recovered both the actual damages and a penalty in addition. These classes, actiones pœnales and actiones mixtæ, comprehended cases of injuries, for which the civil law permitted redress by private action, but which modern civilization universally regards as crimes; that is, offences against society at large, and punished by proceedings in the name of the state alone. Thus, theft, receiving stolen goods, robbery, malicious mischief, and the murder or negligent homicide of a slave (in which case an injury to property was involved), gave rise to private actions for damages against the delinquent. Inst. 4. 1. De obligationibus quæ ex delicto nascuntur; id. 2. De bonis vi raptis; id. 3. De lege Aquilia. And see Mackeldey, Civ. L. § 196; 5 Savigny, System § 210.

In respect to the mode of procedure; actiones in personam are divided into stricti juris, and bonæ fidei actiones. In the former the court was confined to the strict letter of the law; in the latter something was left to the discretion of the judge, who was governed in his decision by considerations of what ought to be expected from an honest man under circumstances similar to those of the plaintiff or defendant. Mackeldey, Civ. L. § 197 a.

In Savigny's System there are more than a hundred different species of actio mentioned, and even in the succinct treatise of Mackeldey nearly eighty are enumerated.

In addition to the works cited may be added the Introduction to Sandars' Justinian, which may be profitably consulted.

To this brief explanation of the most important classes of actiones we subjoin an outline of the Roman system of procedure. From the time of the twelve tables (and probably from a much earlier period) down to about the middle of the sixth century of Rome, the system of procedure was that known as the actiones legis. Of these but five have come down to us by name; the actio sacramenti, the actio per iudicis postulationem, the actio per conditionem, the actio per manus injectionem, and the actio per pignoris captionem. The first three of these were actions in the usual sense of the term; the last two were modes of execution. The actio sacramenti is the best known of all, because from the nature of the questions decided by means of it, which included those of status, of property ex jure Quiritium, and of successions; and from the great popularity of the tribunal, the centumviri, which had cognizance of these questions, it was retained in practice long after the other actions had succumbed to a more liberal system of procedure. As the actio sacramenti was the longest-lived, so it was also the earliest, of the actiones legis; and it is not only in many particulars a type of the whole class, but the other species are conceived to have been formed by successive encroachments upon its field. The characteristic feature of this action was the sacramentum, a pecuniary deposit made in court by each party, which was to be forfeited by the loser. Subsequently, however, the parties were allowed, instead of an actual deposit, to give security in the amount required. Our knowledge of all these actions is exceedingly slight, being derived from fragments of the earlier jurisprudence preserved in literary works, laboriously pieced together by commentators, and the numerous gaps filled out by aid of ingenious and most copious conjectures. They abounded in sacramental words and significant gestures, and, while they were inflexibly rigid in their application, they possessed a character almost sacred, so that the mistake of a word or the omission of a gesture might cause the loss of a suit. In the nature of things, such a system could not maintain itself against the advance of civilization, bringing with it increased complications in all the relations of man to man; and accordingly we find that it gradually, but sensibly, declined, and that at the time of Justinian not a trace of it existed in practice. See 3 Ortolan, Justinian 467 et seq.

About the year of Rome 507 began the introduction of the system known as the procedure per formulam, or ordinaria judicia. An important part of the population of Rome consisted of foreigners, whose disputes with each other or with Roman citizens could not be adjusted by means of the actiones legis, these being entirely confined to questions of the strict Roman law, which could only arise between Roman citizens.

To supply the want of a forum for foreign residents, a magistrate, the prætor peregrinus, was constituted with jurisdiction over this class of suits, and from the procedure established by this new court sprang the formulary system, which proved so convenient in practice that it was soon adopted in suits where both parties were Roman citizens, and gradually withdrew case after case from the domain of the legis actiones, until few questions were left in which that cumbrous procedure continued to be employed.

An important feature of the formulary system, though not peculiar to that system, was the distinction between the ius and the judicium, between the magistrate and the judge. The magistrate was vested with the civil authority, imperium, and that jurisdiction over law-suits which in every state is inherent in the supreme power; he received the parties, heard their conflicting statements, and referred the case to a special tribunal of one or more persons, iudex, arbitrator, recuperatores. The function of this tribunal was to ascertain the facts and pronounce judgment thereon, in conformity with a special authorization to that effect conferred by the magistrate. Here the authority of the judge ended; if the defeated party refused to comply with the sentence, the victor must again resort to the magistrate to enforce the judgment. From this it would appear that the functions of the judge or judges under the Roman system corresponded in many respects with those of the jury at common law. They decided the question of fact submitted to them by the magistrate, as the jury decides the issue eliminated by the pleadings; and, the decision made, their functions ceased, like those of the jury.

As to the amount at stake, the magistrate, in cases admitting it, had the power to fix the sum in dispute, and then the judge's duties were confined to the simple question whether the sum specified was due the plaintiff or not; and if he increased or diminished this amount he subjected himself to an action for damages. In other cases, instead of a precise sum, the magistrate fixed a maximum sum, beyond which the judge could not go in ascertaining the amount due; but in most cases the magistrate left the amount entirely to the discretion of the judge.

The directions of the magistrate to the judge were made up in a brief statement called the formula, which gives its name to this system of procedure. The composition of the formula was governed by well-established rules. When complete, it consisted of four parts, though some of these were frequently omitted, as they were unnecessary in certain classes of actions. The first part of the formula, called the demonstratio, recited the subject submitted to the judge, and consequently the facts of which he was to take cognizance. It varied of course, with the subject-matter of the suit, though each class of cases had a fixed and appropriate form. This form, in an action by a vendor against his vendee, was as follows: "Quod Aulus Agerius Numerio Negidium hominem vendidit," or, in case of a bailment, "Quod Aulus Agerius apud Numerium Negidium hominem deposuit." The second part of the formula was the intentio: in this was stated the claim of the plaintiff, as founded upon the facts set out in the demonstratio. This, in a question of contracts, was in these words: "Si paret Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio sestertium X milia dare oportere," when the magistrate fixed the amount; or, "Quidquid paret Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio dare facere oportere," when he left the amount to the discretion of the judge. In a claim of property the form was, "Si paret hominem ex jure Quiritium Auli Agerii esse." The third part of the complete formula was the adjudicatio, which contained the authority to the judge to award to one party a right of property belonging to the other. It was in these words: "Quantum adjudicari oportet, iudex Titio adjudicato." The last part of the formula was the condemnatio, which gave the judge authority to pronounce his decision for or against the defendant. It was as follows: "Judex, Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio sestertium X milia condemna: si non paret, absolve," when the amount was fixed; or, "Judex, Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio duntaxat X milia condemna: si non paret, absolvo," when the magistrate fixed a maximum; or, "Quanti ea res erit, tantam pecuniam, iudex, Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio condemna: si non paret, absolvo," when it was left to the discretion of the judge.

Of these parts, the intentio and the condemnatio were always employed: the demonstratio was sometimes found unnecessary, and the adjudicatio only occurred in three species of actions—familia erciscundæ communi dividundo, and finium regundorum—which were actions for division of an inheritance, actions of partition, and suits for the rectification of boundaries.

The above are the essential parts of the formula in their simplest form; but they are often enlarged by the insertion of clauses in the demonstratio, the intentio, or the condemnatio, which were useful or necessary in certain cases: these clauses are called adjectiones. When such a clause was inserted for the benefit of the defendant, containing a statement of his defence to the claim set out in the intentio, it was called an exceptio. To this the plaintiff might have an answer, which, when inserted, constituted the replicatio, and so on to the duplicatio and triplicatio. These clauses like the intentio in which they were inserted, were all framed conditionally, and not, like the common-law pleadings, affirmatively. Thus: "Si paret Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio X milia dare oportere (intentio); si in ea re nihil dolo malo Auli Ageris factum sit neque fiat (exceptio); Si non, etc. (replicatio)."

In preparing the formula the plaintiff presented to the magistrate his demonstratio, intentio, etc., which was probably drawn in due form under the advice of a juriconsult; the defendant then presented his adjectiones, the plaintiff responded with his replications and so on. The magistrate might modify these, or insert new adjectiones, at his discretion. After this discussion in jure, pro tribunali, the magistrate reduced the results to form, and sent the formula to the judge, before whom the parties were confined to the case thus settled. See 3 Ortolan, Justinian, §§ 1969 et seq.

The procedure per formulam was supplanted in course of time by a third system, extraordinaria iudicia, which in the days of Justinian had become universal. The essence of this system consisted in dispensing with the judge altogether, so that the magistrate decided the case himself, and the distinction between the jus and the judicium was practically abolished. This new system commenced with usurpation by the magistrates, in the extension of an exceptional jurisdiction, which had existed from the time of the leges actiones, to cases not originally within its scope. Its progress may be traced by successive enactments of the emperors, and was so gradual that, even when it had completely undermined its predecessor, the magistrate continued to reduce to writing a sort of formula representing the result of the pleadings. In time, however, this last relic of the former practice was abolished by an imperial constitution. Thus the formulary system, the creation of the great Roman juriconsults, was swept away, and carried with it in its fall all those refinements of litigation in which they had so much delighted. Thenceforth the distinctions between the forms of actions were no longer regarded, and the word actio, losing its signification of a form, came to mean a right, jus persequendi in iudicio quod sibi debetur.

See Ortolan, Hist. no. 392 et seq.; id. Instit. nos. 1833-2067; 5 Savigny, System § 6; Sandars, Justinian, Introduction; Gaius, by Abdy & Walker.

The English "formulary system" of actions is "distinctively English but also in a certain sense very Roman." It was not "invented in one piece by some all-wise legislator," but "grew up little by little." The age of its rapid growth was between 1154 and 1272. The similarity between the Roman and English formulary systems is so patent that it has naturally aroused the suggestion that one must have been the model for the other, and it is very true that between 1150 and 1250, or thereabouts, the old Roman law in its medieval form exercised a powerful influence on some of the English rules. But the differences in the system were as remarkable as the resemblances. Thus the Prætor heard both parties before he composed his formula, while the chancellor issues the writ before he hears the defendant's story. It is usually "as of course." The English forms of action were therefore not mere rubrics, but were institutes of the law. There were in common use some thirty or forty actions between which there were large differences. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 556.

See JUS AD REM.

ACTIO ÆSTIMATORIA, ACTIO QUANTI MINORIS. In the civil law two names of an action which lay on behalf of a buyer to reduce the contract price proportionately to the defects of the object, not to cancel the sale; the judex had power, however, to cancel the sale; Hunter, Rom. Law 505.

ACTIO ARBITRARIA. An action depending on the discretion of the judge. In this, unless the defendant makes amends to the plaintiff at the judge's discretion, he must be condemned; Hunter, Rom. Law 987.

ACTIO BONÆ FIDEI (Lat. an action of good faith). A class of actions in which the judge might at the trial take into account any equitable circumstances affecting either of the parties to the action. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 210.

ACTIO CALUMNIÆ. An action to restrain the defendant from prosecuting a trumped up charge against the plaintiff. Hunter, Rom. Law 1020. An action for malicious prosecution. So. Afr. Leg. Dict.

ACTIO CIVILIS. A civil as distinguished from a criminal action.

ACTIO COMMODATI CONTRARIA. An action by the borrower against the lender, to compel the execution of the contract. Pothier, Prêt à Usage n. 75.

ACTIO COMMODATI DIRECTA. An action by a lender against a borrower, the principal object of which is to obtain a restitution of the thing lent. Pothier, Prêt à Usage nn. 65, 68.

ACTIO COMMUNI DIVIDUNDO. An action for a division of the property held in common. Story, Partn. Bennett ed. § 352.

ACTIO CONDUCTIO INDEBITATI. An action by which the plaintiff recovers the amount of a sum of money or other thing he paid by mistake. Pothier, Promutuum n. 140; Merlin, Rép.

ACTIO EX CONDUCTO. An action which the bailor of a thing for hire may bring against the bailee, in order to compel him to re-deliver the thing hired. Pothier, du Contr. de Louage n. 59; Merlin, Rép.

ACTIO CONFESSORIA. An affirmative petitory action for the enforcement of a servitude. Hunter, Rom. Law 425.

ACTIO EX CONTRACTU. See ACTION.

ACTIO DAMNI INJURIA. The name of a general class of actions for damages.

ACTIO EX DELICTO. See ACTION.

ACTIO DEPOSITI CONTRARIA. An action which the depositary has against the depositor, to compel him to fulfil his engagement towards him. Pothier, Du Dépôt n. 69.

ACTIO DEPOSITI DIRECTA. An action which is brought by the depositor against the depositary, in order to get back the thing deposited. Pothier, Du Dépôt n. 60.

ACTIO DIRECTA. A direct action; an action founded on strict law and conducted according to fixed forms founded on certain legal obligations.

ACTIO DE DOLO MALO. An action of fraud. It lay for a defrauded person against the defrauder and his heirs who had been enriched by the fraud, to obtain restitution of the thing of which he had been fraudulently deprived with all its accessions, or, where this was not practicable, for compensation in damages; Black, citing Mackeldy, Rom. Law § 227.

ACTIO EMPTI. An action to compel a seller to perform his obligations or pay compensation; also to enforce any special agreements by him embodied in a contract of sale. Hunter, Rom. L. 505.

ACTIO EXERCITORIA. An action against the exercitor or employer of a vessel. Black L. Dict.

ACTIO AD EXHIBENDUM. An action instituted for the purpose of compelling the person against whom it was brought to exhibit some thing or title in his power.

It was always preparatory to another action, which lay for the recovery of a thing movable or immovable; 1 Merlin, Quest. de Droit 84.

ACTIO IN FACTUM. An action adapted to the particular case which had an analogy to some actio in jus which was founded on some subsisting acknowledged law. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 212. The origin of these actions is strikingly similar to that of actions on the case at common law. See CASE.

ACTIO FAMILIÆ ERISCUNDÆ. An action for the division of an inheritance. Inst. 4. 6. 20; Bracton 100 b.

ACTIO FURTI. An action of theft. Just. 4, 1, 13-17. This could only be brought for the penalty attached to the offence, and not to recover the thing stolen, for which other actions were provided. Just. 4, 1, 13. An appeal of larceny. The old process by which a thief can be pursued and the goods vindicated. 2 Holdsw. Hist. Eng. L. 202.

ACTIO HONORARIA. An honorary or prætorian action. Dig. 44, 7, 25, 35.

ACTIO JUDICATI. An action instituted, after four months had elapsed after the rendition of judgment, in which the judge issued his warrant to seize, first, the movables, which were sold within eight days afterwards; and then the immovables, which were delivered in pledge to the creditors, or put under the care of a curator, and if, at the end of two months, the debt was not paid, the land was sold. Dig. 42. 1; Code, 8. 34.

According to some authorities, if the defendant then utterly denied the rendition of the former judgment, the plaintiff was driven to a new action, conducted like any other action, which was called actio judicati, and which had for its object the determination of the question whether such a judgment had been rendered. The exact meaning of the term is by no means clear. See Savigny, Syst. 305, 411; 3 Ortolan, Just. § 2033.

ACTIO LEGIS AQUILIÆ. In Civil Law. An action under the Aquilian law to recover damages for maliciously injuring in any way a thing belonging to another. Drop-sie's Mackeldey's Rom. Law, § 486.

ACTIO EX LOCATO. An action which a person who let a thing for hire to another might have against the hirer. Dig. 19, 2.

ACTIO MANDATI. An action founded upon a mandate. Dig. 17. 1.

ACTIO MIXTA. A mixed action for the recovery of a thing, or compensation for damages and also for the payment of a penalty partaking of the nature of an action in rem and in personam. Hunter, Rom. L. 340.

ACTIO NON. In Pleading. The declaration in a special plea "that the said plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his aforesaid action thereof against" the defendant (in Latin, actionem non habere debet).

It follows immediately after the statement of appearance and defence: 1 Chit. Plead. 531; 2 id. 421; Stephens, Plead. 394.

ACTIO NON ACCREVIT INFRA SEX ANNOS (Lat.). The action did not accrue within six years.

A plea of the statute of limitations, by which the defendant insists that the plaintiff's action has not accrued within six years. It differs from non assumpsit in this: non assumpsit is the proper plea to an action on a simple contract, when the action accrues on the promise; but when it does not accrue on the promise, but subsequently to it, the proper plea is actio non accrevit, etc.; Lawes, Plead. 733; Meade v. M'Dowell, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 200, 203; 2 Salk. 422; 2 Saund. 63 b.

ACTIO NON ULTERIUS. A name given in English pleading to the distinctive clause in the plea to the further maintenance of the action; introduced in place of the plea quis darrein continuance. Steph. Pl. 64, 65, 401; Black, Law Dict.

ACTIO DE PECULIO. An action concerning or against the peculium or separate property of a party.

ACTIO DE PECUNIA CONSTITUTA. An action for money due under a promise. Campbell, Rom. L. 150.

ACTIO PERSONALIS. A personal action. The proper term in the civil law is actio in personam. See that title and ACTIO.

ACTIO PERSONALIS MORITUR CUM PERSONA (Lat.). A personal action dies with the person.

In Practice. A maxim which expressed the law in regard to the surviving of personal actions.

This maxim does not apply in case of the civil death of either persons or corporations; Shayne v. Publishing Co., 168 N. Y. 70, 61 N. E. 115, 55 L. R. A. 777, 85 Am. St. Rep. 654.

To render the maxim perfectly true, the expression "personal actions" must be restricted very much within its usual limits. In the most extensive sense, all actions are personal which are neither real nor mixed, and in this sense of the word personal the maxim is not true. A further distinction, moreover, is to be made between personal actions actually commenced and pending at the death of the plaintiff or defendant, and causes of action upon which suit might have been, but was not, brought by or against the deceased in his lifetime. In the case of actions actually commenced, the old rule was that the suit abated by the death of either party. In re Connaway, 178 U. S. 421, 20 Sup. Ct. 951, 44 L. Ed. 1134; Macker's Heirs v. Thomas, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 530, 5 L. Ed. 515. But the inconvenience of this rigor of the common law has been modified by statutory provisions in England and the states of this country, which prescribe in substance that when the cause of action survives to or against the personal representatives of the deceased, the suit shall not abate by the death of the party, but may proceed on the substitution of the personal representatives on the record by scire facias, or in some states by simple suggestion of the facts on the record. See Green v. Watkins, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 260, 5 L. Ed. 256.

CONTRACTS.—It is clear that, in general, a man's personal representatives are liable for his breach of contract on the one hand, and, on the other, are entitled to enforce contracts made with him. This is the rule; but it admits of a few exceptions; Stimpson v. Sprague, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 470; Wright v. Eldred, 2 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 41.

No action lies against executors upon a covenant to be performed by the testator in person, and which consequently the executor cannot perform, and the performance of which is prevented by the death of testator; 3 Wils. Ch. 99; Cro. Eliz. 553; Howe Sewing Mach. Co. v. Rosensteel, 24 Fed. 583; as if an author undertakes to compose a work, or a master covenants to instruct an apprentice, but is prevented by death. See Wms. Exec. 1467. But, for a breach committed by deceased in his lifetime, his executor would be answerable; 1 M. & W. 423, per Parke, B.; Dickinson v. Calahan's Adm'rs, 19 Pa. 234.

As to what are such contracts, see 2 Perr. & D. 251; 10 Ad. & E. 45; 1 M. & W. 423; Dempsey v. Hertzfield, 30 Ga. 866; Siler v. Gray, 86 N. C. 566. But whether the contract is of such a nature is a mere question of construction, depending upon the intention of the parties; Cro. Jac. 282; 1 Bingh. 225; unless the intention be such as the law will not enforce; Dickinson v. Calahan's Adm'rs, 19 Pa. 233.

Under a statute recognizing as surviving causes of action those which survived at common law, a cause of action, on a covenant on which a decedent might have been sued, may be enforced against his representatives, and it was held that the rule of common law that a suit abated though the cause of action survived, was modified by the statute, and a suit pending against decedent on a covenant did not abate; Sprague v. Greene, 20 R. I. 153, 37 Atl. 699.

Again, an executor, etc., cannot maintain an action on a promise made to decedent where the damage consisted entirely in the personal suffering of the deceased without any injury to his personal estate, as a breach of promise of marriage; 2 M. & S. 408; Smith v. Sherman, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 408; Hovey v. Page, 55 Me. 142; L. R. 10 C. P. 189; Lattimore v. Simmons, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 183; Miller v. Wilson, 24 Pa. 115; Wade v. Kalbfleisch, 58 N. Y. 282, 17 Am. Rep. 250; Stebbins v. Palmer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 71, 11 Am. Dec. 146; Hayden v. Vreeland, 37 N. J. L. 372, 18 Am. Rep. 723; Grubb's Adm'r v. Sult, 32 Grat. (Va.) 203, 34 Am. Rep. 765. But in Louisiana the action survives if there has been a default, on the ground that the obligation to fulfill the engagement is merged in the obligation to respond in damages for the default; Johnson v. Levy, 118 La. 447, 43 South. 46, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1020, 118 Am. St. Rep. 378, 10 Ann. Cas. 722.

Upon the question whether the action survives where there is not only personal injury but damage to property also—where the latter is the chief element of the damages sought, the action survives; 2 M. & S. 409; Lattimore v. Simmons, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 183; Hovey v. Page, 55 Me. 142; but when the damages to the property are incidental merely to the personal injury there is less certainty. That the action survives is the inclination of English cases; L. R. C. P. 189; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 765; S. C. 32 id. 36; so also in Lattimore v. Simmons, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 183; Hovey v. Page, 55 Me. 142; at least to the extent of damage to property; Hegerich v. Keddle, 99 N. Y. 269, 1 N. E. 787, 52 Am. Rep. 25; Vittum v. Gilman, 48 N. H. 416; Cravath v. Plympton, 13 Mass. 454. To the contrary are Smith v. Sherman, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 408; Wade v. Kalbfleisch, 58 N. Y. 282, 17 Am. Rep. 250, which, however, was for breach of promise of marriage, and therefore, sui generis; and on this ground it is distinguished in Cregin v. R. Co., 75 N. Y. 192, 31 Am. Rep. 459, where an action by a husband against a carrier for personal injuries to his wife was held to survive as for a wrong to property rights or interests. Nor will an action of breach of promise of marriage survive against the executor of the promisor where no special damage to property is alleged; Chase v. Fitz, 132 Mass. 359;

Kelley v. Riley, 106 Mass. 339, 8 Am. Rep. 336; Stebbins v. Palmer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 71, 11 Am. Dec. 146; Larocque v. Conheim, 42 Misc. 613, 87 N. Y. Supp. 625; and this rule is not changed by statutes providing that actions for personal injuries shall not abate; Wade v. Kalbfleisch, 58 N. Y. 282, 17 Am. Rep. 250; Hayden v. Vreeland, 37 N. J. L. 372, 18 Am. Rep. 723; Smith v. Sherman, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 408; Hullett v. Baker, 101 Tenn. 689, 49 S. W. 757. This action does not survive the death of either party; French v. Merrill, 27 App. Div. 612, 50 N. Y. Supp. 776. See Johnson v. Levy, 118 La. 447, 43 South. 46, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1020, 118 Am. St. Rep. 378, 10 Ann. Cas. 722.

Nor does a right of action against a surgeon for malpractice survive his death; Boor v. Lowrey, 103 Ind. 468, 3 N. E. 151, 53 Am. Rep. 519; Vittum v. Gilman, 48 N. H. 416; Jenkins v. French, 58 N. H. 532; Wolf v. Wall, 40 Ohio St. 111; Best v. Vedder, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 187.

But a right of action for work and labor survives against one who induced plaintiff to marry and live with him on the false representation that he was a widower; Higgins v. Breen, 9 Mo. 497; as also the right to recover as for goods sold and delivered for goods transferred in consideration of a promise of marriage; Frazer v. Boss, 66 Ind. 1. And as to the right of an executor or administrator to sue on a contract broken in the testator's lifetime, where no damage to the personal estate can be stated, see 2 Cr. M. & R. 588; 5 Tyrwh. 985, and the cases there cited. The right to redeem survives; Clark v. Seagraves, 186 Mass. 430, 71 N. E. 813; and so does the statutory right of action for money paid on purchase or sale of securities with intention of no actual delivery; Anderson v. Stock Exchange, 191 Mass. 117, 77 N. E. 706; and the statutory action by a married woman for damages from sale of liquor to her husband survives after the death of the saloon keeper; Garrigan v. Huntimer, 20 S. D. 182, 105 N. W. 278.

Divorce proceedings being a personal action, death of either of the parties before decree abates the proceedings; Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493; Pearson v. Darrington, 32 Ala. 257; Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236; Swan v. Harrison, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 534; and the court will not require the executor to become a party in order to answer the wife's demand for additional allowance for counsel fees; McCurley v. McCurley, 60 Md. 185, 45 Am. Rep. 717. But defendant's death after trial but before judgment, will not abate the suit; Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236.

The fact whether or not the estate of the deceased has suffered loss or damage would seem to be the criterion of the right of the personal representative to sue in another class of cases, that is, where there is a breach of an implied promise founded on a tort. For where the action, though in form ex contractu, is founded upon a tort to the person, it does not in general survive to the executor. Thus, with respect to injuries affecting the life and health of the deceased; all such as arise out of the unskilfulness of medical practitioners; or the imprisonment of the party occasioned by the negligence of his attorney, no action, generally speaking, can be sustained by the executor or administrator on a breach of the implied promise by the person employed to exhibit a proper portion of skill and attention; such cases being in substance actions for injuries to the person; 2 M. & S. 415; 8 M. & W. 854; Jenkins v. French, 58 N. H. 532. And it has been held that for the breach of an implied promise of an attorney to investigate the title to a freehold estate, the executor of the purchaser cannot sue without stating that the testator sustained some actual damage to his estate; 4 J. B. Moore 532. But the law on this point has been considerably modified by statute.

On the other hand, where the breach of the implied promise has occasioned damage to the personal estate of the deceased, though it has been said that an action in form ex contractu founded upon a tort whereby damage has been occasioned to the estate of the deceased, as debt against the sheriff for an escape, does not survive at common law; Neal v. Haygood, 1 Ga. 514 (though in this case the rule is altered in that state by statute), yet the better opinion is that, if the executor can show that damage has accrued to the personal estate of the deceased by the breach of an express or implied promise, he may well sustain an action at common law, to recover such damage, though the action is in some sort founded on a tort; Wms. Exec. 676; citing, in extenso, 2 Brod. & B. 102; 4 J. B. Moore 532. And see 3 Woodd. Lect. 78. So, by waiving the tort in a trespass, and going for the value of the property, the action of assumpsit lies as well for as against executors; Middleton's Ex'rs v. Robinson, 1 Bay (S. C.) 58, 1 A. & Dec. 596.

A claim for money paid as usury survives against the estate of the person to whom it was paid; Roberts v. Burton's Estate, 27 Vt. 396; and so does an action against a justice of the peace on his official bond for neglect of duty; State v. Houston, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 291. The liability of a deceased joint debtor survives; Megrath v. Gilmore, 15 Wash. 558, 46 Pac. 1032; and the right of action of a joint payee; Semper v. Coates, 93 Minn. 76, 100 N. W. 662; and of the survivor of two joint parties to a contract; Northness v. Hillestad, 87 Minn. 304, 91 N. W. 1112.

In an action on a contract commenced against joint defendants, one of whom dies pending the suit, the rule varies. In some of the states the personal representatives of the deceased defendant may be added as parties and the judgment taken against them jointly with the survivors; Smith v. Crutcher, 27 Miss. 455; Bennett v. Spillars, 9 Tex. 519; Ewell v. Tye, 76 S. W. 875, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 976; Strause v. Braunreuter, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 125. In others the English rule obtains which requires judgment to be taken against the survivors only; and this is conceived to be the better rule, because the judgment against the original defendants is de bonis propriis, while that against the executors is de bonis testatoris; New Haven & N. Co. v. Hayden, 119 Mass. 361.

The death of one of several defendants works a severance and the plaintiff should either dismiss as to all except the administrator, or proceed against the living defendant only; Marcy v. Whallon, 115 Ill. App. 435.

Where action is pending against two partners, and the death of one is not suggested before judgment, the judgment is a lien on the partnership assets and binds the surviving partner personally; Sullivan v. Susong, 40 S. C. 154, 18 S. E. 268. On the death of a joint owner of a mortgage debt, it survives at law to the remaining owners who alone can sue for it; Cote v. Dequindre, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 64; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70. This is under a statute whereby mortgages are excepted from the provision that grants to two or more persons are to be construed to create estates in common. In a comment upon an English case where the personal representative was held to be a necessary party, as he would in equity be entitled to the decedent's share of the debt when collected (1 Beav. 539), the Michigan court says: "The reason given for the decision is true in point of fact, but the consequence deduced from it does not follow."

In an action commenced against directors, where one dies after the suit commenced, his executor need not be joined; Githers v. Clark, 158 Pa. 616, 28 Atl. 232. On the death of a joint guarantor, the action cannot be revived against his representatives; American Copper Co. v. Lowther, 25 Misc. 441, 54 N. Y. Supp. 960, affirmed, and in a joint bond, if one obligor die, the debt survives, but the facts must be pleaded; Bentley v. Harmanson's Ex'rs, 1 Wash. (Va.) 273.

TORTS.—The ancient maxim which we are discussing applies more peculiarly to cases of tort. It was a principle of the common law that, if an injury was done either to the person or property of another for which damages only could be recovered in satisfaction,—where the declaration imputes a tort done either to the person or property of another, and the plea must be not guilty,—the action died with the person to whom or by whom the wrong was done. See Wms. Exec. 668; 3 Bla. Com. 302; 1 Saund. 216, 217, n. (1); Viner, Abr. Executors 123; Comyn, Dig. Administrator, B. 13.

But if the goods, etc., of the testator taken away continue in specie in the hands of the wrong-doer, it has long been decided that replevin and detinue will lie for the executor to recover back the specific goods, etc.; W. Jones 173, 174; 1 Saund. 217; Trigg v. Conway, 1 Hempst. 711, Fed. Cas. No. 14,173; Noland v. Leech, 10 Ark. 504; or, in case they are sold, an action for money had and received will lie for the executor to recover the value; 1 Saund. 217. And actions ex delicto, where one has obtained the property of another and converted it, survive to the representatives of the injured party, as replevin, trespass de bonis asport. But where the wrong-doer acquired no gain, though the other party has suffered loss, the death of either party destroys the right of action; Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 351, 3 Am. Dec. 141; U. S. v. Daniel, 6 How. (U. S.) 11, 12 L. Ed. 323; Middleton's Ex'rs v. Robinson, 1 Bay (S. C.) 58, 1 Am. Dec. 596; Mellen v. Baldwin, 4 Mass. 480; McEvers v. Pitkin, 1 Root (Conn.) 216.

Successive innovations upon this rule of the common law have been made by various statutes with regard to actions which survive to executors and administrators.

The stat. 4 Ed. III. c. 7, gave a remedy to executors for a trespass done to the personal estate of their testators, which was extended to executors of executors by the stat. 25 Ed. III. c. 5. But these statutes did not include wrongs done to the person or freehold of the testator or intestate; Wms. Exec. 670. By an equitable construction of these statutes, an executor or administrator shall now have the same actions for any injury done to the personal estate of the testator in his lifetime, whereby it has become less beneficial to the executor or administrator, as the deceased himself might have had, whatever the form of action may be; 1 Saund. 217; 1 Carr. & K. 271; W. Jones 173; 2 M. & S. 416; 5 Co. 27 a; Cro. Car. 297. These statutes are a recognized part of the common law in this country; Hegerich v. Keddie, 99 N. Y. 260, 1 N. E. 787, 52 Am. Rep. 25; they are followed by many state statutes and both these and the English statutes have been liberally construed in favor of survival in both countries; 7 East 134; Baker's Adm'r v. Crandall, 78 Mo. 584, 47 Am. Rep. 126; Ten Eyck v. Runk, 31 N. J. L. 428; Withee v. Brooks, 65 Me. 18; Aldrich v. Howard, 8 R. I. 125, 86 Am. Rep. 615; Fried v. R. Co., 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 287; Nettles' Ex'rs v. D'Oyley, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 27. And the laws of the different states, either by express enactment or by having adopted the English statutes, give a remedy to executors in cases of injuries done to the personal property of their testator in his lifetime. At common law an action of replevin was abated by the death of the defendant, but not by the death of the plaintiff; Potter v. Van Vranken, 36 N. Y. 619, 627; Mellen v. Bald- win, 4 Mass. 480; 1 And. 241; and see Reist v. Heibrenner, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 131; Kelte v. Boyd, 16 id. 300; but the effect of the death of defendant is generally dependent upon the construction of state statutes under which, in most states, the action is saved, as in Kingsbury's Ex'rs v. Lane's Ex'rs, 21 Mo. 115; McCrory v. Hamilton, 39 Ill. App. 490; O'Neill v. Murry, 6 Dak. 107, 50 N. W. 619. In Hambly v. Trott, Cowp. 37, Lord Mansfield held that in actions ex delicto, the liability for the tort died with the person, but that if thereby property was acquired, the personal representatives were liable, and this principle has been extensively applied in connection with the stat. 4 Edw. III. both in the enactment and construction of the state statutes. The cases are collected and classified in 53 Am. Rep. 525, note.

Trover for a conversion in the lifetime of the testator may be brought by his executor; Parrott's Adm'r v. Dubignon, T. U. P. Charl. (Ga.) 261; Eubanks v. Dobbs, 4 Ark. 173; Nations v. Hawkins' Adm'r, 11 Ala. 859. But an executor cannot sue for expenses incurred by his testator in defending against a groundless suit; Deming v. Taylor, 1 Day (Conn.) 285; nor in Alabama (under the Act of 1826) for any injury done in the lifetime of deceased; Garey v. Edwards, 15 Ala. 109; nor in Vermont can he bring trespass on the case, except to recover damages for an injury to some specific property; Barrett's Adm'r v. Copeland, 20 Vt. 244. And he cannot bring case against a sheriff for a false return in testator's action; ibid. But he may have case against the sheriff for not keeping property attached, and delivering it to the officer holding the execution in his testator's suit; Barrett's Adm'r v. Copeland, 20 Vt. 244, n.; and case against the sheriff for the default of his deputy in not paying over to testator money collected in execution; Bellows v. Allen's Adm'r, 22 Vt. 108. An action in the nature of an action on the case for injuries resulting from breach of carrier's contract to transport a passenger safely, survives to the personal representative; Winnegar's Adm'r v. Ry. Co., 85 Ky. 547, 4 S. W. 237. An executor may revive an action against the sheriff for misfeasance of his deputy, but not an action against the deputy for his misfeasance; Valentine v. Norton, 30 Me. 194. So, where the action is merely penal, it does not survive; Estis' Ex'r v. Lenox, 1 N. C. 292; as to recover penalties for taking illegal fees by an officer from the intestate in his lifetime; Reed v. Cist, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 183. But in such case the administrator may recover back the excess paid above the legal charge; ibid.

Under the common law an action to recover a penalty or forfeiture dies with the person; U. S. v. De Goer, 38 Fed. 80. The action will not abate upon death of the relator, if it is brought by the state upon an official bond; Davenport v. McKee, 98 N. C. 500, 4 S. E. 545.

The stat. 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 42, § 2, gave a remedy to executors, etc., for injuries done in the lifetime of the testator or intestate to his real property, which case was not embraced in the stat. Ed. III. This statute introduced a material alteration in the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona as well in favor of executors and administrators of the party injured as against the personal representatives of the wrongdoer, but respects only injuries to personal and real property; Chit. Pl. Parties to Actions in form ex delicto. Similar statutory provisions have been made in most of the states. Thus, trespass quare clausum fregit survives; Dobbs v. Gullidge, 20 N. C. 197; McPherson v. Seguire, 14 N. C. 153; Kennerly v. Wilson, 1 Md. 102; Winters v. McGhee, 3 Sneed 128; Musick v. Ry. Co., 114 Mo. 309, 21 S. W. 491; Wilbur v. Gilmore, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 250; even if action was begun after the death of the injured party; Goodridge v. Rogers, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 495; Herbert v. Hendrickson, 38 N. J. L. 296; proceedings to recover damages for injuries to land by overflowing; Howcott's Ex'rs v. Warren, 29 N. C. 20; Upper Appomattox Co. v. Harding, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 1; contra, McLaughlin v. Dorsey, 1 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 224. Ejectment in the United States circuit court does not abate by death of plaintiff; Hatfield v. Bushnell, 22 Vt. 659, Fed. Cas. No. 6,211. In Illinois the statute law allows an action to executors only for an injury to the personality, or personal wrongs, leaving injuries to realty as at common law; Reed v. R. Co., 18 Ill. 403.

Injuries to the person. In cases of injuries to the person, whether by assault, battery, false imprisonment, slander, negligence, or otherwise, if either the party who received or he who committed the injury die, the maxim applies rigidly, and no action at common law can be supported either by or against the executors or other personal representatives; 3 Bla. Com. 302; 2 M. & S. 408; Mobile Life Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 756, 24 L. Ed. 580; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 25 Conn. 265, 65 Am. Dec. 571; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Keely's Adm'r, 23 Ind. 133; Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; Winnegar's Adm'r v. R. Co., 85 Ky. 547, 4 S. W. 237; Roche v. Carroll, 6 D. C. 79; Thayer v. Dudley, 3 Mass. 296; and the action is not impliedly saved by a statute giving a right of action after death to the personal representatives; Martin's Adm'r v. R. Co., 151 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 533, 38 L. Ed. 311. A case for the seduction of a man's daughter; Brawner v. Sterdevant, 9 Ga. 69; for libel; Walters v. Nettleton, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 544; for malicious prosecution; Nettleton v. Dinehart, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 543; are instances of the general rule stated. The death of one defendant, where partners are sued for libel, does not abate the action, even aside from the statute; Brown v. Kellogg, 182 Mass. 297, 65 N. E. 378. But in one respect this rule has been materially modified in England by Lord Campbell's Act, and in this country by like acts in many states. These provide for the case where a wrongful act, neglect, or default has caused the death of the injured person, and the act is of such a nature that the injured person, had he lived, would have had an action against the wrong-doer. In such cases the wrong-doer is rendered liable, in general, not to the executors or administrators of the deceased, but to his near relations, husband, wife, parent or child. In the construction given to these acts, the courts have held that the measure of damages is in general the pecuniary value of the life of the person killed to the person bringing suit, and that vindictive or exemplary damages by reason of gross negligence on the part of the wrong-doer are not allowable; Sedg. Damages.

Most states have statutes founded on Lord Campbell's Act. In some states, by statute, an action may be brought against a city or town for damages to the person of deceased occasioned by an assault by another's dogs; Wilkins v. Wainwright, 173 Mass. 212, 53 N. E. 397; or by reason of a defect in a highway; Demond v. City of Boston, 7 Gray (Mass.) 544; Roberts v. City of Detroit, 102 Mich. 64, 60 N. W. 450, 27 L. R. A. 572; but it is otherwise in South Carolina; All v. Barnwell County, 29 S. C. 161, 7 S. E. 58. In Ohio it is considered to be an action "for a nuisance" and abates at the death of the party injured; Village of Cardington v. Fredericks, 46 Ohio 442, 21 N. E. 766. But where the death, caused by a railway collision, was instantaneous, no action can be maintained under the statute of Massachusetts; for the statute supposes the party deceased to have been once entitled to an action for the injury, and either to have commenced the action and subsequently died, or, being entitled to bring it, to have died before exercising the right; Kearney v. R. Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 108. Where a person during his lifetime commenced an action for damages for injuries, and the action was pending at his death, an action to recover damages for his death by his representative was barred; but such representatives had the right to continue the action commenced by the decedent in his lifetime; Edwards v. Gimbel, 202 Pa. 30, 51 Atl. 357. But it has been held that an administrator cannot continue an action brought by the decedent in his lifetime, as the only action maintainable is by the administrator under the statute for the benefit of the heirs; Martin v. R. Co., 58 Kan. 475, 49 Pac. 605. But the accruing of the right of action does not depend upon intelligence, consciousness, or mental capacity of any kind on the part of the person injured; Hollenbeck v. R. Co., 9

Cush. (Mass.) 478. By the removal of a case to the Federal Court, the right to revive an action for personal injuries, upon the death of the plaintiff, is not lost; In re Connaway, 178 U. S. 421, 20 Sup. Ct. 951, 44 L. Ed. 1134; Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Joy, 173 U. S. 226, 19 Sup. Ct. 387, 43 L. Ed. 677.

In some of the states the statutes vest the right of action in the personal representatives, but the damages recovered accrue to the benefit of the widow and next of kin; City of Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 349, 68 Am. Dec. 553; Whiton v. R. Co., 21 Wis. 305; Needham v. R. Co., 38 Vt. 294. And, by act of May 30, 1908, provision is made for compensation to government employes for injuries, or, in case of death, to the widow and children; Comp. Laws (1911) 468.

Damages may be recovered by the parents in an action for death of minor child; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 24 Md. 271; Ihl v. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 450; Ewen v. R. Co., 38 Wis. 613; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bantom, 54 Pa. 495; but there must have been a prospect of some pecuniary benefit had the child lived; 11 Q. B. D. 160; Rains v. R. Co., 71 Mo. 164, 36 Am. Rep. 459; 3 H. & N. 211. Where a father and daughter were injured by the same accident, and he died within an hour, held that the cause of action in him for his daughter's death did not survive to the mother, no action having been brought by him; King v. R. Co., 126 Ga. 794, 55 S. E. 965, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 544.

Actions against the executors or administrators of the wrong-doer. The common-law principle was that if an injury was done either to the person or property of another, for which damages only could be recovered in satisfaction, the action died with the person by whom the wrong was committed; 1 Saund. 216 a, note (1); McLaughlin v. Dorsey, 1 H. & McH. (Md.) 224. And where the cause of action is founded upon any malfeasance or misfeasance, is a tort, or arises ex delicto, such as trespass for taking goods, etc., trover, false imprisonment, assault and battery, slander, deceit, diverting a water-course, obstructing lights, and many other cases of the like kind, where the declaration imputes a tort done either to the person or the property of another, and the plea must be not guilty, the rule of the common law is actio personalis moritur cum persona; and if the person by whom the injury was committed die, no action of that kind can be brought against his executor or administrator. But now in England the stat. 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 42, § 2, authorizes an action of trespass, or trespass on the case, for an injury committed by deceased in respect to property real or personal of another. And similar provisions are in force in most of the states of this country. Thus, in Alabama, by statute, trover may be maintained against an executor for a conversion by his testator; Nations v. Hawkins' Adm'rs, 11 Ala. 859.

So in New Jersey, Terbune v. Bray's Ex'rs, 16 N. J. L. 54; Georgia, Woods v. Howell, 17 Ga. 495; and North Carolina; Weare v. Burge, 32 N. C. 169.

In Virginia, by statute, detinue already commenced against the wrongdoer survives against his executor, if the chattel actually came into the executor's possession; otherwise not; Allen's Ex'r v. Harlan's Adm'r, 6 Leigh (Va.) 42, 29 Am. Dec. 205; Catlett's Ex'r v. Russell, 6 Leigh (Va.) 344. So in Kentucky, Gentry's Adm'r v. McKehen, 5 Dana (Ky.) 34. Replevin in Missouri does not abate on the death of defendant; Kinsbury's Ex'rs v. Lane's Ex'r, 21 Mo. 115; nor does an action on a replevin bond in Delaware, Waples v. Adkins, 5 Harr. (Del.) 381. It has, indeed, been said that where the wrongdoer has secured no benefit to himself at the expense of the sufferer, the cause of action does not survive, but that where, by means of the offence, property is acquired which benefits the testator, then an action for the value of the property survives against the executor; U. S. v. Daniel, 6 How. (U. S.) 11, 12 L. Ed. 323; Coburn v. Ansart, 3 Mass. 321; Troup v. Smith's Ex'r, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 43; McEvers v. Pitkin, 1 Root (Conn.) 216; Cummins v. Cummins, 8 N. J. Eq. 173; Middleton's Ex'rs v. Robinson, 1 Bay (S. C.) 58, 1 Am. Dec. 596; and that where the wrongdoer has acquired gain by his wrong, the injured party may waive the tort and bring an action ex contractu against the representatives to recover compensation; Jones v. Hoar, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 285; Cummins v. Cummins, 8 N. J. Eq. 173.

But this rule, that the wrongdoer must have acquired a gain by his act in order that the cause of action may survive against his representatives, is not universal. Thus, though formerly in New York an action would not lie for a fraud of deceased which did not benefit the assets, yet it was otherwise for his fraudulent performance of a contract; Troup v. Smith's Ex'r, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 43; and now the statute of that state gives an action against the executor for every injury done by the testator, whether by force or negligence, to the property of another; Elder v. Bogardus, Lalor's Supp. (N. Y.) 116; as for fraudulent representations by the deceased in the sale of land; Haight v. Hayt, 19 N. Y. 464; or wasting, destroying, taking, or carrying away personal property; Snider v. Croy, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 227. Cases in which the survival of actions is fully considered are: Right of action against a sheriff does survive; Lynn's Adm'r v. Sisk, 9 B. Monr. 135; Paine v. Ulmer, 7 Mass. 317; Cravath v. Plympton, 13 Mass. 454 (but not one against a deputy sheriff; id.); one for a false return of execution; Jewett v. Weaver, 10 Mo. 234 (but not one against a constable for unnecessary assault in an arrest; Melvin v. Evans, 48 Mo. App. 421); case for injury to property; Jones v. Vanzandt, 4 McLean, 599, Fed. Cas. No. 7,503; trespass; Hamilton v. Jeffries, 15 Mo. 619; (both under statutes); suit against owner for criminal act of slave; Phillips v. Towler's Adm'rs, 23 Mo. 401; deceit in sale of chattels; 1 Car. L. Rev. 529; the remedy by petition for damages by overflowing lands; Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 23 N. C. 24; against an attorney for neglect; Miller v. Wilson, 24 Pa. 114; 3 Stark. 154; 1 D. & R. 30; damages by reason of false representations as to value of land; Henderson v. Henshall, 54 Fed. 320, 4 C. C. A. 357. Cases in which the right of action was held not to survive the death of the wrongdoer or defendant are: For torts unconnected with contract; Watson v. Loop, 12 Tex. 11; trespass; O'Conner v. Corbitt, 3 Cal. 370; actions for malicious prosecution; Conly v. Conly, 121 Mass. 550; whether brought in the lifetime of the wrongdoer or not; Jones v. Littlefield, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 133; McDermott v. Doyle, 17 Mo. 362; trespass for mesne profits; Harker v. Whitaker, 5 Watts (Pa.) 474; Means v. Presbyterian Church, 3 Pa. 93; Burgess v. Gates, 20 Vt. 326; In re Renwick's Estate, 2 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 80; (but the representative may be sued on contract; id.); contra, Molton v. Munford's Adm'r, 10 N. C. 490; Burgess v. Gates, 20 Vt. 326 (by statute); case for false representation; Henshaw v. Miller, 17 How. (U. S.) 212, 15 L. Ed. 222. Trespass for crim. con., where defendant dies pending the suit, does not survive against his personal representatives; Clarke v. McClelland, 9 Pa. 128. Where an action of trespass is brought by a widow for killing her husband, it abates with death of defendant; Weiss v. Hunsicker, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 398.

Where the intestate had falsely pretended that he was divorced from his wife, whereby another was induced to marry him, the latter cannot maintain an action against his personal representatives; Grim v. Carr's Adm'rs, 31 Pa. 533. Case for nuisance does not lie against executors of a wrongdoer; Hawkins' Ex'rs v. Glass, 1 Bibb. (Ky.) 246; Knox v. Sterling, 73 Ill. 214; nor for fraud in the exchange of horses; Coker v. Crozier, 5 Ala. 369; nor, under the statute of Virginia, for fraudulently recommending a person as worthy of credit; Henshaw v. Miller, 17 How. (U. S.) 212, 15 L. Ed. 222; nor for negligence of a constable, whereby he failed to make the money on an execution; Logan v. Barclay, 3 Ala. 361; nor for misfeasance of constable; Gent v. Gray, 29 Me. 462; nor against the personal representatives of a sheriff for an escape, or for taking insufficient bail bond; Cunningham v. Jaques, 19 N. J. L. 42; nor against the administrators of the marshal for a false return of execution, or imperfect and insufficient entries thereon; U. S. v. Daniel, 6 How. (U. S.) 11, 12 L. Ed. 323; nor does debt for an escape survive against the sheriff's executors; Martin v.

Bradley, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 124; aliter in Georgia, by statute; Neal v. Haygood, 1 Ga. 514. An action against the sheriff to recover penalties for his failure to return process does not survive against his executors; Mason v. Ballew, 35 N. C. 483; nor does an action lie against the representatives of a deceased postmaster for money feloniously taken out of letters by his clerk; Franklin v. Low, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 396. See ABATEMENT.

ACTIO IN PERSONAM (Lat. an action against the person).

A personal action.

This is the term in use in the civil law to denote the actions which in the common law are called personal. In modern usage it is applied in English and American law to those suits in admiralty which are directed against the person of the defendant, as distinguished from those in rem which are directed against the specific thing from which (or rather the proceeds of the sale of which) the complainant expects and claims a right to derive satisfaction for the injury done to him; 2 Pars. Mar. Law. 663.

ACTIO PIGNERATITIA. An action for a thing pledged after payment of the debt. Hunter, Rom. L. 448.

ACTIO PRÆSCRIPTIS VERBIS. A form of action which derived its force from continued usage or the responsa prudentium, and was founded on the unwritten law. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 212.

The distinction between this action and an actio in factum is said to be, that the latter was founded not on usage or the unwritten law, but by analogy to or on the equity of some subsisting law; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 212.

ACTIO REALIS (Lat.). A real action. The proper term in the civil law was Rei Vindicatio; Inst. 4. 6. 3.

ACTIO REDHIBITORIA. An action to compel a vendor to take back the thing sold and return the price paid. See REDHIBITORY ACTIONS.

ACTIO IN REM. An action against the thing. See ACTIO IN PERSONAM; ACTIO.

ACTIO RESCISSORIA. An action for rescinding a title acquired by prescription in a case where the party bringing the action was entitled to exemption from the operation of the prescription.

ACTIO PRO SOCIO. An action by which either partner could compel his co-partners to perform the partnership contract. Story, Partn., Bennett ed. § 352; Pothier, Contr. de Société, n. 34.

ACTIO EX STIPULATU. An action brought to enforce a stipulation.

ACTIO STRICTI JURIS (Lat. an action of strict right). An action in which the judge followed the formula that was sent to him closely, administered such relief only as that warranted, and admitted such claims as were distinctly set forth by the pleadings of the parties. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 218.

ACTIO DE TIGNO JUNCTO. An action by the owner of material built by another into his building. If so used in good faith double their value could be recovered; if in bad faith, the owner could recover suitable damage for the wrong, and recover the property when the building came down. So. African Leg. Dict.

ACTIO UTILIS. An action for the benefit of those who had the beneficial use of property, but not the legal title; an equitable action. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 214.

It was subsequently extended to include many other instances where a party was equitably entitled to relief, although he did not come within the strict letter of the law and the formulæ appropriate thereto.

ACTIO VENDITI. Where a person selling seeks to secure the performance of a special obligation found in a contract of sale or to compel the buyer to pay the price through an action. Hunter, Roman Law 332.

ACTIO VULGARIS. A legal action; a common action. Sometimes used for actio directa. 1 Mackeldey, Civ. L. 189.

ACTION (Lat. agere, to do). A doing of something; something done.

The formal demand of one's right from another person, made and insisted on in a court of justice. In a quite common sense, action includes all the formal proceedings in a court of justice attendant upon the demand of a right made by one person of another in such court, including an adjudication upon the right and its enforcement or denial by the court.

In the Institutes of Justinian an action is defined as jus persequendi in judicio quod sibi debetur (the right of pursuing in a judicial tribunal what is due one's self); Inst. 4. 6. In the Digest, however, where the signification of the word is expressly treated of, it is said, Actio generaliter sumitur; vel pro ipso jure quod quis habet persequendi in judicio quod suum est sibi debetur; vel pro hac ipsa persequutione seu juris exercitio (Action in general is taken either as that right which each one has of pursuing in a judicial tribunal his own or what is due him; or as the pursuit itself or exercise of the right); Dig. 50. 16. 16. Action was also said continere formam agendi (to include the form of proceeding); Dig. 1. 2. 10.

This definition of action has been adopted by Taylor (Civ. Law, p. 50). These forms were prescribed by the prætors originally, and were to be very strictly followed. The actions to which they applied were said to be stricti juris, and the slightest variation from the form prescribed was fatal. They were first reduced to a system by Appius Claudius, and were surreptitiously published by his clerk, Cneius Flavius. The publication was so pleasing to the people that Flavius was made a tribune of the people, a senator, and a curule edile (a somewhat more magnificent return than is apt to await the labors of the editor of a modern book of forms); Dig. 1. 2. 5.

These forms were very minute, and included the form for pronouncing the decision. See ACTIO.

In modern law the signification of the right of pursuing, etc., has been generally dropped, though it is recognized by Bracton, 93 b; Coke, 2d Inst. 40; 3 Bla. Com. 116; while the two latter senses of the exercise of the right and the means or method of its exercise are still found.

The vital idea of an action is a proceeding on the part of one person as actor against another, for the infringement of some right of the first, before a court of justice, in the manner prescribed by the court or the law.

Subordinate to this is now connected in a quite common use, the idea of the answer of the defendant or person proceeded against; the adducing evidence by each party to sustain his position; the adjudication of the court upon the right of the plaintiff; and the means taken to enforce the right or recompense the wrong done, in case the right is established and shown to have been injuriously affected.

Actions are to be distinguished from those proceedings, such as writ of error, scire facias, mandamus, and the like, where, under the form of proceedings, the court, and not the plaintiff, appears to be the actor; Com. v. Commissioners of Lancaster County, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 9. And the term is not regularly applied, it would seem, to proceedings in a court of equity; Allen v. Partlow, 3 S. C. 417; Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. 170.

Criminal Actions.—Those personal actions in which the plaintiff asks reparation for the commission of some tort or injury which he or those who belong to him have sustained.

Mixed Actions are those which partake of the nature of both real and personal actions; as, actions of partition, actions to recover property and damages. Just. Inst. 4, 6, 18–20; Domat, Supp. des Loix Civiles liv. 4, tit. 1, n. 4.

Mixed Personal Actions are those which partake of both a civil and a criminal character.

Personal Actions are those in which one person (actor) sues another as defendant (reus) in respect of some obligation which he is under to the actor, either ex contractu or ex delicto, to perform some act or make some compensation.

Real Actions.—Those by which a person seeks to recover his property which is in the possession of another.

In the Common Law.

The action properly is said to terminate at judgment; Co. Litt. 289 a; Rolle, Abr. 291; 3 Bla. Com. 116.

ACTION ON THE CASE. This was a remedy given by the common law, but it appears to have existed only in a limited form and to a certain extent until the statute of Westminster 2d. In its most comprehensive signification it includes assumpsit as well as an action in form ex delicto; at present when it is mentioned it is usually understood to mean an action in form ex delicto.

It is founded on the common law or upon acts of Parliament, and lies generally to recover damages for torts not committed with force, actual or implied; or having been occasioned by force where the matter affected was not tangible, or the injury was not immediate but consequential; or where the interest in the property was only in reversion, in all of which cases trespass is not sustainable; 1 Chit. Pl. 132. See CASE; ASSUMPSIT.

ACTION REDHIBITORY. See REDHIBITORY ACTION.

ACTION RESCISSORY. See RESCISSORY ACTIONS.

ACTIONABLE. For which an action will lie. 3 Bla. Com. 23.

Prior to this statute, the clerks would issue no writs except in such actions. Steph. Pl. 8; Barnet v. Ihrle, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 195. See CASE; ACTION.

ACTIONS (Fr.). Shares of corporate stock.

liament held at the village of Acton Burnell. 11 Edw. I.

It is otherwise known as statutum mercatorum or de mercatoribus, the statute of the merchants. It was a statute for the collection of debts, the earliest of its class, being enacted in 1283.

A further statute for the same object, and known as De Mercatoribus, was enacted 13 Edw. I. (c. 3.). See STATUTE MERCHANT.

ACTOR (Lat. agere). In Civil Law. A patron, pleader, or advocate. Du Cange; Cowell; Spelman.

Actor ecclesiæ.—An advocate for a church; one who protects the temporal interests of a church. Actor villæ was the steward or head-bailiff of a town or village. Cowell.

One who takes care of his lord's lands. Du Cange.

A guardian or tutor. One who transacts the business of his lord or principal; nearly synonymous with agent, which comes from the same word.

The word has a variety of closely-related meanings, very nearly corresponding with manager. Thus, actor dominæ, manager of his master's farm; actor ecclesiæ, manager of church property; actores provinciarum, tax-gatherers, treasurers, and managers of the public debt.

A plaintiff; contrasted with reus, the defendant. A proctor in civil courts or causes. Actores regis, those who claimed money of the king. Du Cange, Actor; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

For example, the English court of admiralty disregards all tenders except those formally made by acts of court; Abbott, Shipp. 403; Dunlop, Adm. Pr. 104, 105; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 103; 1 Hagg. Adm. 157.

ACTS OF SEDERUNT. In Scotch Law. Ordinances for regulating the forms of proceeding, before the court of session, in the administration of justice, made by the judges, who have the power by virtue of a Scotch Act of Parliament passed in 1540. Erskine, Pract. book 1, tit. 1, § 14.

ACTUAL. Real, in opposition to constructive or speculative, something "existing in act;" State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 213; real as opposed to nominal; Astor v. Merritt, 111 U. S. 202, 4 Sup. Ct. 413, 28 L. Ed. 401. Wearing apparel "in actual use" is not confined to what is worn at the time or what has been worn, but includes what is set apart to be used as a part of one's wardrobe; id., where the phrase is carefully examined and defined.

It is used as a legal term in contradistinction to virtual or constructive as of possession or occupation; Cleveland v. Crawford, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 616; or an actual settler, which implies actual residence; McIntyre v. Sherwood, 82 Cal. 139, 22 Pac. 937. An actual seizure means nothing more than seizure, since there was no fiction of constructive seizure before the act; L. R. 6 Exch. 203.

Actually is opposed to seemingly, pretendedly, or feignedly, as actually engaged in farming means really, truly, in fact; In re Strawbridge & Mays, 39 Ala. 367.

Co., 9 Gray (Mass.) 226. It is said not to include interest on capital during construction; [1906] A. C. 368; nor "wasted expenditure" such as that on a condemned culvert, under a government contract; 20 S. C. 133, 416 (South African). Under a contract to supply electric light to a municipality, for which it was to pay such sum as would yield a return of 10 per cent. on the "actual cost of generating the light," it was held that this did not include interest on capital, but did include depreciation of plant and rents, taxes and insurance; [1908] A. C. 241.

ACTUAL DAMAGES. The damages awarded for a loss or injury actually sustained; in contradistinction from damages implied by law, and from those awarded by way of punishment. See DAMAGES.

ACTUAL DELIVERY. It is held commonly to apply to the ceding of the corporal possession by the seller, and the actual apprehension of corporal possession by the buyer, or by some person authorized by him to receive the goods as his representative for the purpose of custody or disposal, but not for mere conveyance. Bolin v. Huffnagle, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 19. See DELIVERY.

ACTUS (Lat. agere, to do; actus, done).

In Civil Law. A thing done. See ACTUM. A servitude which carried the right of driving animals and vehicles across the lands of another.

It included also the iter, or right of passing across on foot or on horseback.

greater damages than he has laid in the ad damnum; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 260. The amount claimed may be amended by the court on motion. In Bierce v. Waterhouse, 219 U. S. 320, 31 Sup. Ct. 241, 55 L. Ed. 237, it was held that in replevin, the ad damnum could be increased to conform to the proofs without discharging the sureties.

A former meaning seems to have been, to a stream of water. Cowell; Blount. Ad medium filum aquæ would be etymologically more exact; 2 Eden, Inj. 260; and is often used; but the common use of ad filum aquæ is undoubtedly to the thread of the stream; Thomas v. Hatch, 3 Sumn. 170, Fed. Cas. No. 13,899; Cates' Ex'rs v. Wadlington, 1 McCord (S. C.) 580, 10 Am. Dec. 699; 3 Kent 431; Starr v. Child, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 149; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. AD QUOD DAMNUM (Lat.). What injury.

A writ issuing out of and returnable into chancery, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to inquire by a jury what damage it will be to the king, or any other, to grant a liberty, fair, market, highway, or the like.

The name is derived from the characteristic words denoting the nature of the writ, to inquire how great an injury it will be to the king to grant the favor asked; Whishaw, Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 221; Termes de la Ley.

AD RATIONEM PONERE. To cite a person to appear.

AD RECTUM (L. Lat.). To right. To do right. To meet an accusation. To answer the demands of the law. Habeant eos ad rectum. They shall render themselves to answer the law, or to make satisfaction. Bract. fol. 124 b.

AD SATISFACIENDUM. To satisfy. It is used in the writ capias ad satisfaciendum and is an order to the sheriff to take the person of the defendant to satisfy the claims of the plaintiff.

AD SECTAM. At the suit of.

It is commonly abbreviated. It is used where it is desirable to put the name of the defendant first, as in some cases where the defendant is filing his papers; thus, Roe ads. Doe, where Doe is plaintiff and Roe defendant. It is found in the indexes to cases decided in some of our older American books of reports, but has become pretty much disused.

AD TERMINUM QUI PRÆTERIT. A writ of entry which formerly lay for the lessor or his heirs when a lease had been made of lands and tenements for a term of life or years, and, after the term had expired, the lands were withheld from the lessor by the tenant or other person possessing the same. Fitzherb. Nat. Brev. 201.

AD TUNC ET IBIDEM. The technical name of that part of an indictment containing the statement of the subject-matter "then and there being found." Bacon, Abr. Indictment, G. 4; 1 No. C. 93.

In an indictment, the allegation of time and place must be repeated in the averment of every distinct material fact; but after the day, year, and place have once been stated with certainty, it is afterwards, in subsequent allegations, sufficient to refer to them by the words et ad tunc et ibidem, and the effect of these words is equivalent to an actual repetition of the time and place. The ad tunc et ibidem must be added to every material fact in an indictment; Sauad. 95. Thus, an indictment which alleged that J. S. at a certain time and place made an assault upon J. N., et eum cum gladio felonice percussit, was held bad, because it was not said, ad tunc et ibidem percussit; Dy. 68, 69. And where, in an indictment for murder, it was stated that J. S. at a certain time and place, having a sword in his right hand, percussit J. N., without saying ad tunc et ibidem percussit, it was held insufficient; for the time and place laid related to the having the sword, and consequently it was not said when or where the stroke was given; Cro. Eliz. 738; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 178. And where the indictment charged that A. B. at N., in the county aforesaid, made an assault upon C. D. of F. in the county aforesaid, and him ad tunc et ibidem quodam gladio percussit, this indictment was held to be bad, because two places being named before, if it referred to both, it was impossible; if only to one, it must be to the last, and then it was insensible; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. § 180.

AD ULTIMAM VIM TERMINORUM. To the most extended import of the term. 2 Eden 39.

AD VALOREM (Lat.). According to the valuation.

Duties may be specific or ad valorem. Ad valorem duties are always estimated at a certain per cent. on the valuation of the property; 3 U. S. Stat. L. 732; Bailey v. Fuqua, 24 Miss. 501.

AD VITAM AUT CULPAM. For life or until misbehavior.

Words descriptive of a tenure of office "for life or good behavior," equivalent to quamdiu bene se gesserit.

ADD. To unite; attach; annex; join. Board of Com'rs of Hancock County v. State, 119 Ind. 473, 22 N. E. 10.

ADDICERE (Lat.). In Civil Law. To condemn. Calvinus, Lex.

Addictio denotes a transfer of the goods of a deceased debtor to one who assumes his liabilities; Calvinus, Lex. Also used of an assignment of the person of the debtor to the successful party in a suit.

ADDITION (Lat. additio, an adding to).

Whatever is added to a man's name by way of title or description, as additions of mystery, place, or degree. Cowell; Termes de la Ley; 10 Wentw. Pl. 371; Salk. 5; 2 Ld. Raym. 988; 1 Wils. 244.

Additions of estate are esquire, gentleman, and the like.

These titles can be claimed by none, and may be assumed by any one. In Nash v. Battersby (2 Ld. Raym. 986; 6 Mod. 80), the plaintiff declared with the addition of gentleman. The defendant pleaded in abatement that the plaintiff was no gentleman. The plaintiff demurred, and it was held ill; for, said the court, it amounts to a confession that the plaintiff is no gentleman, and then not the person named in the count. He should have replied that he is a gentleman.

Additions of mystery are such as scrivener, painter, printer, manufacturer, etc.

Additions of place are descriptions by the place of residence, as A. B. of Philadelphia, and the like. See Bacon, Abr. Addition; Doctr. Plac. 71; 2 Viner, Abr. 77; 1 Lilly, Reg. 39; Com. v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 151.

The statute of additions extends only to the party indicted. An indictment, therefore, need not describe, by any addition, the person upon whom the offence therein set forth is alleged to have been committed; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. (4th ed.) 861; Com. v. Varney, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 402. And if an addition is stated, it need not be proved; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. (4th ed.) 547; 2 Carr. & P. 230. But where a defendant was indicted for marrying E. C., "widow," his first wife being alive, it was held that the addition was material; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 303; 4 C. & P. 579. At common law there was no need of addition in any case; 2 Ld. Raym. 988; it was required only by stat. 1 Hen. V. c. 5, in cases where process of outlawry lies. In all other cases it is only a description of the person, and common reputation is sufficient; 2 Ld. Raym. 849. No addition is necessary in a Homine Replegiando; 2 Ld. Raym. 987; Salk. 5; 1 Wils. 244, 245; 6 Co. 67. See WOMAN.

Addition in the law of mechanics' liens.

An addition erected to a former building to constitute a building within the meaning of the mechanics' lien law must be a lateral addition. It must occupy ground without the limits of the building to which it constitutes an addition; so that the lien shall be upon the building formed by the addition, and not the land upon which it stands. An alteration in a former building by adding to its height, or its depth, or to the extent of its interior accommodations, is an alteration merely, and not an addition; Updike v. Skillman, 27 N. J. L. 132. See LIEN; ACCESSION.

In addition to means not exclusive of, but by way of increase or accession to. In re Daggett's Estate, 9 N. Y. Supp. 652.

In French Law. A supplementary process to obtain additional information; Guyot, Répert.

ADDITIONAL. This term embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another, so as thereby to form one aggregate. We add by bringing things together; State v. Hull, 53 Miss. 626, 645.

ADDITIONAL BURDEN. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

ADDITIONALES. Additional terms or propositions to be added to a former agreement.

ADDED PARLIAMENT. The parliament which met in 1614 was so called. It sat for but two months and none of its bills received the royal assent. Taylor, Jurispr. 359.

ADDRESS. That part of a bill in equity which contains the appropriate description of the court where the plaintiff seeks his remedy. Cooper, Eq. Plead. 8; Story, Eq. Plead. § 26; Van Heyth. Eq. Draft. 2.

In Legislation. A formal request addressed to the executive by one or both branches of the legislative body, requesting him to perform some act.

It is provided as a means for the removal of judges who are deemed unworthy longer to occupy their situations, although the causes of removal are not such as would warrant an impeachment. It is not provided for in the Constitution of the United States; and even in those states where the right exists it is exercised but seldom, and generally with great unwillingness.

ADDRESS TO THE CROWN. When the royal speech has been read in Parliament, an address in answer thereto is moved in both houses. Two members are selected in each house by the administration for moving and seconding the address. Since the commencement of the session 1890-1891, it has been a single resolution expressing their thanks to the sovereign for his gracious speech.

ADELANTADO. In Spanish Law. The military and political governor of a frontier province. This office has long since been abolished.

ADEMPTION (Lat. ademptio, a taking away). The extinction or withholding of a legacy in consequence of some act of the testator which, though not directly a revocation of the bequest, is considered in law as equivalent thereto, or indicative of an intention to revoke.

It is a distinction between the revocation of a will and the ademption of a legacy that the former cannot be done wholly or partly by words, but parol evidence is admissible to establish the latter; 2 Tayl. Ev. § 1146; and it may also be rebutted by parol; id. § 1227.

The question of ademption of a general legacy depends entirely upon the intention of the testator, as inferred from his acts under the rules established in law; Cowles v. Cowles, 56 Conn. 240, 13 Atl. 414; Richards v. Humphreys, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 133. Where the relations of the parties are such that the legacy is, in law, considered as a portion, an advancement during the life of the testator will be presumed an ademption, at least, to the extent of the amount advanced; 5 M. & C. 29; 3 Hare 509; Roberts v. Weatherford, 10 Ala. 72; Moore v. Hilton, 12 Leigh (Va.) 1; Hansbrough's Ex'rs v. Hooe, 12 Leigh (Va.) 316, 37 Am. Dec. 659; Carmichael v. Lathrop, 108 Mich. 473, 66 N. W. 350, 32 L. R. A. 232; and see 3 C. & F. 154; 18 Ves. 151, but this presumption may be rebutted; Jones v. Mason, 5 Rand. (Va.) 577, 16 Am. Dec. 761; and to raise the presumption, the donor must put himself in loco parentis; 2 Bro. C. C. 499. There is no ademption where the advancement and portion are not ejusdem generis; 1 Bro. C. C. 555; or where the advancement is contingent and the portion certain; 2 Atk. 493; 3 M. & C. 374; or where the advancement is expressed to be in lieu of, or compensation for, an interest; 1 Ves. Jr. 257; or where the bequest is of uncertain amount; 15 Ves. 513; 4 Bro.

C. C. 494; but see 2 H. L. Cas. 131; or where the legacy is absolute and the advancement for life merely; 2 Ves. 38; 7 Ves. 516; or where the devise is of real estate; 3 Y. & C. 397; but in the Virginia case above cited the doctrine was held to apply as well to devises of realty as to bequests of personalty; Hansbrough's Ex'rs v. Hooe, 12 Leigh (Va.) 316, 37 Am. Dec. 659. See Marshall v. Rensch, 3 Del. Ch. 239, where Bates, C., treats this subject in an able opinion.

It was treated as a settled rule in 5 Ves. 79, and in 1 Cox 187, that a residuary bequest to wife or children is never adeemed by an advancement, not being the gift of a portion; but in some cases there has been a tendency to qualify this doctrine, as also that of requiring the advancement and the legacy to be ejusdem generis, as above stated, and as bearing upon one or both of these points these cases should be consulted; 10 Ves. 1; 15 id. 507; 2 Bro. C. C. 394; Carmichael v. Lathrop, 108 Mich. 473, 66 N. W. 350, 32 L. R. A. 232; and see 10 Harv. L. Rev. 52. The doctrine will not be applied to a gift of residue to an adopted child and a stranger jointly; [1906] 2 Ch. 230; L. R. 7 Ch. App. 670. See note on these cases in 20 Harv. L. Rev. 72.

Where deposits are made in a bank by a father for the use of his daughter and in her name and the passbook is delivered to her, it will not work an ademption of a pecuniary legacy, although deposits are made partly after the execution of the will; In re Crawford, 113 N. Y. 560, 21 N. E. 692, 5 L. R. A. 71.

But where the testator was not a parent of the legatee, nor standing in loco parentis, the legacy is not to be held a portion, but a bounty, and the rule as to ademption does not apply; 2 Hare 424; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1117; Wms. Exrs. 1338; except where there is a bequest for a particular purpose and money is advanced by the testator for the same purpose; 2 Bro. C. C. 166; 1 Ball & B. 303; see 6 Sim. 528; 3 M. & C. 359; 2 P. Wms. 140; 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. 139; Richards v. Humphreys, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 133; a legacy of a sum of money to be received in lieu of an interest in a homestead is satisfied by money amounting to the legacy during testator's lifetime; Roquet v. Eldridge, 118 Ind. 147, 20 N. E. 733.

The ademption of a specific legacy is effected by the extinction of the thing or fund, as it is generally stated, without regard to the testator's intention; 3 Bro. C. C. 432; 2 Cox, Ch. 182; Blackstone v. Blackstone, 3 Watts (Pa.) 338, 27 Am. Dec. 359; and see White v. Winchester, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 48; Richards v. Humphreys, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 133; Stout v. Hart, 7 N. J. L. 414; Bell's Estate, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 454; but not where the extinction of the specific thing is by act of law and a new thing takes its place; Ambl. 59; 9 Hare 666; Cas. temp. Talbot 226; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456; but see 4 C. P. D. 336; Kay & J. 341; [1906] 2 Ch. 480; and note thereon in 20 Harv. L. Rev. 239. The last cited case is rather a departure from the rule of the cases cited supra as to extinction of the legacy by act of law which does not rest on intention, but see Mahoney v. Holt, 19 R. I. 660, 36 Atl. 1, where the supposed intention of the testator was held to require the substitution of a money equivalent for certain stock bequeathed. Where a breach of trust has been committed or any trick or device practised with a view to defeat the specific legacy; 8 Sim. 171; or where the fund remains the same in substance, with some unimportant alterations; 1 Cox, Ch. 427; 3 Bro. C. C. 416; 3 M. & K. 296; Havens v. Havens, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 334; Ford v. Ford, 23 N. H. 212; as a lease of ground rent for 99 years after a devise of it; Eberhardt v. Perolin, 49 N. J. Eq. 570, 25 Atl. 511; or where the testator lends the fund on condition of its being replaced; 2 Bro. C. C. 113. A devise of a leasehold estate is adeemed if the lease expire and is renewed; 1 Bro. C. C. 261; 2 Ves. 418; 16 Ves. 197; 2 Atk. 593; or where it is assigned upon other trusts; 22 Beav. 223; but a bequest of an interest in profits of a firm is not lost by the expiration and renewal of the partnership agreement; Amb. 260. A specific legacy is not adeemed by a pledge of the subject; 3 Bro. C. C. 108; 3 Myl. & K. 358; but the legatee is entitled to have it redeemed; id. A specific legacy of a debt due testator from a third party is adeemed by its payment; 2 P. Wms. 328; 3 Bro. C. C. 431; 2 id. 108; 2 Cox C. C. 180; Ludlam's Estate, 1 Pars. Eq. (Pa.) 116; or partially to the extent of part payment; Gardner v. Printup, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 83; but not by substitution of a new security or a change in its form; Ford v. Ford, 23 N. H. 212; New Hampshire Bank v. Willard, 10 N. H. 210; Dunham v. Dey, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 555, 8 Am. Dec. 282. But courts have been astute to construe a legacy to be demonstrative, if possible, to avoid an ademption; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456. See infra, subhead Demonstrative Legacies.

But when a mortgage specifically bequeathed was foreclosed and a new bond and mortgage taken from the purchaser, and a memorandum was found after testator's death in his handwriting to the effect that it was but a renewal of the old bond and that it was his intention that it should pass to the legatee, there was held an ademption; Beck v. McGillis, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 35. In this case the hardship and defeat of intention was admitted, but it was considered that the rule could not be relaxed that if the subject of a specific legacy did not exist at the death of the testator it was adeemed and nothing else could be substituted.

A legacy of stock is adeemed by its sale though testator purchased back an equal amount of similar but not identical securities; 1 Myl. & K. 12.

The removal of goods from a place named in the legacy will work an ademption; 1 Bro. C. C. 129, n.; 3 Madd. 276; 21 Beav. 548; contra, 27 Beav. 138; and it makes no difference if the removal was because a lease had expired; 6 Sim. 19. Ademption is not worked by a mere temporary or accidental removal; 4 Bro. C. C. 537; or for repairs; 2 De G. & Sm. 425; or "for a necessary purpose," or on account of fire; 1 Ves. 271.

In the case of demonstrative legacies, to be paid out of a particular fund pointed out, there is no ademption, and if the fund does not exist, they are payable from the general assets; Armstrong's Appeal, 63 Pa. 312; Giddings v. Seward, 16 N. Y. 365; 4 Hare, 276; 1 P. Wms. 777; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456; T. Raym. 335; 2 Bro. C. C. 114; Kenaday v. Sinnott, 179 U. S. 606, 21 Sup. Ct. 233, 45 L. Ed. 339; Ives v. Canby, 48 Fed. 718; Gelbach v. Shively, 67 Md. 498, 10 Atl. 247. The statement that the testator's intention has no bearing on the question of the ademption of specific legacies, made in 2 Cox 180, has been so frequently repeated as to be commonly accepted as a rule of decision; but, as remarked by Chancellor Kent in Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, these words are to be taken with considerable qualification. It is certainly true that when it is necessary to label the legacy as general or specific, which is necessarily done in the case of demonstrative legacies, the question of intention is material and in 2 Ves. Jr. 639, Lord Loughborough makes the matter of intention the criterion, and there are few cases in which it is not discussed. In Kenaday v. Sinnott, 179 U. S. 606, 21 Sup. Ct. 233, 45 L. Ed. 339, it was said that "the ademption of a specific legacy is effected by the extinction of the thing or fund bequeathed, and the intention that the legacy should fail is presumed"; but there a legacy to the wife of deposits in a bank "amounting to $10,000 more or less" was held not adeemed by purchasing bonds after the will was made, reducing the amount in bank, and the wife was awarded the amount of the legacy, which was held to be demonstrative upon the "manifest general intention of the testator" as shown by the whole will.

The courts lean against holding that there is an ademption unless the intention is clearly shown, and, to avoid it, favor the construction of a legacy as demonstrative rather than specific; Norris v. Thomson's Ex'rs, 16 N. J. Eq. 218; Cogdell's Ex'rs v. Cogdell's Heirs, 3 Desaus. (S. C.) 373; In re Foote, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 302; Bradford v. Haynes, 20 Me. 105; Boardman v. Boardman, 4 Allen (Mass.) 179; 8 Ves. 413; Appeal of Balliet, 14 Pa. 461. See 11 Am. Dec. 470, note.

Republication of a will may prevent the effect of what would otherwise work an ademtion: 1 Rop. Leg. 351.

A specific legacy which has been adeemed will not be revived by a republication of the will after the ademtion; Trustees of Unitarian Society in Harvard v. Tufts, 151 Mass. 76, 23 N. E. 1006, 7 L. R. A. 390. See LEGACY; ADVANCEMENT; GIFT; 37 Am. Dec. 667, note.

ADEQUATE CAUSE. Sufficient cause for a particular purpose. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Mason, 109 Pa. 296, 58 Am. Rep. 722. Such a cause as would commonly produce a degree of anger, rage, resentment, or terror in a person of ordinary temper, sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection. Boyett v. State, 2 Tex. App. 100. It is to be determined by the particular circumstances of each particular case; Williams v. State, 7 id. 396.

ADEU. Without day, as when a matter is finally dismissed by the court. Alex adev, go without day. Y. B. 5 Edw. II. 173.

ADHERING (Lat. adherere, to cling to). Cleaving to, or joining; as, adhering to the enemies of the United States.

The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, defines treason against the United States to consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.

A citizen's cruising in an enemy's ships with a design to capture or destroy American ships, would be an adhering to the enemies of the United States; 4 State Trials 328; Salk. 634; 2 Gilbert, Ev. Lofft ed. 798.

ADHESION. The entrance of another state into an existing treaty with respect only to a part of the principles laid down or the stipulations agreed to. Opp. Int. L. § 533.

Though, properly speaking, by adhesion the third state becomes a party only to such parts as are specifically agreed to, and by accession it accepts and is bound by the whole treaty, the distinction between the two terms is not always observed, as appears even in the Hague "Convention with Respect to the Laws and Customs of War on Land" 1899, which in art. iv authorizes non-signatory powers "to adhere" and provides how they shall make known their "adhesion"; while, as is remarked by the writer above cited, "accession" is meant. See ACCESSION.

ADIT. In mining law, an entrance or approach. A horizontal excavation used as an entrance to a mine, or a vent by which ores and water are carried away.

An excavation "in and along a lode," which in statutes of Colorado and other mining states is made the equivalent of a discovery shaft. Snyder, Mines 1296, App. B. I. § 6; Gray v. Truby, 6 Col. 273; Electro-Magnetic M. & D. Co. v. Van Auken, 9 Col. 204, 11 Pac. 80.

ADITUS (Lat.). An approach; a way; a public way. Co. Litt. 56 a.

ADJACENT. Next to, or near, neighboring. 29 Alb. L. J. 24.

Two of three lots of land might be described as adjacent to the first, while only the second could be said to be adjoining; 1 Cooke 128; Municipality No. 2, For Opening Roffignac St., 7 La. Ann. 76; Continental Imp. Co. v. Phelps, 47 Mich. 299, 11 N. W. 167.

Land is adjacent to the line of a railroad, where by reason of its proximity thereto it is directly and materially benefitted by the construction thereof; U. S. v. Chaplin, 31 Fed. 890. Where a statute authorized the taking of material for building a railroad from public lands "adjacent" to the line thereof, what is adjacent land must depend on the circumstances of the particular case; where the adjacent ends and the non-adjacent begins may be difficult to determine. It is a word of flexible meaning, depending upon context and subject matter. U. S. v. R. Co., 31 Fed. 886.

ADJECTIVE LAW. Rules of procedure or administration as distinguished from rules of substantive law. See HOLLAND, JURISPR. 76.

See SUBSTANTIVE LAW.

ADJOINING. The word in its etymological sense, means touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near or adjacent. In re Ward, 52 N. Y. 397; Miller v. Mann, 55 Vt. 479; Akers v. Canal Co., 43 N. J. L. 110. It is held that a yard may be separated by a street and yet adjoin; Com. v. Curley, 101 Mass. 25. Towns touching at corners adjoin; Holmes v. Carley, 31 N. Y. 289. The words "along" and "adjoining" are used as synonymous terms and as used in a statute imply contiguity, contact; Walton v. Ry. Co., 67 Mo. 58.

ADJOINING LANDOWNERS. See EMINENT DOMAIN; LATERAL SUPPORT; FENCE; WINDOW.

ADJOURN. To put off; to dismiss till an appointed day, or without any such appointment. But it has also acquired the meaning of suspending business for a time—deferring, delaying. Probably, as to a sale or judicial proceeding, it would include the fixing of another day; La Farge v. Van Wagenen, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 54. See ADJOURNMENT.

ADJOURNED TERM. A continuation of a previous or regular term. Harris v. Gest, 4 Ohio St. 473; Van Dyke v. State, 22 Ala. 57.

ADJOURNMENT. The dismissal by some court, legislative assembly, or properly authorized officer, of the business before them, either finally (which, as popularly used, is called an adjournment sine die, without day), or to meet again at another time appointed (which is called a temporary adjournment).

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 5, 4, directs that "neither house, during the session of congress, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting."

An adjournment of an annual town meeting to another place or a later hour of the same day was held valid, but with hesitation as involving possible hardship; and the power should not be exercised except in extreme necessity; People v. Martin, 5 N. Y. 22.

In Civil Law. A calling into court; a summoning at an appointed time. Du Cange.

ADJOURNMENT DAY. In English Practice. A day appointed by the judges at the regular sittings for the trial of causes at nisi prius.

ADJOURNMENT DAY IN ERROR. In English Practice. A day appointed some days before the end of the term at which matters left undone on the affirmance day are finished. 2 Tidd, Pract. 1224.

ADJOURNMENT IN EYRE. The appointment of a day when the justices in eyre mean to sit again. 1 Bla. Com. 186.

ADJUDGE. To decide or determine. It is sometimes used with "considered, ordered, determined, decreed as one of the operative words of a final judgment," but is also applicable to interlocutory orders. It is synonymous with "decided," "determined," etc., "and may be used by a judge trying a case, without a jury with reference to his findings of fact, but they would not be a judgment"; Edwards v. Hellings, 99 Cal. 214, 33 Pac. 799. "Convicted and adjudged" not to be lawfully entitled to remain in the United States, under the Chinese Exclusion Act, means "found, decided by the Commissioner, representing, not the administration of criminal law, but the political department of the government"; U. S. v. Hing Quong Chow, 53 Fed. 233.

Adjudged does not mean the same as decided, nor is one disqualified as a witness who "shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of perjury" merely by verdict of guilty or until sentence; Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 107, 25 Am. Rep. 148. It was said by Gibson, C. J., that the word "can be predicated only of an act of the court"; Searight v. Com., 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 301.

ADJUDICATAIRE. In Canadian Law. A purchaser at a sheriff's sale. See 1 Low: Can. 241; 10 id. 325.

ADJUDICATION. A judgment; giving or pronouncing judgment in a case. Determination in the exercise of judicial power. Street v. Benner, 20 Fla. 700; Joseph C. Irwin & Co. v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 149.

In Scotch Law. A process for transferring the estate of a debtor to his creditor. Erskine, Inst. lib. 2, tit. 12, §§ 39-55.

ADJUNCTION (Lat. adjungere, to join to). In Civil Law. The attachment or union permanently of a thing belonging to one person to that belonging to another. This union may be caused by inclusion, as if one man's diamond be set in another's ring; by soldering, as if one's guard be soldered on another's sword; by sewing, as by employing the silk of one to make the coat of another; by construction, as by building on another's land; by writing, as when one writes on another's parchment; or by painting, as when one paints a picture on another's canvas.

In these cases, as a general rule, the accessory follows the principal; hence those things which are attached to the things of another become the property of the latter. The only exception which the civilians made was in the case of a picture, which, although an accession, drew to itself the canvas, on account of the importance which was attached to it; Inst. 2. 1. 34; Dig. 41. 1. 9. 2. The common law implicitly adopts the civil law doctrines. See 2 Bla. Com. 404. See ACCESSION.

ADJUNCTS. Additional judges sometimes appointed in the Court of Delegates, q. v. See Shelford, Lun. 310; 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 384; 2 id. 84; 3 id. 471.

ADJUST. To put in order; to determine an amount due. See State v. Staub, 61 Conn. 553, 23 Atl. 924; State v. Moore, 40 Neb. 854, 59 N. W. 755, 25 L. R. A. 774. Accounts are adjusted when they are settled and a balance struck; Townes v. Birchett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 173, 201. It is sometimes used in the sense of pay; see Lynch v. Nugent, 80 Ia. 422, 46 N. W. 61.

ADJUSTMENT. The determining of the amount of a loss. 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1814, 1815. To settle or bring to a satisfactory state so that parties are all agreed. Mayor of New York v. Ins. Co., 39 N. Y. 45, 100 Am. Dec. 400.

There is no specific form essentially requisite to an adjustment. To render it binding, it must be intended, and understood by the parties to a policy, to be absolute and final. It may be made by indorsement on the policy, or by payment of the loss, or the acceptance of an abandonment; 4 Burr. 1966; 1 Camph. 134, 274; Barlow v. Ins. Co., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 270; Reynolds v. Ins. Co., 22 Pick. (Mass.) 191, 33 Am. Dec. 727. It must be made with full knowledge of all the facts material to the right of the insured to recover, and the adjustment can be impeached only for fraud or mistake of such material fact; Remington v. Ins. Co., 14 R. I. 247. If there is fraud by either party to an adjustment, it does not bind the other; Faugier v. Hallett, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 233; 3 Campb. 319. If one party is led into a material mistake of fact by fault of the other, the adjustment will not bind him; 2 East 469; Elting v. Scott, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 157; Faugier v. Hallett, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 233.

It is a sufficient adjustment if the party employed by an insurance company goes upon the premises, makes calculations, and states the loss; Fame Ins. Co. v. Norris, 18 Ill. App. 570.

See INSURABLE INTEREST; ABANDONMENT; INSURANCE; POLICY.

ADMEASUREMENT OF DOWER. A remedy which lay for the heir on reaching his majority, to rectify an assignment of dower made during his minority, by which the doweress had received more than she was legally entitled to. 2 Bla. Com. 136; Gilbert, Uses 379.

The remedy is still subsisting, though of rare occurrence. See 1 Washb. R. P. 225, 226; Jones v. Brewer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 314; McCormick v. Taylor, 2 Ind. 336.

In some of the states, the special proceeding which is given by statute to enable the widow to compel an assignment of dower, is termed an admeasurement of dower.

ADMEASUREMENT OF PASTURE. A remedy which lay in certain cases for surcharge of common of pasture. It lay where a common of pasture appurtenant or in gross was certain as to number; or where one had common appendant or appurtenant, the quantity of which had never been ascertained. The sheriff proceeded, with the assistance of a jury of twelve men, to admeasure and apportion the common as well of those who had surcharged as those who had not, and, when the writ was fully executed, returned it to the superior court. Termes de la Ley.

The remedy is now abolished in England; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 239, n.; and in the United States; 3 Kent 419.

In English Law. Aid; support. Stat. 1 Edw. IV. c. 1.

In Civil Law. Imperfect proof. Merlin, Répert.

ADMINICULAR. Auxiliary and subordinate to. The Marianna Flora, 3 Mas. 116, 121, Fed. Cas. No. 9,080. Adminicular evidence, as used in ecclesiastical law, is evidence to explain and complete other evidence. 2 Lee, Eccl. 595. See 1 Gr. Ev. Sec. 606.

ADMINISTER. To give, to direct or cause to be taken. Gilchrist v. Comfort, 34 N. Y. 239; Brinson v. State, 89 Ala. 105, 8 South. 527.

ADMINISTERING POISON. An offence of an aggravated character, punishable under the various statutes defining the offence.

The stat. 9 G. IV. c. 31, s. 11, enacts "that if any person unlawfully and maliciously shall administer, or attempt to administer, to any person, or shall cause to be taken by any person, any poison or other destructive thing," etc., every such offender, etc. In a case under this statute, it was decided that, to constitute the act of administering the poison, it was not absolutely necessary that there should have been a delivery to the party poisoned, but that if she took it from a place where it had been put for her by the defendant, and any part of it went into her stomach, it was an administering; 4 Carr. & P. 369; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 114; Brown v. State, 88 Ga. 257, 14 S. E. 578; Bell v. Com., 88 Va. 365, 13 S. E. 742; Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146; La Beau v. People, 34 N. Y. 223.

The statute 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 85 enacts that "Whosoever, with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman, shall unlawfully administer to her, or cause to be taken by her, any poison, or other noxious thing," shall be guilty of felony. Upon an indictment under this section, it was proved that the woman requested the prisoner to get her something to procure miscarriage, and that a drug was both given by the prisoner and taken by the woman with that intent, but that the taking was not in the presence of the prisoner. It was held, nevertheless, that the prisoner had caused the drug to be taken within the meaning of the statute; 1 Dears. & B. 127, 164. It is not sufficient that the defendant merely imagined that the thing administered would have the effect intended, but it must also appear that the drug administered was either a "poison" or a "noxious thing."

Those charged with the management of the executive department of the government.

ADMINISTRATOR. SEE EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See ORDINARY.

ADMINISTRATRIX. A woman to whom letters of administration have been granted and who administers the estate.

When an administratrix marries, that fact does not prevent her from suing as such; Cosgrove v. Pitman, 103 Cal. 268, 37 Pac. 232; nor does the marriage of a feme sole annul her appointment; Hamilton v. Levy, 41 S. C. 374, 19 S. E. 610.

ADMIRAL (Fr. amiral). A high officer or magistrate that hath the government of the king's navy, and the hearing of all causes belonging to the sea. Cowell. See ADMIRALTY.

By statute of July 25, 1866, the active lists of line-officers of the navy of the United States were divided into ten grades, of which the highest is that of admiral, and the next that of vice-admiral. By statute of Jan. 24, 1873, these grades ceased to exist when the offices became vacant, and the highest rank is rear-admiral.

ADMIRALTY. A court which has a very extensive jurisdiction of maritime causes, civil and criminal.

On the revival of commerce after the fall of the Western empire, and the conquest and settlement by the barbarians, it became necessary that some tribunal should be established that might hear and decide causes that arose out of maritime commerce. The rude courts established by the conquerors had properly jurisdiction of controversies that arose on land, and of matters pertaining to land, that being at the time the only property that was considered of value. To supply this want, which was felt by merchants, and not by the government or the people at large, on the coast of Italy and the northern shores of the Mediterranean, a court of consuls was established in each of the principal maritime cities. Contemporaneously with the establishment of these courts grew up the customs of the sea, partly borrowed, perhaps, from the Roman law, a copy of which had at that time been discovered at Amalfi, but more out of the usage of trade and the practice of the sea. These were collected from time to time, embodied in the form of a code, and published under the name of the Consolato del Mare. See that subtitle under Code. The first collection of these customs is said to be as early as the eleventh century; but the earliest authentic evidence we have of their existence is their publication, in 1266, by Alphonso X., King of Castile; 1 Pardessus, Lois Maritimes, 201. See 3 Kent 16.

On Christmas of each year, the principal merchants made choice of judges for the ensuing year, and at the same time of judges of appeal, and their courts had jurisdiction of all causes that arose out of the custom of the sea, that is, of all maritime causes whatever. Their judgments were carried into execution, under proper officers, on all movable property, ships as well as other goods, but an execution from these courts did not run against land; Ordonnance de Valentia, 1233, c. 1, §§ 22, 23.

When this species of property came to be of sufficient importance, and especially when trade on the sea became gainful and the merchants began to grow rich, their jurisdiction in most maritime states was transferred to a court of admiralty; and this is the origin of admiralty jurisdiction. The admiral was originally more a military than a civil officer, for nations were then more warlike than commercial; Ordonnance de Louis XIV., liv. 1; 2 Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, c. 1. The court had jurisdiction of all national affairs transacted at sea, and particularly of prize; and to this was added jurisdiction of all controversies of a private character that grew out of maritime employment and commerce; and this, as nations grew more commercial, became in the end its most important jurisdiction.

The admiralty is, therefore, properly the successor of the consular courts, which were emphatically the courts of merchants and sea-going persons. The most trustworthy account of the jurisdiction thus transferred is given in the Ordonnance de Louis XIV., published in 1681. This was compiled under the inspiration of his great minister Colbert, by the most learned men of that age, from information drawn from every part of Europe, and was universally received at the time as an authoritative exposition of the common maritime law; Valin, Preface to his Commentaries; 3 Kent 16. They have been recognized as authority in maritime causes by the courts of this country, both federal and state; The Seneca, 3 Wall. Jr. 395, Fed. Cas. No. 12,670; Morgan v. Ins. Co., 4 Dall. (U. S.) 455, 1 L. Ed. 907, where Tilghman, C. J., referred to them "not as containing any authority in themselves but as evidence of the general marine law." The changes made in the Code de Commerce and in the other maritime codes of Europe are unimportant and inconsiderable. This ordinance describes the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts as embracing all maritime contracts and torts arising from the building, equipment, and repairing of vessels, their manning and victualling, the government of their crews and their employment, whether by charter-party or bill of lading, and from bottomry and insurance. This was the general jurisdiction of the admiralty; it took all the consular jurisdiction which was strictly of a maritime nature and related to the building and employment of vessels at sea. See Code.

In English Law. The court of the admiral.

This court was erected by Edward III. At least so it is affirmed by Blackstone, 3 Com. 69; but Judge Story cited Selden as having collected much evidence to carry back the origin of the jurisdiction more than two centuries before that, to the time of Henry I.; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776; and Coke, the bitterest enemy of the Admiralty, refers to the jurisdiction as "so ancient that its commencement cannot be known"; 12 Rep. 80. The question, however, is merely academic, except as the jurisdiction of the Continental Courts at the period of its origin may aid in determining the extent and limitations of the early English Court. Authorities are collected in 66 L. R. A. 193, note, to show that Blackstone was mistaken.

It is said in Halsbury's Laws of England, § 86, that prior to the Judicature Act of 1873 the seal of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, affixed to orders in Admiralty appeals, bears upon its face the words "Ab Edgare vindico, thus picturesquely suggesting a very ancient origin of jurisdiction," but whether its origin was in Saxon times or those of Henry I., the jurisdiction of this court in the reign of Edw. III. was undisputed. It was held by the Lord High Admiral, and was called the High Court of Admiralty, or before his deputy, the Judge of the Admiralty, by which latter officer it has for a time been exclusively held. It sat as two courts, with separate commissions, known as the Instance Court and the Prize Court, the former of which was commonly intended by the term admiralty. At its origin the jurisdiction of this court was very extensive, embracing all maritime matters. By the statutes 13 Rich. II. c. 5, and 15 Rich. II. c. 3, especially as explained by the common law courts, its jurisdiction was much restricted; and this restriction was further provided for by the statute of 2 Hen. IV. c. 11, prescribing penalties for wrongfully suing in admiralty. A violent and long-continued contest between the admiralty and common law courts resulted in the establishment of the restriction which continued without interruption, except that abortive efforts were made to compromise the differences between the two jurisdictions, in 1575 and 1632, until the statutes 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, materially enlarged its powers. See 2 Pars. Mar. Law 479; 1 Kent Lect. XVII; Smith, Adm. 1; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776; Ramsey v. Allegre, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 611, 6 L. Ed. 746; Bains v. The James, 1 Baldw. 544, Fed. Cas. No. 756; Davies 93. This court was abolished by the Judicature Act of 1873, and its functions transferred to the High Court of Justice (Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division), with appeal to the Court of Appeal and thence to the House of Lords; Halsbury, Laws of Eng. § 93. As to the effect of the early English restriction statutes, see Judge Story's opinion in De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776, and also the L. R. A. note cited supra, which contains a review of English and American Admiralty jurisdiction.

For a historical review of the English Admiralty jurisdiction and how it was administered from time to time and the legislation on the subject, see the introduction to Williams & Bruce, Adm. Jur. & Prac. 3d Ed.

The civil jurisdiction of the court extends to torts committed on the high seas, including personal batteries and false representations; 4 C. Rob. D. 115; damage to cargo; Lush. 458; Br. & L. 102; necessities; [1895] P. 95; 13 P. D. 82. It has no jurisdiction over an action in personam against a pilot for damages arising from a collision between ships on the high seas, due to his negligence; [1892] 1 Q. B. 273.

Formerly the remedy in rem could not be enforced beyond the property proceeded against, but when owners appeared in such an action it was said by Sir F. Jeune, that the judgment can be enforced to the full amount although exceeding the value of the property; [1892] P. 304; [1899] P. 285; but see extended comment on these cases in Wms. & Br. Adm. Pr. Introd. 19, where it is pointed out that the point did not arise for decision.

In Gager v. The A. D. Patchin, 1 Am. L. J. (N. S.) 529, Fed. Cas. No. 5,170, Conkling, D. J., said: "But by a long series of American decisions terminating with that in New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Bank, 6 How. (U. S.) 344, 12 L. Ed. 465, the principle is now firmly established that the jurisdiction of the American courts of Admiralty does not depend on the decisions of the English Common Law Courts, relative to the jurisdiction of the high court of admiralty of England, but that all contracts in their nature strictly maritime are cognizable in the Admiralty." It was a suit in rem for salvage and as there was a special agreement, it was objected that it was a mere case of contract and not within the admiralty jurisdiction, but the decision was otherwise and was affirmed; The A. D. Patchin, 1 Blatchf. 414, Fed. Cas. No. 87.

It was therefore not practicable to rest the American jurisdiction upon the English system and ignore those decisions. The struggle in our courts was not so much between the two contentions which had distracted the English courts, as whether the narrow jurisdiction finally imposed upon the admiralty in England was that which our Constitution contemplated. While some of our judges contended for this view, the weight of authority was finally given to the more logical conclusion that the Admiralty and Maritime jurisdiction which was by the Constitution included within the judicial power of the United States was not limited by the Admiralty jurisdiction of England but is to be determined by the general maritime law.

The criminal jurisdiction of the court was transferred to the Central Criminal Court by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 36. It extended to all crimes and offences committed on the high seas, or within the ebb and flow of the tide, and not within the body of a county. A conviction for manslaughter committed on a German vessel, by reason of negligent collision with an English vessel, within two and a half miles of the English coast, whereby a passenger on the English vessel was lost, is not within the jurisdiction of the English criminal courts; 46 L. J. M. C. 17.

The first step in the process in a plenary action may be the arrest of the person of the defendant, or of the ship, vessel, or furniture; in which cases the defendant must find bail or fidejussors in the nature of bail, and the owner must give bonds or stipulations equal to the value of the vessel and her immediate earnings; or the first step may be a monition to the defendant. In 1840, the form of proceeding in this court was very considerably changed. The advocates, surrogates, and proctors of the Court of Arches were admitted to practice there; the proceedings generally were assimilated to those of the common-law courts, particularly in respect of the power to take viva voce evidence in open court; power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers; to ordering issues to be tried in any of the courts of Nisi Prius, and allowing bills of exception on the trial of such issues, and the grant of power to admiralty to direct a new trial of such issues; to make rules of court, and to commit for contempt. The judge may have the assistance of a jury, and in suits for collision he usually decides upon his own view of the facts and law, after having been assisted by, and hearing the opinion of, two or more Trinity Brethren.

A court of admiralty exists in Ireland; but the Scotch court was abolished by 1 Will. IV. c. 69. See ELDER BRETHREN.

In American Law. A tribunal exercising jurisdiction over all maritime contracts, torts, injuries, or offences. 2 Pars. Mar. Law 508.

After a somewhat protracted contest the jurisdiction of admiralty was extended beyond that of the English admiralty court and has been said to be co-equal with that of the English court as defined by the statutes of Rich. II., under the construction given to them by the contemporaneous or immediately subsequent courts of admiralty; 2 Pars. Mar. Law 508; Bened. Admir. §§ 7, 8. There is early English authority, mainly collected by Judge Story in his famous opinion in De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776, that the common law courts were wrong when, in their controversy with the admiralty court, they contended for the original narrow limit of the jurisdiction. It would seem, however, to be the more accurate view that the cases which settled the American jurisdiction established it not so much upon the basis of any construction of the English restraining statutes as upon the theory that they were not to be recognized as having force in this country, either in Colonial times or after the Revolution. In Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 441, 12 L. Ed. 226, it was held that "the statutes of Richard II. were never in force in any of the colonies, except as they were adopted by the legislatures of some of them." And in a judgment much referred to and commended in subsequent cases, Judge Winchester, characterized by Judge Peters as "a distinguished ornament" of his profession, in Stevens v. The Sandwich, 1 Pet. Adm. 233 n. was of opinion that "the statutes 11 & 15 Rich. II. have received in England a construction which must at all times prohibit their extension to this country." So Judge Wilson in Kynock v. The Propeller S. C. Ives, Newb. 205, Fed. Cas. No. 7,958, said: "The district courts of the United States, sitting as courts of admiralty, are not embarrassed by the restraining statutes of Richard II. and Henry IV., but exercise as large jurisdiction and are governed by the same principles of maritime law as are recognized by the courts of admiralty in the maritime nations of continental Europe."

It came to be generally conceded that at the time of the Revolution the English admiralty jurisdiction was emasculated by the construction put upon the restrictive statutes by the common law courts, but it must likewise be admitted that the decisions of those courts were the paramount law of England. It was therefore not practicable to rest the American jurisdiction upon the English system and ignore those decisions. The struggle in our courts was not so much between the two contentions which had distracted the English courts, as whether the narrow jurisdiction finally imposed upon the admiralty court in England was that which our constitution contemplated. While some of our judges contended for this view, the weight of authority was finally given to the more logical conclusion that the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction which was by the constitution included within the judicial power of the United States was not limited by the admiralty jurisdiction of England, but is to be determined by the recognized principles of the maritime law which were invoked by Mr. Justice Washington in Davis v. Brig Seneca, 3 Wall. Jr. 395, Fed. Cas. No. 12,670, as having "been respected by maritime courts of all nations and adopted by most, if not by all of them on the continent of Europe."

Finally, in a note to The Huntress, 2 Ware (Dav. 93) 102, Fed. Cas. No. 6,914, which is considered an authoritative discussion of the American admiralty jurisdiction, attention is directed to "contemporaneous declarations of every branch of the government, and the quiet assent of the people to an unbroken and unvarying practice of more than half a century, all concurring in one point, that the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, under the constitution, is of larger extent than that of the English court of admiralty, and all repudiating the assumption that we are to look to the laws of England for the definition of these terms in the constitution." See De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776; The Huntress, 2 Ware (Dav. 93) 102, Fed. Cas. No. 6,914; Peele v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 10,905; Read v. Carryl, 20 How. 583, 15 L. Ed. 1028.

The court of original admiralty jurisdiction in the United States is the United States District Court. From this court causes could formerly be removed, in certain cases, to the Circuit and ultimately to the Supreme Court.

So much of the foregoing as relates to appeals from Circuit and District Courts of the United States to the Supreme Court was changed by chap. 517, 1 Sup. Rev. Stats., so that appeals may be taken direct from those courts to the Supreme Court from the final sentences and decrees in prize causes; in other admiralty cases appeals will now lie from the District Court to the Circuit Court of Appeals, the decision of the latter court being final. In certain cases, however, the decisions of the Circuit Courts of Appeals may be reviewed by the Supreme Court, for which see UNITED STATES COURTS.

It extends to the navigable rivers of the United States, whether tidal or not, the lakes, and the waters connecting them; The Propeller Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. (U. S.) 443, 13 L. Ed. 1058; The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 411, 18 L. Ed. 397; The Eagle, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 15, 19 L. Ed. 365; The Belfast, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 624, 19 L. Ed. 266; *Garcia y Leon v. But it does not extend to a creek which, though accessible from the sea, has no public wharf or terminus for travel; Manigault v. S. M. Ward & Co., 123 Fed. 707; nor to a river which is not of itself a highway for interstate or foreign commerce; The Montello, 11 Wall. 411, 20 L. Ed. 191. S. § 563), while conferring admiralty jurisdiction upon the Federal courts, saves to suitors their common-law remedy, which has always existed for damages for collision at sea; Schoonmaker v. Gilmore, 102 U. S. 118, 26 L. Ed. 95; where a vessel is outside of the territorial limitation of the civil process of a court, jurisdiction by stipulation or consent of the master cannot be obtained for the purpose of a libel in rem; The Hungaria, 41 Fed. 109.

tirely within one state; The Sarah Jane, 2 Am. L. Rev. 455, Fed. Cas. No. 12,349; but see The Scotia, 3 Am. L. Rev. 610, Fed. Cas. With respect to the cases in which the cause of action arises partly on shipboard and partly on land, the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States is much more liberal than that of England, and the different classes of cases are enumerated in the opinion of Thomas, D. J., in The Strabo, 90 Fed. 110, where he lays down what seem to be the settled principles as to the jurisdiction with respect to maritime torts.

(1) Where the cause arises on the ship and is communicated to the property on land, as fire; The Plymouth, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 20, 18 L. Ed. 125; Ex parte Phenix Ins. Co., 118 U. S. 610, 7 Sup. Ct. 25, 30 L. Ed. 274; when missives are sent from the ship and take effect elsewhere; U. S. v. Davis, 2 Sumn. 482, Fed. Cas. No. 14,932; The Epsilon, 6 Ben. 378, Fed. Cas. No. 4,506; where some part of the ship comes in contact with the land to the injury of persons or property; Johnson v. Elevator Co., 119 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 254, 30 L. Ed. 447; The Maud Webster, 8 Ben. 547, Fed. Cas. No. 9,302; and herein where the vessel does damage to wharves; The C. Accame, 20 Fed. 642; Hom-er Ramsdell T. Co. v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 63 Fed. 845; also where material discharged from a ship comes in contact with persons on land; The Mary Garrett, 63 Fed. 1009; see also Price v. The Belle of the Coast, 66 Fed. 62. In all cases under this class there is no jurisdiction, the injured person or thing being on the land when the negligent act operates upon him or it.

(2) Cases where the primal cause arises on land and is injuriously communicated to the ship, as structures wrongfully maintained and interrupting navigation; Atlee v. Packet Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 389, 22 L. Ed. 619; The Maud Webster, 8 Ben. 547, Fed. Cas. No. 9,302; Greenwood v. Town of Westport, 60 Fed. 560; Oregon City Transp. Co. v. Bridge Co., 53 Fed. 549; City of Boston v. Crowley, 38 Fed. 202, 204; The Arkansas, 17 Fed. 383; where material discharged from the land into the ship does injury to persons on the ship; Hermann v. Mill Co., 69 Fed. 646. In this class admiralty has jurisdiction. The case of The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. 239, was said to be different from those last mentioned, the injury to the libellant being caused by the falling of a ladder against the side of the ship, and there was held to be no jurisdiction since the negligence was an act done on the wharf; but in The Strabo, 98 Fed. 998, 39 C. C. A. 375, a fall from a ladder was caused by its being negligently left fastened from the rail of the vessel so that libellant was thrown to the wharf and injured, and there was jurisdiction. The ultimate authority to which all cases referred was that of The Plymouth, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 20, 18 L. Ed. 125, cited supra. In The Mary Stewart, 10 Fed. 137, it was said that there must be two ingredients, the wrong on the water and the damage resulting, both of which must concur to constitute a maritime cause. This was criticized in City of Milwaukee v. The Curtis, 37 Fed. 705, where it was said that "it suffices if the damage, the substantial cause of action arising out of the wrong, is complete upon navigable waters." So in Hermann v. Mill Co., 69 Fed. 646, cited supra, it was thought that the language in The Mary Stewart, 10 Fed. 137, was too broad. It is said that the proper solution of the question of jurisdiction "is to ascertain the place of the consummation and substance of the injury."

There is no jurisdiction in Admiralty to administer relief as courts of equity, and an executory contract for the purchase of a vessel could not be enforced; Kynoch v. The S. C. Ives, Newb. 205, Fed. Cas. No. 7,958.

The jurisdiction may be invoked by one of two vessels, both held in fault for collision, to enforce contribution against the other.

Erle R. Co. v. Transp. Co., 204 U. S. 220, 27 Sup. Ct. 246, 51 L. Ed. 450.

The jurisdiction extends to all maritime torts, q. v., and as to maritime contracts, see that title.

Its criminal jurisdiction extends to all crimes and offences committed on the high seas or beyond the jurisdiction of any country. The criminal jurisdiction of the United States courts is extended to the Great Lakes by 26 St. L. 424. The open waters of the Great Lakes are high seas within the meaning of R. S. § 5346; U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 14 Sup. Ct. 109, 37 L. Ed. 1071. See JURISDICTION.

A civil suit is commenced by filing a libel, upon which a warrant for arrest of the person, or attachment of his property if he cannot be found, even though in the hands of third persons, or a simple monition to appear, may issue; or, in suits in rem, a warrant for the arrest of the thing in question; or two or more of these separate processes may be combined. Thereupon bail or stipulations are taken if the party offer them.

In most cases of magnitude, oral evidence is not taken; but it may be taken, and it is the general custom to hear it in cases where smaller amounts are involved. The decrees are made by the court without the intervention of a jury.

A suit in rem and a suit in personam may be brought concurrently in the same court, when arising on the same cause of action; The Normandie, 40 Fed. 590; The Baracoa, 44 Fed. 102.

In criminal cases the proceedings are similar to those at common law.

See UNITED STATES COURTS; BOTTOMREY; SALVAGE; COLLISION; COURT OF LORD HIGH ADMIRAL; COURTS OF ENGLAND; ELDER BRETHREN; ABANDONMENT; MARITIME CAUSE.

ADMIRALTY, FIRST LORD OF THE. At the head of the British Navy are five Lords Commissioners. The First Lord is a member of the Cabinet, the others are called Sea Lords.

ADMISSIBLE. Pertinent and proper to be considered in reaching a decision. Used with reference to the issues to be decided in any judicial proceeding.

ADMISSION (Lat. ad, to, mittere, to send). The act by which attorneys and counsellors become recognized as officers of the court and are allowed to practise. The qualifications required vary widely in the different states. See ATTORNEY.

ADMISSIONS. Confessions or voluntary acknowledgments made by a party of the existence of certain facts.

As distinguished from confessions, the term is applied to civil transactions and to matters of fact in criminal cases where there is no criminal intent.

As distinguished from consent, an admission may be said to be evidence furnished by the party's own act of his consent at a previous period.

Direct, called also express, admissions are those which are made in direct terms.

Implied admissions are those which result from some act or failure to act of the party.

Incidental admissions are those made in some other connection, or involved in the admission of some other fact.

As to the parties by whom admissions must have been made to be considered as evidence:—

They may be made by a party to the record, or by one identified in interest with him; 9 B. & C. 535; Morris' Lessee v. Vandereen, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 65, 1 L. Ed. 38. Not, however, where the party of record is merely a nominal party and has no active interest in the suit; 1 Campb. 392; 3 B. & C. 421; Appleton v. Boyd, 7 Mass. 131; Head v. Shaver, 9 Ala. 791; Frear v. Evertson, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 142; Owings v. Low, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 134; nor by one of several devisees on a contest of a will for incapacity and undue influence; O'Connor v. Madison, 98 Mich. 183, 57 N. W. 105.

They may be made by one of several having a joint interest, so as to be binding upon all; 8 B. & C. 36; Hunt v. Bridgham, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 581, 13 Am. Dec. 458; Beitz v. Fuller, 1 McCord (S. C.) 541, 10 Am. Dec. 693; Patterson v. Choate, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 441; Bound v. Lathrop, 4 Conn. 336, 10 Am. Dec. 147; Getchell v. Heald, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 26; Owings v. Low, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 144; Van Reimsdyk v. Kane, 1 Gall. 635; Fed. Cas. No. 16,872. Mere community of interest, however, as in case of coexecutors; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 176; Hammon v. Huntley, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 493; James v. Hackley, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 277; trustees; 3 Esp. 101; co-tenants; Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 483, 15 Am. Dec. 395; Smith v. Vincent, 15 Conn. 1, 38 Am. Dec. 59; is not sufficient. Admissions of one of several defendants against his interests will be receivable in evidence against him only; Kiser v. Dannenberg, 88 Ga. 541, 15 S. E. 17.

The interest in all cases must have subsisted at the time of making the admissions; 2 Stark. 41; Plant v. McEwen, 4 Conn. 544; Packer's Lessee v. Gonsalus, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 526. Admissions made by one subsequently appointed administratrix are not admissible against her when suing as such nor against her successor in office; Gooding v. Ins. Co., 46 Ill. App. 307; More v. Finch, 65 Hun 404, 20 N. Y. Supp. 164. An admission of debt by an executor does not bind the estate; Orr's Appeal, 7 W. N. C. (Pa.) 126.

They may be made by any person interested in the subject-matter of the suit, though the suit be prosecuted in the name of another person as a cestui que trust; 1 Wils. 257; 1 Bingh. 45; but see 3 N. & P.

598; 6 M. & G. 261; or by an indemnifying creditor in an action against the sheriff; 7 C. & P. 629.

They may be made by a third person, a stranger to the suit, where the issue is substantially upon the rights of such a person at a particular time; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 181; or one who has been expressly referred to for information; 3 C. & P. 532; or where there is a privity as between ancestor and heir; 5 B. & Ad. 223; assignor and assignee; Inhabitants of West Cambridge v. Inhabitants of Lexington, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 536; Little v. Libby, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 242, 11 Am. Dec. 68; Giblehouse v. Strong, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 437; Snelgrove v. Martin, 2 McCord (S. C.) 241; Smith v. Martin, 17 Conn. 399; intestate and administrator; 1 Taunt. 141; grantor and grantee of land; Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 230, 4 Am. Dec. 267; Norton v. Pettibone, 7 Conn. 319, 18 Am. Dec. 116; Weidman v. Kohr, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 174; and others. Letters written by a third person at defendant's request about the matter in controversy, are admissible; Holley v. Knapp, 45 Ill. App. 372. Statements by a third person used by a party are evidence against him as admissions in a subsequent controversy; 4 Best & S. 641.

They may be made by an agent, so as to bind the principal; Steph. Ev. 17; declarations of an architect to the contractor in directing operations are admissible against the owner in an action for price of work and material; Wright v. Reusens, 133 N. Y. 298, 31 N. E. 215; so far only, however, as the agent has authority; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542, 4 South. 844; Barry v. Insurance Co., 62 Mich. 424, 29 N. W. 31; Ruggles v. Insurance Co., 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000, 11 Am. St. Rep. 674; and not, it would seem, in regard to past transactions; 11 Q. B. 46; Haven v. Brown, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 421, 22 Am. Dec. 208; Thalhimer v. Brinckerhoff, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 394, 21 Am. Dec. 155; City Bank of Baltimore v. Bateman, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 104; Parker v. Green, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 142. Declarations of an agent not in the course of the business of the agency, will not prove agency or ratification; Ransom v. Duckett, 48 Ill. App. 659. One cannot prove agency by the declarations of an alleged agent only; Sier v. Bache, 7 Misc. 165, 27 N. Y. Supp. 255; nor will acts and conduct of an alleged agent not acquiesced in by the principal, establish agency; Martin v. Suber, 39 S. C. 525, 18 S. E. 125.

The admissions of the wife bind the husband so far only as she has authority in the matter; 1 Carr. & P. 621; and so the formal admissions of an attorney bind his client; 7 C. & P. 6; but not a necessarily fatal admission unintentionally made; Nesbitt v. Turner, 155 Pa. 429, 26 Atl. 750; nor when not within the scope of his authority; Lewis v. Duane, 69 Hun 28, 23 N. Y. Supp. 433; and see 2 C. & K. 216; 3 C. B. 608. Declarations of a husband in the absence of his wife are not admissible to affect the title of his wife to personal property; Leedom v. Leedom, 160 Pa. 273, 28 Atl. 1024; nor will his admissions affect the wife's separate estate; Clapp v. Engledow, 82 Tex. 290, 18 S. W. 146. See EVIDENCE.

Implied admissions may result from assumed character; 1 B. & Ald. 677; from conduct; 6 C. & P. 241; Tilgham v. Fisher, 9 Watts (Pa.) 441; from acquiescence, which is positive in its nature; Carter v. Bennett, 4 Fla. 340; from possession of documents in some cases; 5 C. & P. 75; 25 State Tr. 120.

The omission to answer a letter is not evidence of the truth of statements made in the letter; see 16 Cyc. 960.

In civil matters, constraint will not avoid admissions, if imposition or fraud were not made use of.

Admissions of one in possession of lands, made to others than the owner, are to be considered in determining whether his possession is adverse to the owner; Lochausen v. Laughter, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 291, 23 S. W. 513.

Judicial admissions; 2 Campb. 341; Boyden v. Moore, 5 Mass. 365; Jones v. Hoar, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 285; those which have been acted on by others; Commercial Bank v. King, 3 Rob. (La.) 243; Kinney v. Farnsworth, 17 Conn. 355; 13 Jur. 253; and those contained in deeds as between parties and privies; Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 611, 8 L. Ed. 514; are conclusive evidence against the party making them.

Declarations and admissions are admissible to prove partnership, if made by alleged partners; Schulberg v. Gutterman, 8 Misc. 502, 28 N. Y. Supp. 763; admission of one that he is in partnership with another, is not binding on the latter; Bank of Osceola v. Outhwaite, 50 Mo. App. 124.

It frequently occurs in practice, that, in order to save expenses as to mere formal proofs, the attorneys on each side consent to admit, reciprocally, certain facts in the cause without requiring proof of them. These are usually reduced to writing. Such admissions are in general conclusive; 1 Gr. Ev. § 186, 205; Holley v. Young, 68 Me. 215, 28 Am. Rep. 40; Woodcock v. City of Calais, 68 Me. 244; Marsh v. Mitchell, 26 N. J. Eq. 497; Perry v. Mfg. Co., 40 Conn. 313; 1 Camp. 139; 1 M. & W. 507; and may be used in evidence on a new trial; State v. Bryan, 3 Gill (Md.) 389; Merchants' Bank v. Bank, 3 Gill (Md.) 96, 43 Am. Dec. 300; Farmers' Bank v. Sprigg, 11 Md. 389; Elwood v. Lannon's Lessee, 27 Md. 209; 5 C. & P. 386; but may be withdrawn if improvidently made, but only in a clear case of mistake; 1 Gr. Ev. § 206; Marsh v. Mitchell, 26 N. J. Eq. 501; and on timely notice; Hargroves v. Redd, 43 Ga. 150; 5 C. & P. 386; and upon leave granted in the exercise of a sound discretion; Perry v. Mfg. Co., 40 Conn. 313; 7 id. 6; but not after the position of the parties has been changed, as by the death of a party or witness; Wilson v. Bank, 55 Ga. 98.

Admissions against interest in a bill in equity cannot be used as such in another case; Gresl. Eq. Ev. 323; Wigm. Evid. § 1065.

As to admissions during negotiations for a compromise, see COMPROMISE.

In Pleading. The acknowledgment or recognition by one party of the truth of some matter alleged by the opposite party.

In Enquiry.

Partial admissions are those which are delivered in terms of uncertainty, mixed up with explanatory or qualifying circumstances.

Plenary admissions are those which admit the truth of the matter without qualification, whether it be asserted as from information and belief or as from actual knowledge.

At Law.

In all pleadings in confession and avoidance, admission of the truth of the opposite party's pleading is made. Express admissions may be made of matters of fact only.

The usual mode of making an express admission in pleading is, after saying that the plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his action, etc., to proceed thus, "Because he says that, although it be true that," etc., repeating such of the allegations of the adverse party as are meant to be admitted; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 143, 144. See 1 Chitty, Pl. 600; Archb. Civ. Pl. 215.

Pleadings which have been withdrawn from a court of law may be offered in evidence subject to explanation, to prove admissions of the pleader: Soaps v. Eichberg, 42 Ill. App. 375; but admissions contained in an original answer are not conclusive, where an amended answer has been filed excluding such matter; Baxter v. R. Co. (Tex.) 22 S. W. 1002. The plea of the general issue admits the corporate existence of the plaintiff corporation; Bailey v. Bank, 127 Ill. 332, 19 N. E. 695. In many states, in a suit against a firm or corporation, the partnership or corporate existence is taken as admitted unless denied by affidavit filed with the plea. Where complainant sets a plea down for argument, he admits its truth, but denies its sufficiency; Burrell v. Hackley, 35 Fed. 833. Allegations of the complaint not denied by the answer are to be taken as true; Robertson v. Perkins, 129 U. S. 233, 9 Sup. Ct. 279, 32 L. Ed. 686. Where two defences are set up, a denial in one is qualified by an admission in the other; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Paine, 119 U. S. 564, 7 Sup. Ct. 323, 30 L. Ed. 513.

See CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

ADMITTANCE. The act of giving possession of a copyhold estate. It is of three kinds: namely, upon a voluntary grant by the lord, upon a surrender by the former tenant, and upon descent. 2 Bla. Com. 366. See COPYHOLD.

ADMITTENDO CLERICO. An old English writ issuing to the bishop to establish the right of the Crown to make a presentation to a benefice.

ADMITTENDO IN SOCIUM. A writ associating certain persons to justices of assize. Cowell.

ADMONITIO TRINA. The three fold warning given to a prisoner who stood mute, before he was subjected to peine forte et dure (q. v.).

ADNEPOS. The son of a great-great-grandson. Calvinus, Lex.

ADNEPTIS. The daughter of a great-great-granddaughter. Calvinus, Lex.

ADNOTATIO (Lat. notare). A subscription or signing.

In the civil law, casual homicide was excused by the indulgence of the emperor, signed with his own sign-manual, called adnotatio; Code, 9. 16. 5; 4 Bla. Com. 187. See RESCRIPT.

ADOLESCENCE. That age which follows puberty and precedes the age of majority. It commences for males at fourteen, and for females at twelve years completed, and continues until twenty-one years complete. Wharton.

ADOPTION. The act by which a person takes the child of another into his family, and treats him as his own.

A juridical act creating between two persons certain relations, purely civil, of paterinity and filiation. 6 Demolombe, § 1.

Adoption was practised in the remotest antiquity. Cicero asks, "Quod est jus adoptionis? nempe ut is adoptet, qui neque procreare jam liberos possit, et cum potuerit, sit expertus." At Athens, he who had adopted a son was not at liberty to marry without the permission of the magistrates. Gaius, Ulpian, and the Institutes of Justinian only treat of adoption as an act creating the paternal power. Originally, the object of adoption was to introduce a person into the family and to acquire the paternal power over him. The adopted took the name of the adopter, and only preserved his own adjectively, as Scipio Æmilianus; Cæsar Octavianus, etc. According to Cicero, adoptions produced the right of succeeding to the name, the property, and the lares: "hereditates nominis, pecuniæ, sacrorum secutæ sunt." Pro Dom. § 13.

The first mode of adoption was in the form of a law passed by the comitia curiata. Afterwards, it was effected by the mancipatio, alienatio per æs et libram, and the in jure cessio; by means of the first the paternal authority of the father was dissolved, and by the second the adoption was completed. The mancipatio was a solemn sale made to the emptor in presence of five Roman citizens (who represented the five classes of the Roman people), and a libripens, or scalesman, to weigh the piece of copper which represented the price. By this sale the person sold became subject to the mancipium of the purchaser, who then emancipated him; whereupon he fell again under the paternal power; and in order to exhaust it entirely it was necessary to repeat the mancipatio three times: si pater filium ter venundabit, filius a patre liber esto. After the paternal power was thus dissolved, the party who desired to adopt the son instituted a fictitious suit against the purchaser who held him in mancipium, alleging that the person belonged to him or was subject to his paternal power; the defendant not denying the fact, the prætor rendered a decree accordingly, which constituted the cessio in jure, and completed the adoption. Adoptantur autem, cum a parente in cuius potestate sunt, tertia mancipatione in jure ceduntur, atque ab eo, qui adoptat, apud eum apud quem legis actio est, vindicantur; Gell. 6. 19.

Towards the end of the Republic another mode of adoption had been introduced by custom. This was by a declaration made by a testator, in his will, that he considered the person whom he wished to adopt as his son: In this manner Julius Cæsar adopted Octavius.

It is said that the adoption of which we have been speaking was limited to persons alieni juris. But there was another species of adoption, called adrogation, which applied exclusively to persons who were sui juris. By the adrogation a pater-familias, with all who were subject to his patria potestas, as well as his whole estate, entered into another family, and became subject to the paternal authority of the chief of that family. Quæ species adoptionis dicitur adrogatio, quia et is qui adoptat rogatur, id est interrogatur, an velit eum quem adopturus sit justum sibi filium esse; et is, qui adoptatur rogatur an id fieri patiatur; et populus rogatur an id fieri jubeat; Gaius, 1. 99. The formulæ of these interrogations are in Aul. Gell. (see Hunter, Rom. Law 205): "Velitis, jubetis, Quirites, uti L. Valerius L. Titio tam jure legeque filius sibi siet, quam si ex eo patre matreque familias ejus natus esset, utique ei vitæ necisque in eo potestas siet uti partendo filio est; hoc ita ut dizi vos, Quirites, rogo." This public and solemn form of adoption remained unchanged, with regard to adrogation, until the time of Justinian: up to that period it could only take place populi auctoritate. According to the Institutes, 1. 11. 1, adrogation took place by virtue of a rescript of the emperor,—principali rescripto, which only issued causa cognita; and the ordinary adoption took place in pursuance of the authorization of the magistrate,—imperio magistratus. The effect of the adoption was also modified in such a manner, that if a son was adopted by a stranger, extranea persona, he preserved all the family rights resulting from his birth, and at the same time acquired all the family rights produced by the adoption.

There is no law of adoption in Scotland; Bell's Dict.; nor in England. In the latter country any renunciation by parents of their legal rights and liabilities is a mere empty form; [1901] 2 K. B. 385; 3 M. & G. 547.

In the United States, adoption exists only by statute; In re Thorne, 155 N. Y. 140, 49 N. E. 661; Ballard v. Ward, 89 Pa. 358. One of the first states to introduce it was Massachusetts in 1851; Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 321. Its object is to change the succession of property and to create relations of paternity and affiliation not before existing; Morrison v. Sessions' Estate, 70 Mich. 297, 38 N. W. 249, 14 Am. St. Rep. 500. In Louisiana it was abolished by the Code of 1808, art. 35, p. 50. See Vidal v. Commagère, 13 La. Ann. 517, but the right has since been restored; Civ. Code 1870, Art. 214. In Clarkson v. Hatton, 143 Mo. 47, 44 S. W. 761, 39 L. R. A. 748, 65 Am. St. Rep. 635, it was said to exist in every state. In many of the continental states of Europe it is still permitted under various restrictions.

Adoption is never sustained by mere presumption; Sackman v. Campbell, 10 Wash. 533, 39 Pac. 145; In re Romero, 75 Cal. 379, 17 Pac. 434; Henry v. Taylor, 16 S. D. 424, 93 N. W. 641; even though the child had been taken from an asylum at the age of seven, given the name of the people with whom he lived and treated by them as a son until majority; In re Huyck, 49 Misc. 391, 99 N. Y. Supp. 502; and where the method of adoption is provided by statute, it can be done in no other way; Taylor v. Deseve, 81 Tex. 246, 16 S. W. 1008; Foley v. Foley, 61 Ill. App. 577. There must be a substantial compliance with all statutory requirements; Smith v. Allen, 161 N. Y. 478, 55 N. E. 1056; Bresser v. Saarman, 112 Ia. 720, 84 N. W. 920.

A husband and wife may adopt a child jointly; Markover v. Krauss, 132 Ind. 294, 31 N. E. 1047, 17 L. R. A. 806 (but not if the husband be insane; Watts v. Dull, 184 Ill. 86, 56 N. E. 303, 75 Am. St. Rep. 141); or an unmarried person of suitable age; Krug v. Davis, 87 Ind. 590. The mere fact that one is in the senile age of life will not render him incompetent to adopt one in the prime and vigor of life; Collamore v. Learned, 171 Mass. 99, 50 N. E. 518. It is held that a non-resident may not adopt a child; Knight v. Gallaway, 42 Wash. 413, 85 Pac. 21. An adult may be an adopted child; Sheffield v. Franklin, 151 Ala. 492, 44 South. 373, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 884, 125 Am. St. Rep. 37, 15 Ann. Cas. 90; In re Moran's Estate, 151 Mo. 555, 52 S. W. 377; Succession of Caldwell, 114 La. 195, 38 South. 140, 108 Am. St. Rep. 341; Markover v. Krauss, 132 Ind. 294, 31 N. E. 1047, 17 L. R. A. 806; Collamore v. Learned, 171 Mass. 99, 50 N. E. 518; but see contra; Petition of Moore, 14 R. I. 38; Williams v. Knight, 18 R. I. 333, 27 Atl. 210. Where the word "child" was used, the statute was held not to include an adult.

Usually the consent of the natural parents is required; Hopkins v. Antrobus, 120 Ia. 21, 94 N. W. 251; In re Estate of McCormick, 108 Wis. 234, 84 N. W. 148, 81 Am. St. Rep. 890; Succession of Vollmer, 40 La. Ann. 593, 4 South. 254; Luppel v. Winans, 37 N. J. Eq. 245; In re Bastin, 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 570; and in some states the consent of the child, when he is above a certain age; In re Johnson, 98 Cal. 531, 33 Pac. 460, 21 L. R. A. 380; Morrison v. Sessions' Estate, 70 Mich. 297, 38 N. W. 249, 14 Am. St. Rep. 500.

If the child be a foundling, the parents have no authority over it and the situation is as if the parents were dead; Succession of Dupre, 116 La. 1090, 41 South. 324. A charitable society which maintains and cares for a child may consent to its adoption; Booth v. Van Allen, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 401; and a probate court may appoint a guardian ad litem with power to give or withhold consent to adoption, where the parents are unknown and there is no guardian; In re Edds, 137 Mass. 346. To constitute abandonment there must be some act on the part of the parent evincing a settled purpose to forego all parental duties; Winans v. Luppelle, 47 N. J. Eq. 302, 20 Atl. 969.

If the court be satisfied that the proceedings are for his benefit, the consent of a minor will be presumed; Morrison v. Sessions' Estate, 70 Mich. 297, 38 N. W. 249, 14 Am. St. Rep. 500.

The surrender of the child by its parents constitutes a valuable consideration for a promise of adoption; Healy v. Simpson, 113 Mo. 340, 20 S. W. 881; Godine v. Kidd, 64 Hun 585, 19 N. Y. Supp. 335; Lynn v. Hockaday, 162 Mo. 111, 61 S. W. 885, 85 Am. St. Rep. 480.

Where there is a contract for adoption and a sufficient consideration therefor on the part of the child, such contract will be enforced; McElvain v. McElvain, 171 Mo. 244, 71 S. W. 142; 8 Hawaii 40.

When an infant child has been released to another, such release is not revocable without sufficient legal reasons; Janes v. Cleghorn, 54 Ga. 10; and unless proceedings to revoke are made promptly, it will be fatal to their maintenance; Brown v. Brown, 101 Ind. 340.

The right of inheritance. In the District of Columbia the right of inheritance is not included in the rights acquired by adoption; Moore v. Hoffman, Fed. Cas. No. 9,764 a; In New York it is; Theobald v. Smith, 103 App. Div. 200, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1019. In Ohio an adopted child inherits from the adopting parent but not through him; Phillips v. McConica, 59 Ohio St. 1, 51 N. E. 445, 69 Am. St. Rep. 753; in Illinois such child can take by descent only from the person adopting him and not from lineal or collateral kindred of the adopting parent; Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536, 36 N. E. 628, 23 L. R. A. 665, 39 Am. St. Rep. 196; Keegan v. Geraghty, 101 Ill. 26; and see Van Derlyn v. Mack, 137 Mich. 146, 100 N. W. 278, 66 L. R. A. 437, 109 Am. St. Rep. 669, 4 Ann. Cas. 879. In Pennsylvania an adopted child can not take under a devise to "children" as it is not a child by nature; Schafer v. Eneu, 54 Pa. 304. He is held not to be within a conveyance to "bodily heirs"; Balch v. Johnson, 106 Tenn. 249, 61 S. W. 289; nor is he a lineal descendant; Com. v. Ferguson, 137 Pa. 595, 20 Atl. 870, 10 L. R. A. 240; or lineal issue; Kerr v. Goldsborough, 150 Fed. 289, 80 C. C. A. 177. The word "child" in a statute relating to adoption has a broader signification than "issue"; Virgin v. Marwick, 97 Me. 578, 55 Atl. 520; and the adopted child has the same right of inheritance as a natural child; id. In Massachusetts an adopted child was held to be entitled to take from the deceased son of one of the adopting parents; Stearns v. Allen, 183 Mass. 404, 67 N. E. 349, 97 Am. St. Rep. 441.

The right of inheritance from adoption arises by operation of law from the acts of the parties in compliance with the statute and not from contract; Jordan v. Abney, 97 Tex. 296, 78 S. W. 486.

As an adopted child is not a lineal descendant, a legacy to him will not be exempted from payment of the collateral inheritance tax; Com. v. Ferguson, 137 Pa. 595, 20 Atl. 870, 10 L. R. A. 240; otherwise in New York by statute; In re Butler, 58 Hun 400, 12 N. Y. Supp. 201; but see In re Bird's Estate, 11 N. Y. Supp. 895, where payment of such a tax was required, in the case of a legacy to the child of an adopted child.

The adoptive parent may disinherit the child; Logan v. Lennix, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 62, 88 S. W. 364; and he has the same unlimited power of disposition of his property that a natural father has; Burnes v. Burnes, 132 Fed. 485.

Adopting parents inherit from the child in preference to the natural parents; Swick v. Coleman, 218 Ill. 33, 75 N. E. 807; Paul v. Davis, 100 Ind. 422; see Hyatt v. Pugsley, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 373; Estate of Foley, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 301; but this rule is not always followed. In many cases the estate of the deceased child goes to his relatives by blood; Upson v. Noble, 35 Ohio St. 655; Com. v. Powel, 16 W. N. C. (Pa.) 297; Hole v. Robbins, 53 Wis. 514, 10 N. W. 617; Hill v. Nye, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 457. In Pennsylvania, although the act does in express words confer the right of inheritance upon the child from the adopting parent, the latter cannot inherit from the adopted child, because "the act does not so declare"; Com. v. Powel, 16 W. N. C. (Pa.) 297.

A child adopted in one state, where both it and its adopted parent are domiciled, can inherit land in another state having substantially similar adoption laws and permitting adopted children to inherit; Finley v. Brown, 122 Tenn. 316, 123 S. W. 359, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1285; see cases in 65 L. R. A. 186, note; contra, Brown v. Finley, 157 Ala. 424, 47 South. 577, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 679, 131 Am. St. Rep. 68, 16 Ann. Cas. 778.

To "enact" implies the creating anew of a law which did not exist before; but "adopt," no doubt, implies the making that their own which was created by another, as the adoption of our statute laws of Great Britain, as they stood, by the Colonial Government; Williams v. Bank, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 539.

The word "adoption" in a state constitution providing for a continuance in office of judges in office at the adoption of the constitution means when it is fully consummated and complete—not inchoate and imperfect; People v. Norton, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 169.

"The primary and natural signification of the word adoption.....includes both take effect and in force"; People v. Norton, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 169.

ADPROMISSOR (Lat. promittere). One who binds himself for another; a surety; a peculiar species of fidejussor. Calvinus, Lex.

The term is used in the same sense in the Scotch law. The cautionary engagement was undertaken by a separate act: hence, one entering into it was called adpromissor (promisor in addition to). Erskine, Inst. 3. 1.

ADROGATION. One of two procedures for adoption under the Roman Law, i. e. by bill (rogatio) passed by the comitia curiata, with the formal consent of the intended father and son. 1 Roby, Rom. Priv. Law 60. See ADOPTION.

ADS. See AD SECTAM.

ADSCRIPTI (Lat. scribere). Joined to by writing; ascribed; set apart; assigned to; annexed to.

ADSCRIPTI GLEBÆ. Slaves who served the master of the soil: who were annexed to the land, and passed with it when it was conveyed. Calvinus, Lex.

These servi adscripti (or adscriptitii) glebæ held the same position as the villains regardant of the Normans; 2 Bla. Com. 93. See 1 Poll. & Mait. 372.

ADSCRIPTICII (Lat.). A species of serfs or slaves. See 1 Poll. & Mait. 372.

Those persons who were enrolled and liable to be drafted as legionary soldiers. Calvinus, Lex.

ADSESSORES (Lat. sedere). Side judges. Those who were joined to the regular magistrates as assistants or advisers; those who were appointed to supply the place of the regular magistrates in certain cases. Calvinus, Lex. See ASSESSORS.

ADULT. In Civil Law. A male infant who has attained the age of fourteen; a female infant who has attained the age of twelve. Domat. Liv. Prel. tit. 2, § 2, n. 8.

In Common Law. One of the full age of twenty-one. Swanst. Ch. 553; George v. State, 11 Tex. App. 95.

ADULTER (Lat.). One who corrupts; one who corrupts another man's wife.

Adulter solidorum. A corrupter of metals; a counterfeiter. Calvinus, Lex.

ADULTERA (Lat.). A woman who commits adultery. Calvinus, Lex.

one of the same kind. See 16 M. & W. 644; State v. Norton, 24 N. C. 40.

See FOOD AND DRUG LAWS.

ADULTERATOR (Lat.). A corrupter; a counterfeiter.

Adulator monetæ. A forger. Du Cange.

ADULTERINE. The issue of adulterous intercourse.

Those are not deemed adulterine who are begotten of a woman openly married through ignorance of a former wife being alive.

Adulterine children are regarded more unfavorably than the illegitimate offspring of single persons. The Roman law refused the title of natural children, and the canon law discouraged their admission to orders.

ADULTERINE GUILDS. Companies of traders acting as corporations, without charters, and paying a fine annually for the privilege of exercising their usurped privileges. Smith, Wealth of Nat. book 1, c. 10; Whar- ton, Dict.

ADULTERIUM. A fine imposed for the commission of adultery. Barrington, Stat. 62, n.

ADULTERY. The voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife. Bishop, Mar. & D. § 415; Moore v. Com., 6 Metc. (Mass.) 243, 39 Am. Dec. 724; State v. Hutchinson, 36 Me. 261; Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 56, 56 Am. Dec. 410; Hull v. Hull, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. C.) 174.

Unlawful voluntary sexual intercourse between two persons, one of whom at least is married, is the essence of the crime in all cases. In general, it is sufficient if either party is married; and the crime of the married party will be adultery, while that of the unmarried party will be fornication; Re-publica v. Roberts, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 6; id.; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 124, 1 L. Ed. 316; State v. Parham, 50 N. C. 416; Smitherman v. State, 27 Ala. 23; State v. Thurstin, 35 Me. 205, 58 Am. Dec. 695; Com. v. Cregor, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 591; Com. v. Lafferty, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 673; Banks v. State, 96 Ala. 78, 11 South. 404; Hunter v. U. S., 1 Pinney (Wis.) 91, 39 Am. Dec. 277. In Massachusetts, however, and some of the other states, by statute, if the woman be married, though the man be unmarried, he is guilty of adultery; Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 509, 32 Am. Dec. 284, and note; Com. v. Elwell, 2 Metc. 190, 39 Am. Dec. 398 (where the man was ignorant that the woman was married); State v. Pearce, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 318; Wasden v. State, 18 Ga. 264; State v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 515; and see State v. Lash, 16 N. J. L. 380, 32 Am. Dec. 397; Mosser v. Mosser, 29 Ala. 313. In Connecticut and some other states, it seems that to constitute the offence of adultery it is necessary that the woman should be married; that if the man only is married, it is not the crime of adultery at common law or under the statute, so that an indictment for adultery could be sustained against either party; though within the meaning of the law respecting divorces it is adultery in the man. Cohabitation with a man after marriage is not adultery, unless the woman knows of such marriage; Banks v. State, 96 Ala. 78, 11 South. 404; Vaughan v. State, 83 Ala. 55, 3 South. 530; it is not necessary to prove emission on prosecution for adultery; Com. v. Hussey, 157 Mass. 415, 32 N. E. 362.

A charge of open and notorious adultery is not sustained by proof of occasional illicit intercourse; Wright v. State, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 358, 35 Am. Dec. 126, and note; State v. Crowner, 56 Mo. 147; Brevaldo v. State, 21 Fla. 789; Searls v. People, 13 Ill. 597; nor by merely living together as man and wife without any circumstances to cause scandal or suspicion; People v. Salmon, 148 Cal. 303, 83 Pac. 42, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268; Schoudel v. State, 57 N. J. L. 209, 30 Atl. 598. While ordinarily marriage may be proved by admission or matrimonial cohabitation there is some conflict as to whether the fact of marriage can be proved by admission of a party so as to render him guilty of a crime, as of adultery. In many courts such evidence is held insufficient; People v. Humphrey, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 314; State v. Roswell, 6 Conn. 446; State v. Medbury, 8 R. I. 543; People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72, 67 N. W. 819; State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335 (Gil. 251); but the weight of authority is against that rule; Cameron v. State, 14 Ala. 546, 48 Am. Dec. 111, and note; State v. Libby, 44 Me. 469, 69 Am. Dec. 115; Com. v. Holt, 121 Mass. 61; Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410; Murphy v. State, 50 Ga. 150; State v. Sanders, 30 Ia. 582.

It was not, by itself, indictable at common law; 4 Bla. Com. 65; Whart. Cr. Law 1717; Anderson v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 627, 16 Am. Dec. 776; Com. v. Isaacs, 5 Rand. (Va.) 634; but was left to the ecclesiastical courts for punishment. In the United States it is usually punishable by fine and imprisonment under various statutes.

Parties to the crime may be jointly indicted; Com. v. Elwell, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 190, 35 Am. Dec. 398; or one may be convicted and punished before or without the conviction of the other; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1730; "but when one has been previously tried and acquitted, or when both are tried together and the verdict is for one, the other cannot be found guilty;" State v. Mainor, 28 N. C. 340; State v. Parham, 50 N. C. 416; contra; State v. Caldwell, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 576; Alonzo v. State, 15 Tex. App. 378, 49 Am. Rep. 207; Solomon v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 140, 45 S. W. 706; and see 12 Harv. L. R. 282. The adultery of the wife will not avoid a previous voluntary settlement; Lister v. Lister, 35 N. J. Eq. 49; but if, in contemplation of future adultery, she induce a gift of property, it is revocable; 2 De G. F. & J. 481; Evans v. Evans, 118 Ga. 890, 45 S. E. 612, 98 Am. St. Rep. 180. The equitable jurisdiction is founded on fraud in concealing a material fact which, by reason of the relation, there was a duty to disclose; 17 Harv. L. Rev. 202. Where the petitioner in divorce was only able to prove acts of familiarity, suggestive of adultery, before the date of the petition, he was permitted to prove actual adultery after that date as showing what inferences should be drawn from the prior conduct; [1900] P. 63.

As to civil remedies, see CRIM. CON.

ADVANCE. To supply beforehand; to furnish something before an equivalent is received; to loan. Rogers v. Bank, 108 N. C. 574, 13 S. E. 245.

ADVANCEMENT. A gift by anticipation from a parent to a child of the whole or a part of what it is supposed such child will inherit on the death of the parent. Hengst's Estate, 6 Watts (Pa.) 87; Sampson v. Sampson, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 333; Osgood v. Breed's Heirs, 17 Mass. 358; Jackson v. Matsdorf, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 91, 6 Am. Dec. 355; Parish v. Rhodes, Wright (Ohio) 339; Darnes' Ex'r v. Lloyd, 82 Va. 859, 5 S. E. 87, 3 Am. St. Rep. 123. The doctrine applies only to intestate estates, and proceeds upon the presumption, in the absence of a will, that the gift is in anticipation of the parent's death, and that he intended equality; but a subsequent disposal by will rebuts the presumption; Marshall v. Rench, 3 Del. Ch. 239, per Bates, Ch.

But an advancement, properly so called, though a thing known under certain ancient customs in England, is now a creature of statute, and, by the statute, is confined to intestate estates, and never applied to lands devised; Marshall v. Rench, 3 Del. Ch. 239, 253, where the opinion states fully the English statutes and policy.

An advancement can only be made by a parent to a child; Callender v. McCreary, 4 How. (Miss.) 356; Shiver v. Brock, 55 N. C. 137; Bisph. Eq. 84; or in some states, by statute, to a grandchild; 4 Kent 419; Dickinson v. Lee, 4 Watts (Pa.) 82, 28 Am. Dec. 684; 4 Ves. 437. It must be ejusdem generis; 3 Yo. & Coll. 397; as is the rule with respect to ademption, q. v.

It is held that a gift to a husband by wife's father is considered an advancement to the wife; Bruce v. Slomp, 82 Va. 352, 4 S. E. 692; and that it is a question of fact, where decedent in his lifetime made a conveyance to his daughter-in-law; Palmer v. Culbertson, 65 Hun 625, 20 N. Y. Supp. 391.

The intention of the parent is to decide whether a gift is intended as an advancement; Lawson's Appeal, 23 Pa. 85; Jackson v. Matsdorf, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 91, 6 Am. Dec. 355; McPaw v. Blewit, 2 McCord Ch. (S.

C.) 103. See Weatherhead v. Field, 26 Vt. 665.

A mere gift is presumptively an advancement, but the contrary intention may be shown; Brown v. Burke, 22 Ga. 574; Grattan v. Grattan, 18 Ill. 167, 65 Am. Dec. 726; Lawrence v. Mitchell, 48 N. C. 190; Hatch v. Straight, 3 Conn. 31, 8 Am. Dec. 152; Scott v. Scott, 1 Mass. 527; Bruce v. Slemp, 82 Va. 352, 4 S. E. 692; Culp v. Wilson, 133 Ind. 294, 32 N. E. 928. The maintenance and education of a child, or the gift of money without a view to a portion or settlement in life, is not deemed an advancement; Ison v. Ison, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 15; Sherwood v. Smith, 23 Conn. 516. If security is taken for repayment, it is a debt and not an advancement; High's Appeal, 21 Pa. 283; West v. Bolton, 23 Ga. 531; Barton v. Rice, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 508; and see Procter v. Newhall, 17 Mass. 93; Osgood v. Breed's Heirs, 17 Mass. 359; Stewart v. State, 2 Harr. & G. (Md.) 114. Payment of a son's debts will be considered an advancement; Steele v. Frierson, 85 Tenn. 430, 3 S. W. 649; or the payment by the father as surety of the notes of his son who had no estate; Reynolds' Adm'r v. Reynolds, 92 Ky. 556, 18 S. W. 517.

No particular formality is requisite to indicate an advancement; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 507; 4 Kent 418; Brown v. Brown, 16 Vt. 197; unless prescribed by statute; 4 Kent 418; Hartwell v. Rice, 1 Gray (Mass.) 587; Mowry v. Smith, 5 R. I. 255; Sayles v. Baker, 5 R. I. 457.

Where a father divides his property equally between two sons, conveying to one his share, it is considered an advancement where no deed is delivered to the other; O'Connell v. O'Connell, 73 Ia. 733, 36 N. W. 764.

The effect of an advancement is to reduce the distributive share of the child by the amount so received, estimating its value at the time of receipt; Oyster v. Oyster, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 422; Nelson v. Wyman, 21 Mo. 347; Burton v. Dickinson, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 112; Warfield v. Warfield, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 459; Beckwith v. Butler, 1 Wash. (Va.) 224; Hall v. Davis, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 450; in some states the child has his option to retain the advancement and abandon his distributive share; Clark v. Fox, 9 Dana (Ky.) 193; Taylor v. Reese, 4 Ala. 121; to abandon his advancement and receive his equal share of the estate; Knight v. Oliver, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 33; Andrews v. Hall, 15 Ala. 85; Phillips v. McLaughlin, 26 Miss. 592; Grattan v. Grattan, 18 Ill. 167, 65 Am. Dec. 726; but this privilege exists only in case of intestacy; Newman v. Wilbourne, 1 Hill, Ch. (S. C.) 10; Sturdevant v. Goodrich, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 95; Howland v. Heckscher, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 520; Hawley v. James, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 450; Ves. Ch. 323. See ADEMPITION; GIFT.

It is not chargeable with interest; Miller's Appeal, 31 Pa. 337; until the settlement of the estate.

ADVANCES. Payments made to the owner of goods by a factor or agent, who has or is to have possession of the goods for the purpose of selling them.

An agent is entitled to reimburse himself from the proceeds of the goods, and has a lien on them for the amount paid; Liverm. Ag. 38; Merchants' National Bank v. Pope, 19 Or. 35, 26 Pac. 622; and an action over for the balance, against his principal, if the sales are insufficient to cover the advances; Parker v. Brancker, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 40; Marfield v. Goodhue, 3 N. Y. 62; Frothingham v. Everton, 12 N. H. 239; Harrison, Frazier & Co. v. Mora, 150 Pa. 481, 24 Atl. 705; Eichel v. Sawyer, 44 Fed. 845; but he must first exhaust the property in his hands; Balderston v. Rubber Co., 18 R. I. 338, 27 Atl. 507, 49 Am. St. Rep. 772. Where to save himself from loss the factor buys the goods himself, the consignor may elect whether he will ratify the sale or demand the value of the goods; Simis v. Miller, 37 S. C. 402, 16 S. E. 155, 34 Am. St. Rep. 762.

See AGENT; FACTOR.

In the case of a contract for the manufacture and sale of merchandize, a stipulation to advance money on account means to supply beforehand, to loan before the work is done or the goods made; Powder Co. v. Burkhardt, 97 U. S. 110, 24 L. Ed. 973.

It also refers to a case where money is paid before, or in advance of, the proper time of payment; it may characterize a loan or a gift, or money advanced to be repaid conditionally; Vail v. Vail, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 73.

Though in its strict legal sense the word does not mean gifts or advancements, but rather a sort of loan, in its ordinary and usual sense it includes both loans and gifts—rather the former than the latter; Prouty v. Swift, 51 N. Y. 597; Nolan's Ex'rs v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 352.

As to mortgages to secure future advancements, see MORTGAGE.

ADVANTAGE. Preference or priority. United States v. Preston, 4 Wash. 446, Fed. Cas. No. 16,087.

ADVENA (Lat. venire). In Roman Law. One of foreign birth, who has left his own country and settled elsewhere, and who has not acquired citizenship in his new locality; often called albanus. Du Cange.

ADVENT. The period commencing on Sunday falling on St. Andrew's day (30th of November), or the nearest Sunday to it, and continuing till Christmas. Blount.

It took its name from the fact that it immediately preceded the day set apart to commemorate the birth or coming (advent) of Christ. Cowel; Termes de la Ley.

Formerly, during this period, "all contentions at law were omitted." But, by statute 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2) c. 48, certain actions were allowed.

ADVENTITIOUS (Lat. adventitius). That which comes incidentally, or out of the regular course.

ADVENTITIUS (Lat.). Foreign; coming from an unusual source.

Adventitia bona are goods which fall to a man otherwise than by inheritance.

Adventitia dos is a dowry or portion given by some friend other than the parent.

ADVENTURE. Sending goods abroad under charge of a supercargo or other agent, which are to be disposed of to the best advantage for the benefit of the owners.

The goods themselves so sent.

It is used synonymously with "perils"; it is often used by writers to describe the enterprise or voyage as a "marine adventure" insured against; Moore v. Louisville Underwriters, 14 Fed. 233. See INSURANCE; BILL OF ADVENTURE.

ADVENTURER. One who undertakes uncertain or hazardous actions or enterprises. It is also used to denote one who seeks to advance his own interests by unscrupulous designs on the credulity of others. It has been held that to impute that a person is an adventurer is a libel; 18 L. J. C. P. 241.

ADVERSE CLAIM. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

ADVERSE ENJOYMENT. The possession or exercise of an easement or privilege under a claim of right against the owner of the land out of which the easement is derived. 2 Washb. R. P. 42.

Such an enjoyment, if open, 4 M. & W. 500; 4 Ad. & E. 369, and continued uninterruptedly; Powell v. Bagg, 8 Gray (Mass.) 441, 69 Am. Dec. 262; Colvin v. Burnet, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 564; Pierre v. Fernald, 26 Me. 440, 46 Am. Dec. 573; Bullen v. Runnels, 2 N. H. 255, 9 Am. Dec. 55; Watt v. Trapp, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 136; 11 Ad. & E. 788; Grace Methodist Episcopal Church v. Dobbins, 153 Pa. 294, 25 Atl. 1120, 34 Am. St. Rep. 706, for the term of twenty years, raises a conclusive presumption of a grant, provided that there was, during the time, some one in existence, in possession and occupation, who was not under disability to resist the use; 2 Washb. R. P. 48. See PRESUMPTION; EASEMENT; ADVERSE POSSESSION.

ADVERSE POSSESSION. The enjoyment of land, or such estate as lies in grant, under such circumstances as indicate that such enjoyment has been commenced and continued under an assertion or color of right on the part of the possessor. 3 East 394; Wallace v. Duffield, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 527, 7 Am. Dec. 660; French v. Pearce, 8 Conn. 440, 21 Am. Dec. 680; Robinson v. Douglass, 2 Alk. (Vt.) 364; Smith v. Burtis, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 174; Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 402, 8 L. Ed. 170; Bowles v. Sharp, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 550. See 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178, note.

A prescriptive title rests upon a different principle from that of a title arising under the statute of limitations. Prescription operates as evidence of a grant and confers a positive title; Cruise, Dig. tit. 31, ch. 1, § 4. The statute of limitations operates not so much to confer positive title on the occupant, as to bar the remedy. Hence it is said to be properly called a negative prescription; id. It applies only when there has been a disseisin or some actionable invasion of the real owner's possession; Clawson v. Primrose, 4 Del. Ch. 670 n.

When such possession has been actual, Mather v. Ministers of Trinity Church, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 517, 8 Am. Dec. 663, and has been adverse for twenty years, the law raises the presumption of a grant; Angell, Wat. Cour. 85. But this presumption arises only when the use or occupation would otherwise have been unlawful; Tinkham v. Arnold, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 120; Jackson v. Richards, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 617; Jackson v. Vermilyea, id. 677; Hall v. Powel, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 456, 8 Am. Dec. 722.

The statute of limitations is the source of title by adverse possession; Armijo v. Armijo, 4 N. M. (Gild.) 57, 13 Pac. 92. It is held to be not grounded upon the presumption of a grant; but is the fiat of the legislature cutting off the right to maintain suit; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 125 Ky. 336, 101 S. W. 317, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1, 128 Am. St. Rep. 254; and is for the interest of the stability of titles; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Ely, 25 Wash. 384, 65 Pac. 555, 54 L. R. A. 526, 87 Am. St. Rep. 766. It protects the disseisor in his possession not out of regard to the merits of his title, but because the real owner has acquiesced in his possession; Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527. It must be complied with in every substantial particular; Brokel v. McKechnie, 69 Tex. 33, 6 S. W. 623.

A mere possession, without color or claim of an adverse title, will not enable one in an action of right to avail himself of the statute of limitations; Claggett v. Conlee, 16 Ia. 487; Jasper v. Scharnikow, 150 Fed. 571, 80 C. C. A. 373, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178; Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 402, 8 L. Ed. 170; Stevens v. Brooks, 24 Wis. 329; Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 328, 17 L. Ed. 871. The terms "color of title" and "claim of title" are not synonymous; Herbert v. Hanrick, 16 Ala. 581. To constitute the former there must be a paper title, but the latter may rest wholly in parol; Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Ia. 480. The claim of right may be made inferentially by unequivocal acts of ownership; Barnes v. Light, 116 N. Y. 34, 22 N. E. 441; Wilbur v. R. Co., 116 Ia. 65, 89 N. W. 101; as by the occupation and use of land by a railroad for a right of way; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Houghton, 126 Ill. 235, 18 N. E. 301, 1 L. R. A. 213, 9 Am. St. Rep. 581; or by visible, hostile, exclusive, and continuous appropriation of the land;

Cox v. Hotel Co. (Tex.) 47 S. W. 808. It need not be a valid claim, so long as it is made and relied on by the person in possession; Jackson v. Ellis, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 118; Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 530; Grant v. Fowler, 39 N. H. 101; Cornellus v. Giberson, 25 N. J. L. 1; Montgomery County v. Severson, 64 Ia. 326, 17 N. W. 197, 20 N. W. 458; Virginia Midland R. Co. v. Barbour, 97 Va. 118, 33 S. E. 554; Dothard v. Denson, 72 Ala. 541; and where all the other elements of an adverse possession have concurrently and persistently existed for the statutory time, color of title has been usually held not essential; Moore v. Brownfield, 7 Wash. 23, 34 Pac. 199; Dibble v. Land Co., 163 U. S. 63, 16 Sup. Ct. 939, 41 L. Ed. 72; and see the cases collected on this point, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178, n.

The intention must be manifest; Lewis v. Railroad Co., 162 N. Y. 202, 56 N. E. 540; Haney v. Breeden, 100 Va. 781, 42 S. E. 916; Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 360. It guides the entry and fixes its character; Jasper v. Scharnikow, 150 Fed. 571, 80 C. C. A. 373, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178, citing Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 51, 9 L. Ed. 624. Possession taken under claim of title shows such intention; Probst v. Trustees, 129 U. S. 182, 9 Sup. Ct. 263, 32 L. Ed. 642. But if by mistake one oversteps his bounds and encroaches upon his neighbor's lands, not knowing the location of the true line and intending to claim no more than he really is entitled to possess, his possession is not adverse, and will not give him title no matter how long he actually holds it; Shirey v. Whitlow, 80 Ark. 444, 97 S. W. 444; Gordon v. Booker, 97 Cal. 586, 32 Pac. 593; Mills v. Penny, 74 Ia. 172, 37 N. W. 135, 7 Am. St. Rep. 474; Silver Creek Cement Corp. v. Cement Co., 138 Ind. 297, 35 N. E. 125, 37 N. C. 721; Preble v. Railroad Co., 85 Me. 260, 27 Atl. 149, 21 L. R. A. 829, 35 Am. St. Rep. 366; Kirkman v. Brown, 93 Tenn. 476, 27 S. W. 709. In such a case the intent to claim title exists only upon the condition that his belief as to his boundary is true. The intention is not absolute, but provisional, and the possession is not adverse; Preble v. Railroad Co., 85 Me. 260, 27 Atl. 149, 21 L. R. A. 829, 35 Am. St. Rep. 366. When a boundary line between adjoining landowners is perpetually in dispute, and neither has actual occupation to any definite line, there is no adverse possession beyond the true line; Liddle v. Blake, 131 Ia. 165, 105 N. W. 649; nor will the encroachment of one in the erection of his building on neighboring property through mistake constitute such a possession as will ripen into title by the lapse of time; Davis v. Owen, 107 Va. 283, 58 S. E. 581, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728, nor where a deed, by mistake, covered land not intended to be conveyed; Garst v. Brutsche, 129 Ia. 501, 105 N. W. 452.

Where one enters into possession of real property by permission of the owner, without any tenancy whatever being created, except at sufferance, possession being given as a mere matter of favor, he can never acquire title by adverse possession, no matter how long continued against the true owner thereof, unless there is a clear, positive, unequivocal disclaimer and disavowal of the owner's title and an assertion by the occupant of a title in hostility thereto, notice thereof being brought home to the landowner. See McCutchen v. McCutchen, 77 S. C. 129, 57 S. E. 678, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1140, and cases cited.

The adverse possession must be "actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile;" Boaz v. Helster, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 21; Evans v. Templeton, 69 Tex. 375, 6 S. W. 843, 5 Am. St. Rep. 71; Haffindorfer v. Gault, 84 Ky. 124; Paldi v. Paldi, 95 Mich. 410, 54 N. W. 903; Chastang v. Chastang, 141 Ala. 451, 37 South. 799, 109 Am. St. Rep. 45; Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527; Jasper v. Scharnikow, 150 Fed. 571, 80 C. C. A. 373, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178. It is founded in trespass and disseisin, an ouster and continued exclusion of the true owner for the period prescribed by the statute; Olewine v. Messmore, 128 Pa. 470, 18 Atl. 495; Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. 230, 37 L. Ed. 1195. Nepean v. Doe, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 597; 16 Harv. L. Rev. 224. Even the sole possession by one tenant in common is not presumed adverse to a cotenant; the ordinary presumption is that such possession is held in the right of both tenants; Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Wallace, 45 Ohio St. 152, 12 N. E. 439; mere occupation and appropriation of rents; Todd v. Todd, 117 Ill. 92, 7 N. E. 583; Blackaby v. Blackaby, 185 Ill. 94, 56 N. E. 1053; or acquiescing in an adverse claim of a sub-tenant; Lee v. Livingston, 143 Mich. 203, 106 N. W. 713; will not affect the rights of the cotenants; and see Velott v. Lewis, 102 Pa. 326. There must be an actual ouster; Morris v. Davis, 75 Ga. 169; or exclusive possession after demand; or express notice of adverse possession; or acts of exclusive ownership of an unequivocal character; Rodney v. McLaughlin, 97 Mo. 426, 9 S. W. 726; Lindley v. Groff, 37 Minn. 338, 34 N. W. 26; Breden v. McLaurin, 98 N. C. 307, 4 S. E. 136; Killmer v. Wuchner, 74 Ia. 359, 37 N. W. 778. The receipt of the entire profits, the exclusive possession for twenty-one years, and a claim of right for that time, will constitute an ouster; Abrams v. Rhoner, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 507; Dobbins v. Dobbins, 141 N. C. 210, 53 S. E. 870, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, 115 Am. St. Rep. 682; or where a co-tenant asserts possession under a deed purporting to convey the whole title, he will be deemed to have ousted his co-tenant; Wright v. Kleyla, 104 Ind. 223, 4 N. E. 16; or where he devises by will read in the presence of his co-tenant; Miller v. Miller, 60 Pa. 16, 100 Am. Dec. 538. The registration of a deed purporting to vest title to the entire tract in the grantee is notice to the co-tenant of an adverse holding; McCann v. Welch, 106 Wis. 142, 81 N. W. 996. One claiming by adverse possession cannot avail himself of the previous possession of another person with whose title he is in no way connected; Stout v. Taul, 71 Tex. 438, 9 S. W. 329; Heflin v. Burns, 70 Tex. 347, 8 S. W. 48; Witt v. Ry. Co., 38 Minn. 122, 35 N. W. 862. If the combined periods of adverse possession of two successive holders equal twenty years, the true owner will be deprived of his title; but there must be a privity of estate such as a devise or conveyance; Sawyer v. Kendall, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 241; Frost v. Courtis, 172 Mass. 401, 52 N. E. 515. Where privity is required, a defective deed or even a mere oral transfer is sufficient; Weber v. Anderson, 73 Ill. 439; and see 13 Harv. L. Rev. 52. There can be no adverse possession against a state; Hurst v. Dulany, 84 Va. 701, 5 S. E. 802; but a state may acquire a title by adverse possession; Attorney General v. Ellis, 198 Mass. 91, 84 N. E. 430, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1120; Eldridge v. City of Binghamton, 120 N. Y. 309, 24 N. E. 462; Birdsall v. Cary, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 358; but see Whatley v. Patten, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 77, 31 S. W. 60. No length of adverse possession by user on the side of a highway by an abutting owner gives title to him; Parsons v. Village of Rye, 140 N. Y. Supp. 961.

When both parties claim under the same title; as, if a man seized of certain land in fee have issue two sons, and die seized, and one of the sons enter by abatement into the land, the statute of limitations will not operate against the other son; Co. Litt. s. 396.

There can be no adverse possession between husband and wife while the marital relation continues to exist; Bell v. Bell, 37 Ala. 536, 79 Am. Dec. 73; Veal v. Robinson, 70 Ga. 809; Hendricks v. Rasson, 53 Mich. 575, 19 N. W. 192.

As against the purchaser at an execution sale subject to dower, the possession of the widow is not adverse; Robinson v. Allison, 124 Ala. 325, 27 South. 461; see 14 Harv. L. Rev. 157.

When the possession of the one party is consistent with the title of the other; as, where the rents of a trust estate were received by a cestui que trust for more than twenty years without any interference of the trustee, it was held not to be adverse to the title of the trustee; 8 East 248. See Poston v. Balch, 69 Mo. 117. When trust property is taken possession of by a trustee, it is the possession of the cestui que trust and cannot be adverse until the trust is disavowed, to the knowledge of the cestui que trust; Reynolds v. Sumner, 126 Ill. 58, 18 N. E. 334, 1 L. R. A. 327, 9 Am. St. Rep. 523.

When the occupier has acknowledged the claimant's title; as, if a lease be granted for a term, and, after paying the rent for the land during such term, the tenant hold for twenty years without paying rent, his possession will not be adverse. See 1 B. & P. 542; 8 B. & C. 717.

The possession of the tenant becomes adverse where, to the knowledge of the landlord, the tenant disclaims the tenancy, and sets up a title adverse to the landlord; Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 43, 7 L. Ed. 596, where it was held that the rule that a tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title during the existence of his lease would not defeat the right of tenant to acquire title by adverse possession, after a repudiation of the tenancy brought home to the landlord. If a tenant disclaims the tenure, and claims in his own right, of which the landlord has notice, the tenancy is terminated and the tenant becomes a trespasser, though the period of the lease has not expired; Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 156, 10 L. Ed. 398; Fusselman v. Worthington, 14 Ill. 145; and the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of the tenant's disclaimer and the landlord's knowledge of it; Tillotson v. Doe, 5 Ala. 407, 39 Am. Dec. 330; Duke v. Harper, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 280, 27 Am. Dec. 462; Farrow's Heirs v. Edmundson, 4 B. Monr. (Ky.) 606, 41 Am. Dec. 250; and if continued will ripen into title; Sherman v. Transp. Co., 31 Vt. 162. There must be a disclaimer by the tenant and hostile possession to the landlord's knowledge, or such open and notorious possession as to raise a presumption of notice; Dothard v. Denson, 72 Ala. 541. See generally Townsend v. Boyd, 217 Pa. 386, 66 Atl. 1099, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1149. And see Jasperson v. Scharnikow, 150 Fed. 571, 80 C. C. A. 373, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; COLOR OF TITLE.

The title by adverse possession for such a period as is required by statute to bar an action, is a fee-simple title, and is as effective as any otherwise acquired; Cox v. Cox, 17 Wash. L. Rep. 53; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hasse, 197 U. S. 9, 25 Sup. Ct. 305, 49 L. Ed. 642.

When there has been a severance of the title to the surface and that to the minerals beneath it, adverse possession of the surface will not affect the title to the minerals; Moreland v. Frick Coke Co., 170 Pa. 33, 32 Atl. 634; Lulay v. Barnes, 172 Pa. 331, 34 Atl. 52.

It is not material that a break in the continuity of possession has been due to outside causes; Holliday v. Cromwell, 37 Tex. 437; but in such a case it was held that the running of the statute was suspended; Western v. Flanagan, 120 Mo. 61, 25 S. W. 531.

ADVERTISEMENT. Information or knowledge communicated to individuals or the public in a manner designed to attract general attention.

A notice published in handbills, placards, a newspaper, etc.; cited in Darst v. Doom, 38 Ill. App. 397.

The law in many instances requires parties to advertise in order to give notice of acts which are to be done; in these cases, the advertisement is in general equivalent to notice. But there are cases in which such notice is not sufficient, unless brought home to the actual knowledge of the party. Thus, notice of the dissolution of partnership by advertisement in a newspaper printed in the place where the business is carried on, although it is of itself notice to all persons who have had no previous dealings with the firm, yet is not notice to those who have had such previous dealings; it must be shown that persons of the latter class have received actual notice; Watkinson v. Bank, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 484, 34 Am. Dec. 521. - See Vernon v. Manhattan Co., 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 526; id., 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 183; Lind. Part. *222; Mauldin v. Bank, 2 Ala. 502; Hutchins v. Bank, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 418; 3 Bingh. 2. It has been held that the printed conditions of a line of public coaches are sufficiently made known to passengers by being posted up at the place where they book their names; Whitesell v. Crane, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 373; 3 Esp. 271. An advertisement by a railroad corporation in a newspaper in the English language of a limitation of its liability for baggage is not notice to a passenger who does not understand English; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Baldauf, 16 Pa. 68, 55 Am. Dec. 481.

An ordinary advertising sheet is not a newspaper for the purpose of advertisement as required by law, and when notice is required to be published in two newspapers, English papers are presumed to be intended; Tyler v. Bowen, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 225; the posting up of a page of a newspaper, containing a large number of separate advertisements, will not be considered a handbill; Clark v. Chambers, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 224.

When an advertisement contains the terms of sale, or description of the property to be sold, it will bind the seller.

Advertisements published bona fide for the apprehension of a person suspected of crime, or for the prevention of fraud, are privileged; Heard, Lib. & Sland. § 131.

A sign-board, at a person's place of business, giving notice of lottery-tickets being for sale there, is an "advertisement"; Com. v. Hooper, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 42.

See NOTICE; FLAG.

ADVICE. Information given by letter by one merchant or banker to another in regard to some business transaction which concerns him. Chit. Bills 185.

ADVISARI (Lat.). To advise; to consider; to be advised; to consult. See CUM ADVISARI VULT.

ADVISE. To give advice; to counsel.

Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33, 36 N. W. 310. It is different in meaning from instruct; People v. Horn, 70 Cal. 17, 11 Pac. 470; or persuade; Wilson v. State, 38 Ala. 411.

ADVISEDLY. With deliberation; intentionally. 15 Moore P. C. 147.

ADVISEMENT. Consideration; deliberation; consultation. "Upon deliberate advisement, we are of opinion," etc. In re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 662, 14 Sup. Ct. 221, 37 L. Ed. 1211.

ADVISORY. Suggestive, but not conclusive.

ADVISORY OPINION. See OPINION OF JUDGES.

ADVOCATE. An assistant; adviser; a pleader of causes.

Derived from advocare, to summon to one's assistance; advocatus originally signified an assistant or helper of any kind, even an accomplice in the commission of a crime; Cicero, Pro Cæcina, c. 8; Livy, lib. ii. 55; iii. 47; Tertullian, De Idolatr. cap. xxiii.; Petron. Satyr. cap. xv. Secondly, it was applied to one called in to assist a party in the conduct of a suit; Inst. i, 11, D. 50, 13. de extr. cogn. Hence, a pleader, which is its present signification.

In Scotch and Ecclesiastical Law. An officer of the court, learned in the law, who is engaged by a suitor to maintain or defend his cause. Advocates, like counsellors, have the exclusive privilege of addressing the court either orally or in written pleadings; and, in general, in regard to duties, liabilities, and privileges, the same rules apply mutatis mutandis to advocates as to counsellors. See COUNSELLOR.

In the English ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, advocates had the exclusive right of acting as counsel. They were incorporated (8 Geo. III.) under the title of "The College of Doctors of Law Exercent in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts." In 1857, on the creation of the new court of probate and matrimonial causes, this college was empowered to surrender its charter and sell its real estate.

In Scotland all barristers are called advocates.

Lord Advocate.—An officer in Scotland appointed by the crown, during pleasure, to take care of the king's interest before the courts of session, justiciary, and exchequer. All actions that concern the king's interest, civil or criminal, must be carried on with concurrence of the lord advocate. He also discharges the duties of public prosecutor, either in person or by one of his four deputies, who are called advocates-depute. Indictments for crimes must be in his name as accuser. He supervises the proceedings in important criminal cases, and has the right to appear in all such cases. He is, in fact, secretary of state for Scotland, and his principal duties are connected directly with the administration of the government.

Inferior courts have a procurator fiscal, who supplies before them the place of the lord advocate in criminal cases. See 2 Bankt. Inst. 492.

College or Faculty of Advocates.—A corporate body in Scotland, consisting of the members of the bar in Edinburgh. A large portion of its members are not active practitioners, however; 2 Bankt. Inst. 486.

Queen's Advocate.—A member of the College of Advocates, appointed by letters patent to advise the crown on questions of civil, canon, and ecclesiastical law. He takes precedence next after the solicitor general.

Church or Ecclesiastical Advocates.—Pleaders appointed by the church to maintain its rights.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A patron of a living; one who has the advowson, advocatio. Tech. Dict.; Ayliffe, Par. 53; Dane, Abr. c. 81, § 20; Erskine, Inst. 79, 9.

Those persons whom we now call patrons of churches, and who reserved to themselves and their heirs a license to present on any avoidance. The term originally belonged to the founders of churches and convents and their heirs, who were bound to protect their churches as well as to nominate or present to them. But when the patrons grew negligent of their duty or were not of ability or interest in the courts of justice, then the religious began to retain law advocates, to solicit and prosecute their causes. Spelm.; Jacob, Law Dict.

A person admitted by the Archbishop of Canterbury to practise in the court of arches in the same manner as barristers in the common law courts. Rap. & Law. Law Dict.

ADVOCATI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Patrons; pleaders; speakers.

Originally the management of suits at law was undertaken by the patronus for his cliens as a matter of duty arising out of their reciprocal relation. Afterwards it became a profession, and the relation, though a peculiarly confidential one while it lasted, was but temporary, ending with the suit. The profession was governed by very stringent rules: a limited number only were enrolled and allowed to practise in the higher courts—one hundred and fifty before the præfectus prætorio; Dig. 8, 11; Code 2, 7; fifty before the præf. aug. and dux Ægypticus at Alexandria; Dig. 8, 13; etc., etc. The enrolled advocates were called advocati ordinarii. Those not enrolled were called adv. supernumerarii or extraordinarii, and were allowed to practise in the inferior courts; Dig. 8, 13. From their ranks vacancies in the list of ordinarii were filled; Ibid. The ordinarii were either fiscales, who were appointed by the crown for the management of suits in which the imperial treasury was concerned, and who received a salary from the state; or privati whose business was confined to private causes. The advocati ordinarii were bound to lend their aid to every one applying to them, unless a just ground existed for a refusal; and they could be compelled to undertake the cause of a needy party; l. 7, c. 2, 6. The supernumerarii were not thus obliged, but, having once undertaken a cause, were bound to prosecute or defend it with diligence and fidelity.

The client must be defended against every person, even the emperor, though the advocati fiscales could not undertake a cause against the fiscus without a special permission; ll. 1 et 2, C. 2, 9; unless such cause was their own, or that of their parents, children, or ward; l. 10, pr. C. 11, D. 3, 1.

An advocate must have been at least seventeen years of age; l. 1, § 3, D. 3, 1; he must not be blind or deaf; l. 1, §§ 3 et 5, D. 3, 1; he must be of good repute, not convicted of an infamous act; l. 1, § 8, D. 3, 1; he could not be advocate and judge in the same cause; l. 6, pr. C. 2, 6; he could not even be a judge in a suit in which he had been engaged as advocate; l. 17, D. 2, 1; l. 14, C. 1, 51; nor after being appointed judge could he practise as advocate even in another court; l. 14, pr. C. 1, 51; nor could he be a witness in the cause in which he was acting as advocate; l. ult. D. 22, 5; 22 Glück, Pand. p. 161, et seq.

He was bound to bestow the utmost care and attention upon the cause, nihil studii reliquentes quod sibi possibile est; l. 14, § 1, C. 3, 1. He was liable to his client for damages caused in any way by his fault; 5 Glück, Pand. 110. If he had signed the conceptit, he was responsible that it contained no matter punishable or improper; Boehmer, Cons. et Decis. t. II. p. 1, resp. cviii. no. 5. He must clearly and correctly explain the law to his clients, and honestly warn them against transgression or neglect thereof. He must frankly inform them of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of their cause of action, and must be especially careful not to undertake a cause clearly unjust, or to let himself be used as an instrument of chicanery, malice, or other unlawful action; l. 6, §§ 3, 4, C. 2, 6; l. 13, § 9; l. 14, § 1, C. 3, 1. In pleading, he must abstain from invectives against the judge, the opposite party or his advocate; l. 6, § 1, C. 2, 6. Should it become necessary or advantageous to mention unpleasant truths, this must be done with the utmost forbearance, and in the most moderate language; 5 Glück, Pand. 111. Conscientious honesty forbade his betraying secrets confided to him by his client or making any improper use of them; he should observe inviolable secrecy in respect to them; ibid.; he could not, therefore, be compelled to testify in regard to such secrets; l. ult. D. 22, 5.

If he violated the above duties, he was liable, in addition to compensation for the damage thereby caused, to fine, or imprisonment, or suspension, or entire removal from practice, or to still severer punishment, particularly where he had been guilty of a prævaricatio, or betrayal of his trust for the benefit of the opposite party; 5 Glück, Pand. 111.

Compensation.—By the lex Cincia, A. U. C. 549, advocates were prohibited from receiving any reward for their services. In course of time this became obsolete. Claudius allowed it, and fixed ten thousand sesterces as the maximum fee. Trajan prohibited this fee, called honorarium, from being paid before the termination of the action. This, too, was disregarded, and prepayment had become lawful in the time of Justinian; 5 Glück, Pand. 117. The fee was regulated by law, unless the advocate had made a special agreement with his client, when the agreement fixed the amount. But a pactum de quota litis, i. e., an agreement to pay a contingent fee, was prohibited, under penalty of the advocate's forfeiting his privilege of practising; l. 5, C. 2, 6. A palmarium, or conditional fee in addition to the lawful charge and depending upon his gaining the cause, was also prohibited; 5 Glück, Pand. 120 et seq. But an agreement to pay a palmarium might be enforced when it was not entered into till after the conclusion of the suit; l. 1, § 12, D. 50, 13. The compensation of the advocate might also be in the way of an annual salary; 5 Glück, Pand. 122.

Remedy.—The advocate had the right to retain papers and instruments of his client until payment of his fee; l. 26, Dig. 3, 2. Should this fail, he could apply for redress to the court where the cause was tried by petition, a formal action being unnecessary; 5 Glück, Pand. 122.

Anciently, any one who lent his aid to a friend, and who was supposed to be able in any way to influence a judge, was called advocatus.

Causidicus denoted a speaker, or pleader merely; advocatus resembled more nearly a counsellor; or, still more exactly, causidicus might be rendered barrister, and advocatus attorney, or solicitor, though the duties of an advocatus were much more extended than those of a modern attorney; Du Cange; Calvinus, Lex.

A witness.

ADVOCATI ECCLESIAE. Advocates of the church.

These were of two sorts: those retained as pleaders to argue the cases of the church and attend to its law-matters; and advocates, or patrons of the advowson. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

ADVOCATI FISCAL. In Civil Law. Those chosen by the emperor to argue his cause whenever a question arose affecting his revenues. 3 Bla. Com. 27.

ADVOCATIA. In Civil Law. The functions, duty, or privilege of an advocate. Du Cange, Advocatia.

ADVOCATUS. A pleader; a narrator. Bracton, 412 a, 372 b.

ADVOWSON. A right of presentation to a church or benefice.

He who possesses this right is called the patron or advocate. When there is no patron, or he neglects to exercise his right within six months, it is called a lapse, and a title is given to the ordinary to collate to a church: when a presentation is made by one who has no right, it is called a usurpation.

Advowsons are of different kinds; as advowson appendant, when it depends upon a manor, etc.; advowson in gross, when it belongs to a person and not to a manor; advowson presentative, where the patron presents to the bishop; advowson donative, where the king or patron puts the clerk into possession without presentation; advowson collative, where the bishop himself is a patron; advowson of the moiety of the church, where there are two several patrons and two incumbents in the same church; a moiety of advowson, where two must join the presentation of one incumbent; advowson of religious houses, that which is vested in the person who founded such a house. 2 Bla. Com. 21; Mirehouse, Advowsons; Comyns, Dig. Advowson, Quare Impedit; Bacon, Abr. Simony; Burns, Eccl. Law. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 135.

An advowson in modern times and in ordinary language has, no doubt, been used to mean the perpetual right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice. An advowson in the limited sense of the word may be separated from the manor to which it is attached and perpetual right of presentation to a church may be severed from the lordship of the manor. Where an almshouse has been established by a lord of the manor, which afterwards became vested in the Crown by attainder, the charity also vested in the Crown by attainder and the right of nominating a master was analogous to an advowson separable from the manor and capable of being passed by grant from the Crown subsequent to the attainder; 22 L. J. Ch. 846.

ADVOWTRY, ADVOUTRY. The crime committed by a woman who, having committed adultery, continued to live with the adulterer. Cowell.

ÆDES. In Civil Law. A dwelling; a house; a temple. In the country everything upon the surface of the soil passed under the term ædes. Du Cange.

ÆDILE. In Roman Law. An officer who attended to the repairs of the temples and other public buildings; the repairs and cleanliness of the streets; the care of the weights and measures; the providing for funerals and games; and to regulating the prices of provisions. Ainsworth, Lex.; Smith, Lex.; Du Cange.

ÆDILITIUM EDICTUM. In Roman Law. That provision by which the buyer of a diseased or imperfect slave, horse, or other animal was relieved at the expense of the vendor who had sold him as sound knowing him to be imperfect. Calvinus, Lex.

ÆEL (Norman). A grandfather. Spelled also aieul, aile. Kelham.

ÆQUITAS. In Roman Law. Referring to the use of this term, Prof. Gray says (Nature and Sources of the Law 290): "Austin and Maine take æquitas as having an analogous meaning to equity; they apply the term to those rules which the prætors introduced through the Edict in modification of the jus civile, but it seems to be an error to suppose that æquitas had this sense in the Roman Law." He quotes Prof. Clark (Jurisprudence 367) as doubting "whether æquitas is ever clearly used by the Roman jurists to indicate simply a department of Law" and expresses the opinion that an examination of the authorities more than justifies his doubt. Æquitas is opposed to strictum jus and varies in meaning between reasonable modification of the letter and substantial justice. It is to be taken as a frame of mind in dealing with legal questions and not as a source of law.

See ÆQUUM ET BONUM.

ÆQUUM ET BONUM. "The Roman conception involved in 'æquum et bonum' or 'æquitas' is identical with what we mean by 'reasonable' or nearly so. On the whole, the natural justice or 'reason of the thing' which the common law recognizes and applies does not appear to differ from the 'law of nature' which the Romans identified with jus gentium, and the medieval doctors of the civil and common law boldly adopted as being divine law revealed through man's natural reason." Sir F. Pollock, Expans. of C. L. 111, citing [1902] 2 Ch. 661, where jus naturale and æquum et bonum were taken to have the same meaning.

ÆRIAL NAVIGATION. See AVIATION.

ÆS ALIENUM. In Civil Law. A debt. Literally translated, the money of another; the civil law considering borrowed money as the property of another, as distinguished from as suum, one's own.

ÆSNECIUS. See ANECIUS.

ÆSTIMATIO CAPITIS (Lat. the value of a head). The price to be paid for taking the life of a human being.

King Athelstan declared, in an assembly held at Exeter, that mulcts were to be paid per æstimationem capitis. For a king's head (or life), 30,000 thuringæ; for an archbishop's or prince's, 15,000; for a priest's or thane's, 2,000; Leg. Hen. I.

ÆTAS INFANTILI PROXIMA (Lat.). The age next to infancy. Often written ætās infantīæ proxima. This lasted until the age of twelve years; 4 Bla. Com. 22. See AGE.

ÆTAS PUBERTATI PROXIMA (Lat.). The age next to puberty. This lasted until the age of fourteen, in which there might or might not be criminal responsibility according to natural capacity or incapacity. Under twelve, an offender could not be guilty in will, neither after fourteen could he be supposed innocent, of any capital crime which he in fact committed. 4 Bla. Com. ch. ii. See AGE.

AFFAIR (Fr.). A law suit.

AFFECT. To lay hold of, to act upon, impress or influence. It is often used in the sense of acting injuriously upon persons and things. Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 84, 23 L. Ed. 807; Baird v. Hospital Ass'n, 116 Mo. 419, 22 S. W. 726.

AFFECTION. The making over, pawning, or mortgaging a thing to assure the payment of a sum of money, or the discharge of some other duty or service. Crabb, Techn. Dict.

As to affection as a consideration, see CONSIDERATION.

AFFECTUS (Lat.). Movement of the mind; disposition; intention. See CHALLENGE.

AFFEER. To fix in amount; to liquidate; to settle.

To affeer an amercement. To establish the amount which one amerced in a court-leet should pay. See AMERCEMENT.

To affeer an account. To confirm it on oath in the exchequer. Cowell; Blount.

AFFEERORS. Those appointed by a court-leet to mulct those punishable, not by a fixed fine, but by an arbitrary sum called amercement, q. v.; 4 Bla. Com. 379.

AFFIANCE. To assure by pledge. A plighting of troth between man and woman. Littleton, § 39.

An agreement by which a man and woman promise each other that they will marry together. Pothier, Traité du Mar. n. 24. Co. Litt. 34 a. See Dig. 23, l. 1; Code, 5. l. 4.

AFFIANT. A deponent; one who makes an affidavit.

AFFIDARE (Lat. ad fidem dare). To pledge one's faith or do fealty by making oath. Cowell.

Used of the mutual relation arising between landlord and tenant; 1 Washb. R. P. 19; 1 Bla. Com. 367; Termes de la Ley, Fealty. Affidavit is of kindred meaning.

AFFIDATUS. One who is not a vassal, but who for the sake of protection has connected himself with one more powerful. Spelman, Gloss.; Jacob, L. Dict.

AFFIDAVIT. A statement or declaration reduced to writing, and sworn to or affirmed before some officer who has authority to administer an oath or affirmation. Quoted and approved in Shelton v. Berry, 19 Tex. 154, 70 Am. Dec. 326.

It differs from a deposition in this, that in the latter the opposite party has an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, whereas an affidavit is always taken ex parte; Gresley, Eq. Ev. 413; Stimpson v. Brooks, 3 Blatch. 456, Fed. Cas. No. 13,454.

An affidavit includes the oath, and may show what facts the affiant swore to, and thus be available as an oath, although unavailable as an affidavit; Burns v. Doyle, 28 Wis. 460.

By general practice, affidavits are allowable to present evidence upon the hearing of a motion, although the motion may involve the very merits of the action; but they are not allowable to present evidence on the trial of an issue raised by the pleadings. Here the witnesses must be produced before the adverse party. They are generally required on all motions to open defaults or to grant delay in the proceedings and in other applications by the parties addressed to the favor of the court.

Formal parts.—An affidavit must intelligibly refer to the cause in which it is made. The strict rule of the common law is that it must contain the exact title of the cause. This, however, is not absolutely essential; Harris v. Lester, 80 Ill. 307. If not entitled in the cause it cannot be considered in opposition to a motion for preliminary injunction; Goldstein v. Whelan, 62 Fed. 124.

The place where the affidavit is taken must be stated, to show that it was taken within the officer's jurisdiction; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 601; if the officer in signing the jurat fails to add the name of the county for which he is appointed, if it already appears in the caption, it will not be defective; Smith v. Runnells, 94 Mich. 617, 54 N. W. 375. The deponent must sign the affidavit at the end; Hathaway v. Scott, 11 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 173. The jurat must be signed by the officer with the addition of his official title. In the case of some officers the statutes conferring authority to take affidavits require also his seal to be affixed.

In the absence of a rule of court or statute requiring it, if affiant's name appears in an affidavit as the person who took the oath, the subscription to it by affiant is not necessary; Norton v. Hauge, 47 Minn. 405, 50

N. W. 368; Shelton v. Berry, 19 Tex. 154, 70 Am. Dec. 326, or if his name is omitted in the body of the verification but it is properly signed, it is sufficient; Cunningham v. Doyle, 5 Misc. Rep. 219, 25 N. Y. Supp. 476. If the notary fails to attach his seal to an affidavit of an assignee in insolvency, it is not void; Clement v. Bulleus, 159 Mass. 193, 34 N. E. 173; if he omits to add his name in the jurat in an affidavit for a writ of certiorari, the court may permit it to be done nunc pro tunc; State v. Cordes, 87 Wis. 373, 58 N. W. 771; if he omits to add his title it is not invalid; Jackman v. Gloucester, 143 Mass. 380, 9 N. E. 740.

In an affidavit which is to be the basis of judicial action the nature and quality and perhaps the source of information must be set forth, so that the court may be able to ascertain whether the party is right in entertaining the belief to which he deposes; Whitlock v. Roth, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 78.

A "denial upon information and belief, without stating the sources of information and belief, can have no weight as against the appellant's positive affidavit as to what is still due him"; Harris v. Taylor, 35 App. Div. 462, 54 N. Y. Supp. 864. So-called evidence on information and belief "ought not to be looked at at all, not only unless the court can ascertain the sources of the information and belief, but also unless the deponent's statements are corroborated by someone who speaks from his own knowledge"; [1900] 2 Ch. 753. Such an affidavit should show that the persons from whom the information is obtained are absent or that their deposition cannot be obtained; Steuben County Bank v. Alberger, 78 N. Y. 252.

In general, an affidavit must describe the deponent sufficiently to show that he is entitled to offer it; for example, that he is a party, or agent or attorney of a party, to the proceeding; Ex parte Bank of Monroe, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 177, 42 Am. Dec. 61; Cunningham v. Goelet, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 71; Ex parte Shumway, id. 258, and this matter must be stated, not by way of recital or as mere description, but as an allegation in the affidavit; Staples v. Fairchild, 3 N. Y. 41; Payne v. Young, 8 N. Y. 158.

See JUBAT.

AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENCE. A sworn statement made in proper form that the defendant has a good ground of defence to the action upon the merits.

The statements required in such an affidavit vary considerably in the different states where they are required. In some, it must state a ground of defence; McCarney v. McCamp, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 4; in others, a simple statement of belief that a defence exists is sufficient. Called also an affidavit of merits, as in Massachusetts. See as to its salutary effect, Lord v. Bank, 20 Pa. 387, 59 Am. Dec. 728; Taggart v. Fox, 1 Grant (Pa.) 190.

It must be made by the defendant, or some person in his behalf who possesses a knowledge of the facts; McCarney v. McCamp, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 4. In a suit against a corporation an affidavit of defence made by a mere stockholder should set out some reason why it is not made by an officer or director; Erie Boot & Shoe Co. v. Eichenlaub, 127 Pa. 164, 17 Atl. 889.

The effect of a failure to make such affidavit is, in a case requiring one, to default the defendant; Slocum v. Slocum, 8 Watts (Pa.) 367. It was first established in Philadelphia by agreement of members of the bar; Vanatta v. Anderson, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 417; and afterwards by act of assembly. A law permitting judgment in default of such an affidavit is constitutional; Lawrance v. Borm, 86 Pa. 225.

It is no part of the pleadings; it is merely to prevent a summary judgment; the case may be put at issue on other grounds than those stated therein; Muir v. Ins. Co., 203 Pa. 338, 53 Atl. 158.

AFFIDAVIT TO HOLD TO BAIL. An affidavit which is required in many cases before a person can be arrested.

Such an affidavit must contain a statement, clearly and certainly expressed, by some one acquainted with the fact, of an indebtedness from the defendant to the plaintiff, and must show a distinct cause of action; 1 Chit. Pl. 165. See BAIL.

AFFILARE. To put on record; to file. 8 Coke 319; 2 M. & S. 202.

AFFILIATION. The act of imputing or determining the paternity of a child.

A species of adoption which exists by custom in some parts of France. The person affiliated succeeded equally with other heirs to the property acquired by the deceased to whom he had been affiliated, but not to that which he inherited.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A condition which prevented the superior from removing the person affiliated to another convent. Guyot, Répert.

AFFINES. In Civil Law. Connections by marriage, whether of the persons or their relatives. Calvinus, Lex.

From this word we have affinity, denoting relationship by marriage; 1 Bla. Com. 434.

The singular, affinis, is used in a variety of related significations—a boundary; Du Cange; a partaker or sharer, affinis culpæ (an alder or one who has knowledge of a crime); Calvinus, Lex.

AFFINITAS. In Civil Law. Affinity.

AFFINITAS AFFINITATIS. That connection between parties arising from marriage which is neither consanguinity nor affinity.

This term signifies the connection between the kinsmen of the two persons married, as, for example, the husband's brother and the wife's sister; Erskine, Inst. 1. 6. 8.

AFFINITY. The connection existing, in consequence of marriage, between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other. Solinger v. Earle, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 84.

It is distinguished from consanguinity, which denotes relationship by blood. Affinity is the tie which exists between one of the spouses with the kindred of the other: thus, the relations of my wife, her brothers, her sisters, her uncles, are allied to me by affinity, and my brothers, sisters, etc., are allied in the same way to my wife. But my brother and the sister of my wife are not allied by the ties of affinity.

A person cannot, by legal succession, receive an inheritance from a relation by affinity; neither does it extend to the nearest relations of husband and wife, so as to create a mutual relation between them. The degrees of affinity are computed in the same way as those of consanguinity. See 1 Bla. Com. 435; Pothier, Traité du Mar. pt. 3, c. 3, art. 2; Inst. 1, 10, 6; Dig. 38, 10, 4, 3; 1 Phill. Eccl. 210; Poydras v. Livingston, 5 Mart. O. S. (La.) 296.

AFFIRM (Lat. affirmare, to make firm; to establish).

To ratify or confirm a former law or judgment. Cowell.

Especially used of confirmations of the judgments of an inferior by an appellate tribunal.

To ratify or confirm a voidable act of the party.

To make a solemn religious asseveration in the nature of an oath. See AFFIRMATION.

AFFIRMANCE. The confirmation of a voidable act by the party acting, who is to be bound thereby.

The term is in accuracy to be distinguished from ratification, which is a recognition of the validity or binding force as against the party ratifying, of some act performed by another person; and from confirmation, which would seem to apply more properly to cases where a doubtful authority has been exercised by another in behalf of the person ratifying; but these distinctions are not generally observed with much care; 1 Pars. Contr. 243.

Express affirmance takes place where the party declares his determination of fulfilling the contract; Martin v. Byrom, Dudl. (Ga.) 203.

A mere acknowledgment that the debt existed, or that the contract was made, is not an affirmance; Robbins v. Eaton, 10 N. H. 561; 2 Esp. 628; Chambers v. Wherry, 1 Ball. (S. C.) 28; Benham v. Bishop, 9 Conn. 330, 23 Am. Dec. 358; Alexander v. Hutcheson, 9 N. C. 535; Ford v. Phillips, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 203; Martin v. Byrom, Dudl. (Ga.) 203; it must be a direct and express confirmation, and substantially (though it need not be in form) a promise to pay the debt or fulfill the contract; Goodsell v. Myers, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 473; Rogers v. Hurd, 4 Day (Conn.) 57, 4 Am. Dec. 182; Wilcox v. Roath, 12 Conn. 550; Hale v. Gerrish, 8 N. H. 374; Bigelow v. Grannis, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 120; Millard v. Hewlett, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 301.

Implied affirmance arises from the acts of the party without any express declaration; Boston Bank v. Chamberlin, 15 Mass. 220. See Aldrich v. Grimes, 10 N. H. 194; Curtin v. Patton, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 305; 1 Bla. Com. 466, n. 10. See CONFIRMATION; RATIFICATION.

The confirmation by an appellate court of the judgment of a lower court.

AFFIRMANCE-DAY-GENERAL. In the English Court of Exchequer, is a day appointed by the judges of the common pleas and barons of the exchequer, to be held a few days after the beginning of every term for the general affirmance or reversal of judgments. 2 Tidd, Pract. 1091.

AFFIRMANT. One who makes affirmation instead of making oath that the evidence which he is about to give shall be the truth, as if he had been sworn.

He is liable to all the pains and penalty of perjury, if he shall be guilty of willfully and maliciously violating his affirmation. See PERJURY.

AFFIRMATION. A solemn religious asseveration in the nature of an oath. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 371.

Quakers, as a class, and other persons who have conscientious scruples against taking an oath, are allowed to make affirmation in any mode which they may declare to be binding upon their consciences, in confirmation of the truth of testimony which they are about to give; 1 Atk. 21, 46; Cowp. 340, 389; 1 Leach Cr. Cas. 64; 1 Ry. & M. 77; Vail v. Nickerson, 6 Mass. 262; Com. v. Buzzell, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 153; Buller, N. P. 292; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 371. See oaths and affirmations in Great Britain and Ireland, etc., reviewed in 25 Law J. 169; OATH.

AFFIRMATIVE. That which establishes; that which asserts a thing to be true.

It is a general rule of evidence that the affirmative of the issue must be proved; Buller, N. P. 298; Peake, Ev. 2. But when the law requires a person to do an act, and the neglect of it will render him guilty and punishable, the negative must be proved, because every man is presumed to do his duty, and in that case they who affirm he did not must prove it; 1 Rolle 83; 3 Bos. & P. 307. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

AFFIRMATIVE PREGNANT. An affirmative allegation implying some negative in favor of the adverse party.

For example, if to an action of assumpsit, which is barred by the statute of limitations in six years, the defendant pleads that he did not undertake, etc., within ten years, a replication that he did undertake, etc., within ten years would be an affirmative pregnant; since it would impliedly admit that the defendant had not promised within six years. Such a plea should be demurred to; Gould, Pl. c. 6, §§ 29, 37; Steph. Pl. 381; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (n. 6).

AFFIX. To attach or annex. See FIXTURES.

AFFORCE THE ASSIZE. To compel unanimity among the jurors who disagree.

It was done either by confining them without meat and drink, or, more anciently, by adding other jurors to the panel, to a limited extent, securing the concurrence of twelve in a verdict. See Bracton, 185 b, 292 a; Fleta, book 4, c. 9, § 2.

The practice is now discontinued.

AFFORESTATION. The turning of a part of a country into forest or woodland or subjecting it to forest law. q. v.

AFFRANCHISE. To make free.

AFFRAY. The fighting of two or more persons in a public place to the terror of the people.

Mere words cannot amount to an affray. Any person is justified in using force to part the combatants; 1 Cr. M. & R. 757.

It differs from a riot in not being premeditated; for if any persons meet together upon any lawful or innocent occasion, and happen on a sudden to engage in fighting, they are not guilty of a riot, but an affray only; and in that case none are guilty except those actually engaged in it; 4 Bla. Com. 146; 1 Russell, Cr. 271; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 1150.

Fighting in a private place is only an assault; 1 C. M. & R. 757; 1 Cox, Cr. Cas. 177; it must be in a public place; Gamble v. State, 113 Ga. 701, 39 S. E. 301; and the indictment need not describe it; State v. Baker, 83 N. C. 649; State v. Heflin, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 84; State v. Sumner, 5 Ströb. (S. C.) 53; and that fact must be avowed; State v. Woody, 47 N. C. 335. But it will be an affray if commenced in a private place and continued in a public one or if the disturbance is so continuous as not to be distinguishable; State v. Billings, 72 Mo. 662; or if continued in public after pursuit; Wilson v. Staté, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 278.

Going about armed with unusual or deadly weapons is an affray, though there is no actual violence or fighting; Hawk. P. C. b. 1, c. 28, § 1; State v. Huntly, 25 N. C. 418, 40 Am. Dec. 416; and the statute of Northampton, 2 Edw. III. c. 3, 4 Bla. Com. 149, forbidding it was declaratory of the common law; State v. Huntly, 25 N. C. 418, 40 Am. Dec. 416. For constituting this offense a gun is an unusual weapon; id. See RIOT.

The fighting of two persons in the presence of seven others was held an affray, the presence of the seven constituting the place a public one; State v. Fritz, 133 N. C. 725, 45 S. E. 957.

AFFREIGHTMENT. Affreightment.

The word fret means tons, according to Cowell. Affreightment was sometimes used. Du Cange.

AFFREIGHTMENT. The contract by which a vessel, or the use of it, is let out to hire. See FREIGHT; GENERAL SHIP.

AFORESAID. Before mentioned; already spoken of or described.

Whenever in any instrument a person has once been described, all subsequent references therein may be made by giving his name merely and adding the term "aforesaid" for the purpose of identification. The same rule holds good also as to the mention of places or specific things described, and generally as to any description once given which it is desirable to refer to. So also as to a place in an indictment; 1 Gabbett, Cr. Law 212; 5 Term 616. See IDENTITY.

Bouv.—11

AFORETHOUGHT. Premeditated; pre-pense.

The length of time during which the accused has entertained the thought of committing the offence is not very material, provided he has in fact entertained such thought; he is thereby rendered criminal in a greater degree than if he had committed the offence without premeditation. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT; PREMEDITATION; 2 Chit. Cr. Law, 785; 4 Bla. Com. 199; Fost. Cr. Cas. 132, 291; Respublica v. Mulatto Bob, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 146, 1 L. Ed. 776; Edwards v. State, 25 Ark. 446; U. S. v. Cornell, 2 Mas. 91, Fed. Cas. No. 14,868.

AFTER. Behind, following, subsequent to an event or date.

There is no invariable sense, however, to be attached to the word, but like "from," "succeeding," "subsequent," and similar words, where it is not expressly declared to be exclusive or inclusive, it is susceptible of different significations and is used in different senses, as will in the particular case effectuate the intention of the parties. Its true meaning must be collected from its context and the subject-matter; Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 27.

AFTER ACQUIRED PROPERTY. See FUTURE ACQUIRED.

AFTER BORN CHILD. See EN VENTRE SA MERE; POSTHUMOUS CHILD.

AFTERMATH. The second crop of grass.

A right to have the last crop of grass or pasturage. 1 Chit. Prac. 181.

AFTERNOON. The word has two senses. It may mean the whole time from noon to midnight, or it may mean the earlier part of that time, as distinguished from the evening; 2 El. & Bl. 447, where an act forbidding innkeepers to have their houses open on Sunday during the usual hours of afternoon Divine Service was taken in the latter sense. See DAY; TIME.

AGAINST. Adverse or in opposition to. The meaning of the word varies according to the context; State v. Prather, 54 Ind. 63.

To marry "against one's consent" means without the consent; 2 Sim. & Stu. 179; 2 Vern. 572.

A verdict in disobedience of the instructions of the court upon a point of law is a verdict "against the law"; Declez v. Save, 71 Cal. 552, 12 Pac. 722; Buntin v. Ins. Co., 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 254.

A statute providing that in an action by an administrator "neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other," or as to transactions with the deceased, does not preclude either party from being called to testify for the other; Dudley v. Steele, 71 Ala. 423.

AGAINST THE FORM OF THE STATUTE. Technical words which must be used in framing an indictment for a breach of the statute prohibiting the act complained of. The Latin phrase is contra formam statuti, q. v.

AGAINST THE PEACE. See PEACE.

AGAINST THE WILL. Technical words which must be used in framing an indictment for robbery from the person. 1 Chit. Cr. Law 244.

In the statute of 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2d) c. 34, the offence of rape is described to be ravishing a woman "where she did not consent," and not ravishing against her will. Per Tindal, C. J., and Parke, B., in the addenda to 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 1. And in England this statute definition was adopted by all the judges; Bell, Cr. Cas. 63, 71.

AGARD. Award. Burrill, Dict.

AGE. The length of time a person has lived. Full age or majority is the age at which the law allows persons to do acts or discharge functions which for want of years they were prohibited from doing or undertaking before.

As to the age of consent in prosecution for rape, see RAPE, as to the age of responsibility see INFANT, and see also PARENT AND CHILD.

In the United States, at twenty-five, a man may be elected a representative in congress; at thirty, a senator; and at thirty-five, he may be chosen president. He is liable to serve in the militia from eighteen to forty-five inclusive, unless exempted for some particular reason. In England no one can be chosen member of parliament till he has attained twenty-one years; nor be ordained a priest under the age of twenty-four; nor made a bishop till he has completed his thirtieth year. The age of serving in the militia is from sixteen to forty-five years. The law, according to Blackstone, recognizes no minority in the heir to the throne. See 1 Bla. Com. 224, note, and 2 id. 208, note, where this appears to result from the charter under which the king's oldest son becomes Duke of Cornwall by inheritance.

In French Law. A person must have attained the age of forty to be a member of the legislative body; twenty-five, to be a judge of a tribunal de première instance; twenty-seven, to be its president, or to be judge or clerk of a cour royale; thirty, to be its president or procureur-général; twenty-five, to be a justice of the peace; thirty, to be judge of a tribunal of commerce, and thirty-five, to be its president; twenty-five, to be a notary public; twenty-one, to be a testamentary witness; thirty, to be a juror. At sixteen, a minor may devise one-half of his property as if he were a major. A male cannot contract marriage till after the eighteenth year, nor a female before full fifteen years. At twenty-one, both males and females are capable to perform all the acts of civil life; Touillier, Droit Civ. liv. 1, Intr. n. 188.

In Roman Law. Infancy (infantia) extended to the age of seven; the period of childhood (pueritia) which extended from seven to fourteen, was divided into two periods; the first, extending from seven to ten and a half, was called the period nearest childhood (ætas infantie proxima); the other, from ten and a half to fourteen, the period nearest puberty (ætas pubertati proxima); puberty (pubertas) extended from fourteen to eighteen; full puberty extended from eighteen to twenty-five; at twenty-five, the person was major. See Taylor, Civ. Law 254; Leçon Él. du Droit Civ. 22.

A witness may prove his own age; Cheever v. Congdon, 34 Mich. 296; State v. McClain, 49 Kan. 730, 31 Pac. 790; Morrel v. Morgan, 65 Cal. 575, 4 Pac. 580; State v. Best, 108 N. C. 747, 12 S. E. 907; Hill v. Eldridge, 126 Mass. 234; without giving his sources of information except on cross-examination; Central R. R. v. Coggin, 73 Ga. 689; even if the parent from whom it is admitted that the knowledge was derived is present; Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526; or is living in the county where suit is brought; Pearce v. Kyzer, 84 Tenn. (16 Lea) 521, 57 Am. Rep. 240; but when the statement was made to a teacher for entry on school registry, that record is not admissible; Simpson v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 551, 81 S. W. 320. The date of one's birth may be proved by himself or members of his family; Houlton v. Manteuffel, 51 Minn. 185, 53 N. W. 541; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Lewandowski, 190 Ill. 301, 60 N. E. 497; but not when the knowledge is acquired from another person, the witness being an orphan; People v. Colbath, 141 Mich. 189, 104 N. W. 633. One's own statement of his age has been said to be the best evidence; Morrison v. Emsley, 53 Mich. 564, 19 N. W. 187.

In a trial for rape of a female under sixteen years, her testimony as to her age was held competent; Com. v. Phillips, 162 Mass. 504, 39 N. E. 109; but a conviction for seduction under the age of eighteen could not be maintained when the oral evidence of the girl was contradicted by the church record of her birth on which she had stated her evidence was based; State v. Cougot, 121 Mo. 458, 26 S. W. 566.

A statement in a will that testator's daughter was born on a certain day is admissible; 3 Yo. & Coll. Ex. 82; and in 2 R. & Myl. 169, a person's age was proved by the declarations of a deceased relative.

The federal census returns have been held admissible on the question of age; Priddy v. Bolce, 201 Mo. 309, 99 S. W. 1055, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 718, 119 Am. St. Rep. 762, 9 Ann. Cas. 874; contra, Campbell v. Everhart, 139 N. C. 503, 52 S. E. 201; see Wigm. Ev. 1671; and the testimony of an enumerator after refreshing his memory by examination of his book and then stating particulars from recollection has been admitted; Battles v. Tallman, 96 Ala. 403, 11 South. 247; but a school census is inadmissible to prove age for any other than school purposes; Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 312, 70 S. W. 852, 75 S. W. 257.

There is no presumption of law that at any age a woman is past the age of child bearing, but courts have recognized a presumption of fact as to a married woman of 49 $\frac{3}{4}$  years who had never borne a child; L. R. 14 Eq. 245; widow of 55 $\frac{1}{4}$ ; L. R. 11 Eq. 408; a spinster of 53; 35 L. J. Ch. 303; and the presumption was refused in the case of a woman of 54 $\frac{1}{2}$ , married three years, who had never had a child; 9 Ch. D. 388. But in List v. Rodney, 83 Pa. 483, it was held that (quoting 2 Bla. Com. 125) "a possibility of issue is always supposed to exist in law . . . even though the donees be each of them one hundred years old," and that the law would not consider the physical impossibility of a woman's bearing children after she was seventy-five years old.

AGE-PRAYER. A statement made in a real action to which an infant is a party, of the fact of infancy and a request that the proceedings may be stayed until the infant becomes of age.

It is now abolished; stat. 11 Geo. IV.; 1 Will. IV. c. 37, § 10; 1 Lilly, Reg. 54; 3 Bla. Com. 300.

AGENCY. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

AGENS (Lat. agere, to do; to conduct).

A conductor or manager of affairs.

It is distinguished from factor, a workman.

A plaintiff. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 15, § 8.

AGENT. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

AGENT AND PATIENT. A phrase indicating the state of a person who is required to do a thing, and is at the same time the person to whom it is done; as, when a man is indebted to another, and he appoints him his executor, the latter is required to pay the debt in his capacity of executor, and entitled to receive it in his own right; he is then agent and patient. Termes de la Ley.

AGER (Lat.). In Civil Law. A field; land generally.

A portion of land enclosed by definite boundaries.

Used like the word acre in the old English law, denoting a measure of undetermined and variable value. Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange; 3 Kent 441.

AGGRAVATION. That which increases the enormity of a crime or the injury of a wrong.

One of the rules respecting variances is, that cumulative allegations, or such as merely operate in aggravation, are immaterial, provided that sufficient is proved to establish some right, offence, or justification included in the claim, charge, or defence specified on the record. This rule runs through the whole criminal law: that it is invariably enough to prove so much of the indictment as shows that the defendant has committed a substantive crime therein specified; 2 Campb. 583; 4 B. & C. 329; Com. v. Livermore, 4 Gray (Mass.) 18; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 600. Thus, on an indictment for murder the prisoner may be convicted of manslaughter, for the averment of malice aforethought is merely matter of aggravation; Co. Litt. 282 a.

The introduction of matter into the declaration which tends to increase the amount of damages, but does not affect the right of action itself. Steph. Pl. 257; Gould, Pl. 42; 12 Mod. 597.

An example of this is found in the case where a plaintiff declares in trespass for entering his house, and breaking his close, and tossing his goods about; the entry of the house is the principal ground and foundation of the action, and the rest is only stated by way of aggravation; 3 Wills. 294; Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 107; and this matter need not be proved by the plaintiff or answered by the defendant.

See ALIA ENORMIA.

AGGREGATE. Consisting of particular persons or items, formed into one body. A combined whole.

See CORPORATION.

AGGREGATIO MENTUM (Lat.). A meeting of minds. See AGREEMENT.

AGGRIEVED. Having a grievance, or suffered loss or injury.

The "parties aggrieved" are those against whom an appealable order or judgment has been entered; Ely v. Frisbie, 17 Cal. 260. One cannot be said to be aggrieved unless error has been committed against him; Kinealy v. Macklin, 67 Mo. 95; Wiggin v. Swett, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 197, 39 Am. Dec. 716; Swackhamer v. Klue's Adm'r, 25 N. J. Eq. 503; 4 Q. B. Div. 90.

AGIO. An Italian word for accommodation. A term used in commercial transactions to denote the difference of price between the value of bank-notes or other nominal money and the coin of the country.

AGISTMENT. The taking of another person's cattle into one's own ground to be fed, for a consideration to be paid by the owner. Williams v. Miller, 68 Cal. 290, 9 Pac. 166.

Tithe of Agistment was a small tithe paid to the rector or vicar on cattle or other produce of grass lands. It was paid by the occupier of the land and not by the person who put in his cattle to graze. Rawle, Exmoor 31.

In Canon Law. A composition or mean rate at which some right or due might be reckoned.

AGISTOR. An officer who had the charge of cattle pastured for a certain stipulated sum in the king's forest and who collected the money paid for them. One who takes in horses or other animals to pasture at certain rates. Story, Bailm. § 443; Skinner v. Caughey, 64 Minn. 375, 67 N. W. 203.

He is not, like an innkeeper, bound to take all horses offered to him, nor is he liable for any injury done to such animals in his care, unless he has been guilty of negligence, or from his ignorance, negligence may be inferred; Holt 547. See Schroeder v. Faires, 49 Mo. App. 470; Brush v. Land Co., 2 Tex. Civ. App. 188, 21 S. W. 389.

In the absence of an express contract as to the degree of care to be taken, he is bound to provide reasonable feed and use ordinary care to protect cattle; Calland v. Nichols, 30 Neb. 532, 46 N. W. 631.

Where a number of animals are taken to pasture for an agreed compensation, one of them cannot be taken away without payment for all; Yearsley v. Gray, 140 Pa. 238, 21 Atl. 517; Kroll v. Ernst, 34 Neb. 482, 51 N. W. 1032. The lien of an agistor is prior to the claim of an assignee of overdue notes secured by mortgage on the horses; Blain v. Manning, 36 Ill. App. 214. That he has no lien, see Prof. J. B. Ames in 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 290, citing 5 M. & W. 342, which followed Cro. Car. 271.

See BAILMENT; ANIMAL; LIEN.

AGNATES. In Scotch Law. Relations on the father's side. See AGNATI.

AGNATI. In Civil Law. All individuals subject for the time being to the same patria potestas, or who would be so subject were the common ancestor alive. Brothers and sisters, with their uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces, and other collaterals (not having been received by adoption or marriage into another family), if related through males, were agnates. The civil issue of the state was the Agnatic Family. Cognates were all persons who could trace their blood to a single ancestor or ancestress, and agnates were those cognates who traced their connection exclusively through males. Maine, Anc. Law.

"The agnates were that assemblage of persons who would have been under the patriarchal authority of some common ancestor if he had lived long enough to exercise it." Maine, Early Hist. of Inst. 106. A son emancipated by his father lost all rights of agnation.

They were called agnati—adgnati, from the words ad eum nati. Ulpianus says: "Adgnati autem sunt cognati virilis sexus ab eodem orti: nam post suos et consanguineos statim mihi proximus est consanguinei mei filius, et ego ei; patris quoque frater qui patruus appellatur; deincepsque ceteri, si qui sunt, hinc orti in infinitum." Dig. 38, 16. De suis, 2, § 1. Thus, although, the grandfather and father being dead, the children become sui juris, and the males become the founders of new families, still they all continue to be agnates; and the agnatio spreads and is perpetuated not only in the direct but also in the collateral line. Marriage, adoption, and adrogation also create the relationship of the agnatio. In the Sentences of Paulus, the order of inheritance is stated as follows: Intestatorum hereditas, lege Duodecim Tabularum primum suis heredibus, deinde adgnatis et aliquando quoque gentibus deferretur. See COGNATI.

AGNATIO. In Civil Law. The relationship of Agnati.

AGNOMEN. A name or title which a man gets by some action or peculiarity; the last of the four names sometimes given a Roman. Thus, Scipio Africanus, from his African victories. Ainsworth, Lex.; Calvinus, Lex. See NOMEN.

AGNOSTIC. See OATH.

AGRARIAN LAWS. In Roman Law. Those laws by which the commonwealth disposed of its public land, or regulated the possession thereof by individuals were termed Agrarian Laws.

The greater part of the public lands acquired by conquest were laid open to the possession of any citizen, but the state reserved the title and the right to resume possession. The object of many of the agrarian laws was to limit the area of public land of which any one person might take possession. The law of Cassius, B. C. 486, is the most noted of these laws.

It was long assumed that these laws were framed to reach private property as well as to restrict possession of the public domain, and hence the term agrarian is, in legal and political literature, to a great degree fixed with the meaning of a confiscatory law, intended to reduce large estates and increase the number of landholders. Harrington, in his "Oceana," and the philosophers of the French Revolution, have advocated agrarian laws in this sense. The researches of Heyne, Op. 4, 351; Niebuhr, Hist. vol. II. trans.; and Savigny, Das Recht des Besitzes, have redeemed the Roman word from the burden of this meaning.

AGREEMENTUM. Agreement.

Spelman says that it is equivalent in meaning to aggregatio mentium, though not derived therefrom.

AGREE. To concur with or assent. Thornton v. Kelly, 11 R. I. 498; to promise or engage; Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122, 9 Am. Dec. 123; to contract; McKisick v. McKisick, 6 Meigs (Tenn.) 427. To say that a jury agrees upon a verdict is equivalent to find; Benedict v. State, 14 Wis. 423.

It sometimes means a grant or covenant, as when a grantor agrees that no building shall be erected on an adjoining lot; Hogan v. Barry, 143 Mass. 538, 10 N. E. 253.

AGRÉÉ (Fr.). A person authorized to represent a litigant before the Tribunals of Commerce in France. If such person be a lawyer, he is called an avocat-agréé. Coxe, Manual of French Law.

AGREED STATEMENT OF FACTS. See CASE STATED.

AGREEMENT. A coming together of parties in opinion or determination; the union of two or more minds in a thing done or to be done; a mutual assent to do a thing. Comyn, Dig. Agreement, A 1; Plowd. 5 a, 6 a. Aggregatio mentium.—When two or more minds are united in a thing done or to be done.

It ought to be so certain and complete that either party may have an action on it, and there must be a quid pro quo; Dane, Abr. a. 11.

The consent of two or more persons concurring, the one in parting with, the other in receiving, some property, right, or benefit; Bacon, Abr. An act in the law whereby two or more persons declare their assent as to any act or thing to be done or forborne by some or one of those persons for the use of the others or other of them. Poll. Contr. 3, adopted in [1887] 36 Ch. D. 698. It must be concerned with duties or rights which can be dealt with in a court of justice; Poll. Contr. 3.

"The expression by two or more persons of a common intention to affect the legal relations of those persons." Anson, Contr. 3.

An agreement "consists of two persons being of the same mind, intention, or meaning concerning the matter agreed upon." Leake, Contr. 12.

"Agreement" is seldom applied to specialties; "contract" is generally confined to simple contracts; "promise" refers to the engagement of a party without reference to the reasons or considerations for it, or the duties of other parties; Pars. Contr. 6.

An agreement ceases to be such by being put in writing under seal, but not when put in writing for a memorandum; Dane, Abr. c. 11.

It is a wider term than "contract;" Anson, Contr. 4; an agreement might not be a contract, because not fulfilling some requirement of the law of the place in which it is made.

The meaning of the contracting parties is their agreement; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 396, 25 L. Ed. 1050.

An agreement of sale may imply not merely an obligation to sell, but an obligation on the part of the other party to purchase, while an agreement to sell is simply an obligation on the part of the vendor or promisor to complete his promise of sale; Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 21 Sup. Ct. 611, 45 L. Ed. 853.

In its correct sense, as used in the statute of frauds, it signifies a mutual contract upon a consideration, between two or more parties; 5 East 10; although frequently used in a loose, incorrect, sense as synonymous with promise or undertaking; id.; but, in its popular signification it means no more than concord, the union of two or more minds, concurrence of views and intention. Everything done or omitted by the compact of two or more minds is universally and familiarly called an agreement. Whether a consideration exists is a distinct idea which does not enter into the popular notion. In most instances any consideration except the voluntary impulse of minds cannot be ascribed to the numberless agreements that are made daily; Marcy v. Marcy, 9 Allen (Mass.) 11; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 85. Taken alone, it is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace all forms of stipulations, written or verbal; Wharton v. Wise, 153 U. S. 155, 14 Sup. Ct. 783, 38 L. Ed. 669.

The writing or instrument which is evidence of an agreement.

The agreement may be valid, and yet the written evidence thereof insufficient; as, if a promissory note be given for twenty dollars, the amount of a previous debt, where the note may generally be neglected and the debt collected by means of other evidence; or, again, if a note good in form be given for an illegal consideration, in which case the instrument is good and the agreement void.

See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION; ACCEPTANCE; CONSIDERATION; CONTRACT; NOVATION; PERFORMANCE; RESCISSION; INTERPRETATION.

The parties must agree or assent. There must be a definite offer by one party accepted by the other; Ives v. Hazard, 4 R. I. 14, 67 Am. Dec. 500; Emerson v. Graff, 29 Pa. 358. There must be a communication of assent by the party accepting; a mere mental assent to the terms in his own mind is not enough; L. R. 2 App. Ca. 691. See Allen v. Chouteau, 102 Mo. 309, 14 S. W. 869. But the assent need not be formally made; it can be inferred from the party's acts; L. R. 6 Q. B. 607; L. R. 10 C. P. 307; Smith v. Ingram, 90 Ala. 529, 8 South. 144. They must assent to the same thing in the same sense; Eliason v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 225, 4 L. Ed. 556; Greene v. Bateman, 2 Woodb. & M. 359, Fed. Cas. No. 5,762; 9 M. & W. 535; L. R. 6 Q. B. 597; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Levy's Adm'r, 122 Ky. 457, 92 S. W. 325, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 739. The assent must be mutual and obligatory; there must be a request on one side, and an assent on the other; 5 Bingham. N. C. 75; Abbott v. Hapgood, 150 Mass. 248, 22 N. E. 907, 5 L. R. A. 586, 15 Am. St. Rep. 193. Where there is a misunderstanding as to the date of performance there is no contract, for want of mutual assent; Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Slack & Co., 42 La. Ann. 107, 7 South. 230; or where there is a misunderstanding as to the manner of payment; Robinson & Farrell v. Estes, 53 Mo. App. 582. The assent must comprehend the whole of the proposition; it must be exactly equal to its extent and provision, and it must not qualify them by any new matter; 1 Pars. Contr. 400; and even a slight qualification destroys the assent; 5 M. & W. 535; Hornbeck's Ex'r v. American Bible Society, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 133. The question of assent when gathered from conversations is for the jury; Thruston v. Thornton, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 89; De Ridder v. McKnight, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 294.

A sufficient consideration for the agreement must exist; 2 Bla. Com. 444; 2 Q. B. 851; 5 Ad. & E. 548; as against third parties this consideration must be good or valuable; 10 B. & C. 606; as between the parties it may be equitable only; 1 Pars. Contr. 431.

But it need not be adequate, if only it have some real value; 2 Sch. & L. 395, n. a; 11 Ad. & E. 983; Hubbard v. Coolidge, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 84; Judy v. Louderman, 48 Ohio St. 562, 29 N. E. 181, refraining from use of tobacco and liquor for a period is sufficient consideration for a promise to pay the party a sum of money; Hamer v. Sidway, 124 N. Y. 538, 27 N. E. 256, 12 L. R. A. 463, 21 Am. St. Rep. 693.

If the consideration be illegal in whole or in part, the agreement will be void; Donallen v. Lennox, 6 Dana (Ky.) 91; Town of Hinesburgh v. Sumner, 9 Vt. 23, 31 Am. Dec. 599; Filson's Trustees v. Himes, 5 Pa. 452, 47 Am. Dec. 422; Deering v. Chapman, 22 Me. 488, 39 Am. Dec. 592; Ashbrook v. Dale, 27 Mo. App. 649; Smith v. Steely, 80 Ia. 738, 45 N. W. 912. A contract to regulate the price of commodities at a certain specified amount is a contract in restraint of trade, without consideration and cannot be enforced; 63 Law T. 455; Vulcan Powder Co. v. Powder Co., 96 Cal. 510, 31 Pac. 581, 31 Am. St. Rep. 242; so also if the consideration be impossible; 5 Viner, Abr. 110, Condition; Co. Litt. 206 a; Shepp. Touchst. 164; L. R. 5 C. P. 588; 2 Lev. 161. See CONSIDERATION.

The agreement may be to do anything which is lawful, as to sell or buy real estate or personal property. But the evidence of the sale of real property must generally be by deed, sealed; and in many cases agreements in regard to personal property must be in writing. See STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

The construction to be given to agreements is to be favorable to upholding them, and according to the intention of the parties at the time of making it, as nearly as the meaning of the words used and the rules of law will permit; 2 Kent 555; 1 H. Bla. 569, 614; 30 Eng. L. & E. 479; Potter v. Ins. Co., 5 Hill (N. Y.) 147; Ricker v. Fairbanks, 40 Me. 43; 10 A. & E. 326; Thrall v. Newell, 19 Vt. 202, 47 Am. Dec. 682. This intent cannot prevail against the plain meaning of words; 5 M. & W. 535. Neither will it be allowed to contravene established rules of law.

And that the agreement may be supported, it will be construed so as to operate in a way somewhat different from that intended, if this will prevent the agreement from failing altogether; Brewer v. Hardy, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 376, 33 Am. Dec. 747; Rogers v. Fire Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 611; Bryan v. Bradley, 16 Conn. 474.

Agreements are construed most strongly against the party proposing (i. e., contra proferentem); 6 M. & W. 662; 2 Pars. Contr. 20; 3 B. & S. 929; Deblois v. Earle, 7 R. I. 26. See CONTRACTS.

The effect of an agreement is to bind the parties to the performance of what they have thereby undertaken. In case of failure, the common law provides a remedy by damages, and equity will in some cases compel a specific performance.

The obligation may be avoided or destroyed by performance (q. v.), which must be by him who was bound to do it; and whatsoever is necessary to be done for the full discharge of this duty, although only incidental to it, must be done by him; 11 Q. B. 368; 4 B. & S. 556; Fauble v. Davis, 48 Ia. 462; Jennings v. Lyons, 39 Wis. 553, 20 Am. Rep. 57; by tender of exact performance accord- ing to the terms of the contract, which is sufficient when the other party refuses to accept performance under the contract; 6 M. & G. 610; Benj. Sales 563; Ans. Contr. 274; an agreement to pay a sum of money upon receipt of certain funds is not broken on refusal to pay on receipt of part of the funds; Fox v. Walker, 62 N. H. 419; by acts of the party to be benefited, which prevent the performance, or where some act is to be done by one party before the act of the other, the second party is excused from performance, if the first fails; 15 M. & W. 109; 8 Q. B. 358; 6 B. & C. 325; 10 East 359; by rescission (q. v.), which may be made by the party to be benefited, without any provision therefor in the agreement, and the mere acquiescence of the other party will be evidence of sufficient mutuality to satisfy the general rule that rescission must be mutual; Hill v. Green, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 114; Quincy v. Tilton, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 277; 1 W. & S. 442; rescission, before breach, must be by agreement; Leake, Contr. 787; 2 H. & N. 79; 6 Exch. 39; by acts of law, as confusion, merger; Baxter v. Downer, 29 Vt. 412; death, as when a master who has bound himself to teach an apprentice dies; inability to perform a personal service, such as singing at a concert; L. R. 6 Exch. 269; or extinction of the subject-matter of the agreement. See also ASSENT; CONTRACT; DISCHARGE OF CONTRACTS; PARTIES; PAYMENT; RESCISSION.

AGREEMENT FOR INSURANCE. An agreement often made in short terms preliminary to the filling out and delivery of a policy with specific stipulations.

Such an agreement, specifying the rate of premium, the subject, and risk, and amount to be insured, in general terms, and being assented to by the parties, is binding; Tyler v. Insurance Co., 4 Rob. (N. Y.) 151; Oliver v. Insurance Co., 2 Curt. 277, Fed. Cas. No. 10,498; Trustees of First Baptist Church v. Insurance Co., 19 N. Y. 305. It is usually in writing, but may be by parol or by parol acceptance of a written proposal; Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Insurance Co., 2 Curt. 524, Fed. Cas. No. 14,372; Commercial Mut. Marine Ins. Co. v. Insurance Co., 19 How. (U. S.) 318, 15 L. Ed. 636; Mobile Marine Dock & Mutual Ins. Co. v. McMillan, 31 Ala. 711; Ellis v. Insurance Co., 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495; Ela v. French, 11 N. H. 356. It must be in such form or expression that the parties, subject, and risk can be thereby distinctly known, either by being specified or by references so that it can be definitely reduced to writing; Trustees of First Baptist Church v. Insurance Co., 19 N. Y. 305.

Such an agreement must have an express or implied reference to some form of policy. The ordinary form of the underwriters in like cases is implied, where no other is specified or implied; Eureka Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 56 Pa. 256, 94 Am. Dec. 65; 2 C. & P.

91; 3 B. & Ad. 906; Hubbard v. Insurance Co., 33 Ia. 325, 11 Am. Rep. 125; Barre v. Insurance Co., 76 Ia. 609, 41 N. W. 373; Oliver v. Insurance Co., 2 Curt. 277, Fed. Cas. No. 10,498.

Where the agreement is by a communication between parties at a distance, an offer by either will be binding upon both on a despatch by the other of his acceptance within a reasonable or the prescribed time, and prior to the offer having been countermanded; 1 Phil. Ins. §§ 17, 21; Myers v. Insurance Co., 27 Pa. 268, 67 Am. Dec. 462.

It is a common practice to "bind" insurance against fire for a short period by mere oral communication.

See POLICY; INSURANCE.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDING. Land cultivated for profit in some way. Within the meaning of the English Agricultural Holdings act of 1883, the term will not include natural grass lands. Such lands are pastoral holdings. 32 S. J. 630.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCT. That which is the direct result of husbandry and the cultivation of the soil. The product in its natural unmanufactured condition; Getty v. Milling Co., 40 Kan. 281, 19 Pac. 617. It has been held not to include beef cattle; Davis & Co. v. City of Macon, 64 Ga. 128, 37 Am. Rep. 60.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY. One for the promotion of agricultural interests, such as the improvement of land, breeds of cattle, etc. Downing v. State Board of Agriculture, 129 Ind. 443, 28 N. E. 123, 614, 12 L. R. A. 664. It is held a private corporation; Selinas v. State Agricultural Society, 60 Vt. 249, 15 Atl. 117, 6 Am. St. Rep. 114; Ismon v. Loder, 135 Mich. 345, 97 N. W. 769; Brown v. Agricultural Society, 47 Me. 275, 74 Am. Dec. 484; Lane v. Agricultural Society, 62 Minn. 175, 64 N. W. 382, 29 L. R. A. 708; but where its organization and the powers of its board of directors are provided for by statute, and it is not a society for pecuniary benefit, it is a public corporation; Hern v. State Agricultural Soc., 91 Ia. 97, 58 N. W. 1092.

As to their liability for negligence, see DANGEROUS PREMISES.

AGRICULTURE. The cultivation of soil for food products or any other useful or valuable growths of the field or garden; tillage, husbandry; also, by extension, farming, including any industry practised by a cultivator of the soil in connection with such cultivation, as breeding and rearing of stock, dairying, etc. The science that treats of the cultivation of the soil. Stand. Dict. The term refers to the field or farm, with all its wants, appointments and products, as distinguished from horticulture, which refers to the garden, with its less important though varied products; Dillard v. Webb, 55 Ala. 468.

A person is actually engaged in agriculture when he derives the support of himself and family in whole or in part from the cultivation of land; it must be something more than a garden, though it may be less than a field, and the uniting of any other business with this is not inconsistent with the pursuit of agriculture; Springer v. Lewis, 22 Pa. 193. See Bachelder v. Bickford, 62 Me. 526; Simons v. Lovell, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 515.

Within the meaning of an exemption law, one who cultivates a one acre lot and is also a butcher and day laborer is not engaged in agriculture.

AID AND ABET. See AIDING AND ABETTING.

AID AND COMFORT. Help; support; assistance; counsel; encouragement.

The constitution of the United States, art. 3, § 3, declares that adhering to the enemies of the United States, giving them aid and comfort, shall be treason. These words, as they are to be understood in the constitution, have not received a full judicial construction; but see Young v. U. S., 97 U. S. 39, 24 L. Ed. 992, as to their meaning in the Act of Congress, March 12, 1863. See also Lamar v. Browne, 92 U. S. 187, 23 L. Ed. 650; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 20 L. Ed. 519; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 347, 20 L. Ed. 439; Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 147, 21 L. Ed. 426; Witkowski v. U. S., 7 Ct. of Cl. 398; Bond v. U. S., 2 Ct. of Cl. 533. They import help, support, assistance, countenance, encouragement. The voluntary execution of an official bond of a commissioned officer of the Confederacy from motives of personal friendship, is giving aid and comfort; U. S. v. Padelford, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 539, 19 L. Ed. 788; as is the giving of mechanical skill to build boats for the Confederacy; Gearing v. U. S., 3 Ct. of Cl. 172. The word aid, which occurs in the stat. Westm. I. c. 14, is explained by Lord Coke (2 Inst. 182) as comprehending all persons counselling, abetting, plotting, assenting, consenting, and encouraging to do the act (and he adds, what is not applicable to the crime of treason), who are not present when the act is done. See also 1 Burn, Just. 5, 6; 4 Bla. Com. 37, 38.

To constitute aid and comfort it is not essential that the effort to aid should be successful and actually render assistance; U. S. v. Greathouse, 4 Sawy. 472, Fed. Cas. No. 15,254.

AID BONDS. See BONDS.

AID OF THE KING. A city or borough that holds a fee farm of the king, if anything be demanded against them which belongs thereto, may pray in aid of the king. In these cases the proceedings are stopped until the king's counsel is heard to say what they think fit for avoiding the king's prejudice; and this aid shall not in any case be granted after issue; because the king ought not to rely on the defence made by another. Termes de la Ley.

AID PRAYER. A petition to the court calling in help from another person who has an interest in the matter in dispute. For example, a tenant for life, by the curtesy, or for years, being impleaded, may pray aid of him in reversion; that is, desire the court that he may be called by writ, to allege what he thinks proper for the maintenance of the right of the person calling him, and of his own. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 50.

AIDER BY VERDICT. The presumption which arises after verdict, whether in a civil or criminal case, that those facts, without proof of which the verdict could not have been found, were proved, though they are not distinctly alleged in the record; provided it contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend them in reasonable intendment.

The rule is that where a matter is so essentially necessary to be proved that, had it not been in evidence, the jury could not have given such a verdict as that recorded, there the want of stating that matter in express terms in a declaration, provided it contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend it in fair and reasonable intendment, will be cured by the verdict; and where a general allegation must, in fair construction, so far require to be restricted that no judge and no jury could have properly treated it in an unrestrained sense, it may reasonably be presumed after verdict that it was so restrained at the trial; 1 Maule & S. 234; 1 Saund. (6th Ed.) 227, 228; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 356; 2 M. & G. 405; 13 M. & W. 377; 6 C. B. 136; Worster v. Proprietors of Canal Bridge, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 541; Wilson v. Coffin, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 316; Bartlett v. Crozier, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 439, 458, 8 Am. Dec. 428; Kain v. R. Co., 29 Mo. App. 53; Bronnenburg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391, 28 N. E. 568.

AIDING AND ABETTING. The offence committed by those persons who, although not the direct perpetrators of a crime, are yet present at its commission, doing some act to render aid to the actual perpetrator thereof. 4 Bla. Com. 34; Russ. & R. 363, 421; State v. Hildreth, 31 N. C. 440, 51 Am. Dec. 369; U. S. v. Libby, 1 Woodb. & M. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 15,597; Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534; McCarty v. State, 26 Misc. 299. They are principals in the crime; U. S. v. Boyd, 45 Fed. 851; Engeman v. State, 54 N. J. L. 247, 23 Atl. 676. A common purpose to subvert the joint interests of the principal offender and his aider and abettor by misapplication of the funds of a bank is not necessary to create the offence of aiding and abetting a bank officer in misapplying its funds in violation of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5209. It is immaterial whom they may have intended to benefit, if there existed the intent to defraud specified in the act; Coffin v. U. S., 162 U. S. 664, 16 Sup. Ct. 943, 40 L. Ed. 1109.

A principal in the second degree is one who is present aiding and abetting the fact to be done. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 615; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 648 (4). See State v. McGregor, 41 N. H. 407; Hill v. State, 28 Ga. 604; Doan v. State, 26 Ind. 496; State v. Squaires, 2 Nev. 226; State v. Fley, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 338, 4 Am. Dec. 583. Actual presence is not necessary: it is sufficient to be so situated as to come readily to the assistance of his fellows; Green v. State, 13 Mo. 382.

One cannot be convicted as aider and abettor unless the principal is jointly indicted with him, or if indicted alone, the indictment should give the name and description of the principal; Mulligan v. Com., 84 Ky. 229, 1 S. W. 417, and the one charged as an abettor may be convicted as principal; Benge v. Com., 92 Ky. 1, 17 S. W. 146, and the abettor may be convicted of murder in the second degree, though the principal has been acquitted; State v. Whitt, 113 N. C. 716, 18 S. E. 715; State v. Bogue, 52 Kan. 79, 34 Pac. 10.

The aider and abettor in a misdemeanor is chargeable as principal; Com. v. Ahearn, 160 Mass. 300, 35 N. E. 853; U. S. v. Sykes, 58 Fed. 1000.

To aid or abet a breach of an injunction decree is contempt of court; [1897] 1 Ch. 545. See ACCESSORY; PRINCIPAL; ABETTOR.

AIDS. In English Law. A species of tax payable by the tenant of lands to his superior lord on the happening of certain events.

They were originally mere benevolences granted to the lord in certain times of danger and distress, but soon came to be claimed as a right. They were originally given in three cases only, and were of uncertain amount. For a period they were demanded in additional cases; but this abuse was corrected by Magna Carta (of John) and the stat. 25 Edw. I. (confirmatio cartarum), and they were made payable only,—to ransom the lord's person, when taken prisoner; to make the lord's eldest son a knight; to marry the lord's eldest daughter, by giving her a suitable portion. The first of these remained uncertain; the other two were fixed by act of parliament (25 Edw. III. c. 11) at twenty shillings each, being the supposed twentieth part of a knight's fee; 2 Bla. Com. 64. They were abolished by the 12 Car. II. c. 24; 2 Bla. Com. 77, n. See 1 Poll. § Maitl. 330.

AIEL (spelled also Ayel, Aile, and Ayle).

A writ which lieth where the grandfather was seized in his demesne as of fee of any lands or tenements in fee simple the day that he died, and a stranger abateth or entereth the same day and dispossesseth the heir. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 222; Termes de la Ley; 3 Bla. Com. 186; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 57. See ABATEMENT.

AIELESSE (Norman). A grandmother. Kelham.

AILE. A corruption of the French word aioul, grandfather. see AIEL.

AIR. No property can be had in the air; it belongs equally to all men, being indispensable to their existence. But this must be understood with this qualification, that no man has a right to use the air over another man's land in such a manner as to be injurious to him. To poison or materially to change the air, to the annoyance of the public, is a nuisance; Cro. Car. 510; 1 Burr. 333; see NUISANCE.

That abutting landowners have rights of light and air over a public highway is held in many cases; Townsend v. Epstein, 93 Md. 537, 49 Atl. 629, 52 L. R. A. 409, 86 Am. St. Rep. 441; Story v. R. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Adams v. R. R. Co., 39

Minn. 286, 39 N. W. 629, 1 L. R. A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644; Barnett v. Johnson, 15 N. J. Eq. 481; Field v. Barling, 149 Ill. 556, 37 N. E. 850, 24 L. R. A. 406, 41 Am. St. Rep. 311. This right is said in Barnett v. Johnson, 15 N. J. Eq. 481, to be founded in such an urgent necessity that all laws and legal proceedings take it for granted; a right so strong that it protects itself, so urgent that upon any attempt to annul or infringe it, it would set at defiance all legislative enactments and all judicial decisions. This case, it has been said, anticipated the principle upon which compensation was at last secured in the elevated railroad cases in New York; 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. 183; Muhlker v. R. Co., 197 U. S. 544, 25 Sup. Ct. 522, 49 L. Ed. 872, where it is said: "It is manifest that easements of light and air cannot be made dependent upon easement of access, and whether they can be taken away in the interest of the public under the conditions upon which the city obtained title to the streets" depends upon the cases of Story v. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146, and Lahr v. R. Co., 104 N. Y. 268, 10 N. E. 528.

In the Story Case, the extent of the abutting owner's right was defined to be not only access to the lot, but light and air from the street. The court said: "The street occupies the surface, and to its uses the rights of the adjacent lots are subordinate, but above the surface there can be no lawful obstruction to the access of light and air, to the detriment of the abutting owner;" and "The elements of light and air are both to be derived from the space over the land on the surface of which the street is constructed, and which is made servient for that purpose." It is said that in that case a distinction was clearly made between the rights of abutting owners in the surface of the street and their rights in the space above the street; Muhlker v. R. Co., 197 U. S. 544, 25 Sup. Ct. 522, 49 L. Ed. 872, where it was held that the owner was protected against impairment of his easements of light and air by the substitution by a railway company of an elevated structure in lieu of its surface or partly depressed roadbed which occupied the street at the time of his purchase.

The erection over a street of an elevated viaduct, intended for general public travel, and not devoted to the exclusive use of a private transportation company, is a legitimate street improvement equivalent to a change of grade; and as in the case of a change of grade, an owner of land abutting on the street is not entitled to damages for the impairment of access to his land and the lessening of the circulation of light and air over it; Selden v. City of Jacksonville, 28 Fla. 558, 10 South. 457, 14 L. R. A. 370, 29 Am. St. Rep. 278; Willis v. Winona City, 59 Minn. 27, 60 N. W. 814, 26 L. R. A. 142; Colclough v. City of Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 182, 65 N. W. 1039; Walsh v. City of Milwaukee, 95 Wis. 16, 69 N. W. 818; Home Building & Conveyance Co. v. City of Roanoke, 91 Va. 52, 20 S. E. 895, 27 L. R. A. 551; Meyer v. Richmond, 172 U. S. 82, 19 Sup. Ct. 106, 43 L. Ed. 374; Willets Mfg. Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Mercer County, 62 N. J. L. 95, 40 Atl. 782; Brand v. Multnomah County, 38 Or. 79, 60 Pac. 390, 62 Pac. 209, 50 L. R. A. 389, 84 Am. St. Rep. 772; Mead v. Portland, 45 Or. 1, 76 Pac. 347, affirmed in 200 U. S. 148, 26 Sup. Ct. 171, 50 L. Ed. 413; Sears v. Crocker, 184 Mass. 588, 69 N. E. 327, 100 Am. St. Rep. 577.

In some jurisdictions it is also held that recovery cannot be had by an abutting owner because of the interference with the light, air or prospect of his property through an elevation of railroad tracks, in the absence of any taking of his land or destruction of his easements, under a statute requiring compensation to be made for all damage caused by the taking of land, by the change or discontinuance of a private way, or by the taking of an easement; McKeon v. R. Co., 199 Mass. 292, 85 N. E. 475, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1061; Egerer v. R. Co., 49 Hun 605, 2 N. Y. Supp. 69; and to the same effect, Austin v. R. Co., 108 Ga. 671, 34 S. E. 852, 47 L. R. A. 755; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lippincott, 116 Pa. 472, 9 Atl. 871, 2 Am. St. Rep. 618; Jones v. R. Co., 151 Pa. 30, 25 Atl. 134, 17 L. R. A. 758, 31 Am. St. Rep. 722. In Selden v. City of Jacksonville, 28 Fla. 558, 10 South. 457, 14 L. R. A. 370, 29 Am. St. Rep. 278, cited and approved in Sauer v. City of New York, 206 U. S. 544, 27 Sup. Ct. 686, 51 L. Ed. 1176, it is said that there are, incident to property abutting on a street certain property rights which the public generally do not possess, viz.: the right of ingress and egress to and from the lot by the way of the street, and of light and air. These incidental rights are, under a constitutional prohibition simply against the "taking" or "appropriation" of private property, subordinate to the right of the state to alter a grade or otherwise improve a street. The original and all subsequent purchasers of abutting lots take with the implied understanding that the public shall have the right to improve or alter the street so far as may be necessary for its use as a street, and that they can sustain no claim for damages resulting to their lots or property from the improvement or destruction of such incidental rights as a mere consequence of the lawful use or improvement of the street as a highway.

One may erect a high fence shutting off light and air from his neighbor; Saddler v. Alexander (Ky.) 56 S. W. 518; Giller v. West, 162 Ind. 17, 69 N. E. 548; Metzger v. Tierney, 13 N. M. 363, 83 Pac. 788; Metzger v. Hochrein, 107 Wis. 267, 83 N. W. 308, 50 L. R. A. 305, 81 Am. St. Rep. 841; even though his motive is to annoy; Metzger v. Hochrein,

See EASEMENT; EMINENT DOMAIN; ANCIENT LIGHTS.

AIR SHIP. See AVIATION.

AISIAMENTUM (spelled also Esamentum, Aisimentum). An easement. Spelman Gloss.

AJUAR. In Spanish Law. The jewels and furniture which a wife brings in marriage.

AJUTAGE (spelled also Adjutage). A conical tube used in drawing water through an aperture, by the use of which the quantity of water drawn is much increased.

When a privilege to draw water from a canal, through the forebay or tunnel, by means of an aperture, has been granted, it is not lawful to add an ajutage, unless such was the intention of the parties; Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Moore, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 477.

ALABAMA. One of the United States of America, being the ninth admitted into the Union. It was formerly a part of Georgia, but in 1798 the territory now included in the states of Alabama and Mississippi was organized as a territory called Mississippi, which was cut off from the Gulf coast by Florida, then Spanish territory, extending to the French possessions in Louisiana. During the war of 1812, part of Florida lying between the Perdido and Pearl rivers was occupied by United States troops and afterwards annexed to Mississippi territory, forming part of the present state of Alabama, which was occupied principally by Creek Indians. The country becoming rapidly settled by the whites, the western portion was admitted into the Union as the state of Mississippi, and, by act of Congress of March 3, 1817, the eastern portion was organized as the territory of Alabama; 3 U. S. Stat. L. 371.

An act of Congress was passed March 2, 1819, authorizing the inhabitants of the territory of Alabama to form for themselves a constitution and state government. In pursuance of that act, the constitution of the state of Alabama was adopted by a convention which met at Huntsville, July 5, and adjourned August 2, 1819. Amendment prohibiting sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors, adopted 1909.

ALASKA. Territory acquired by the United States under treaty with Russia dated March 30, ratified May 28, 1867. 15 Stat. L. 539. By this treaty the inhabitants of the territory were admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages and immunities of citizens of the United States. The status of Alaska as an incorporated territory was contemplated by its provisions and has been since so declared by the courts; Rasmussen v. U. S., 197 U. S. 516, 25 Sup. Ct. 514, 49 L. Ed. 862.

The general laws of the state of Oregon were declared to be the laws of the territory, so far as applicable and not in conflict with the laws of the United States. By act of May 7, 1906, a delegate to congress was provided. By an order, May 11, 1891, under the Act of March 3, 1891, Alaska was assigned to the ninth judicial circuit. See TERRITORY.

ALBA FIRMA. White rents; rents reserved payable in silver, or white money.

They were so called to distinguish them from reditus nigri, which were rents reserved payable in work, grain, and the like. Coke, 2d Inst. 19.

ALBINATUS JUS. The droit d'aubaine in France whereby the king at the death of an alien was entitled to all his property, unless he had a peculiar exemption. Repealed in 1791.

ALCALDE. A judicial officer in Spain, and in those countries which have received the body of their laws from those of Spain. His powers and duties are similar to those of a justice of the peace.

ALDERMAN. Equivalent to senator or senior. Cowell.

In English Law. An associate to the chief civil magistrate of a corporate town or city.

The word was formerly of very extended significance. Spelman enumerates eleven classes of aldermen. Their duties among the Saxons embraced both magisterial and executive power, but would seem to have been rather an appellation of honor, originally, than a distinguishing mark of office. Spelman, Gloss.

Aldermannus civitatus burgi seu castellæ (alderman of a city, borough, or castle). 1 Bla. Com. 475, n.

Aldermannus comitatus (alderman of the county), who is thought by Spelman to have held an intermediate place between an earl and a sheriff; by others, held the same as the earl. 1 Bla. Com. 116.

Aldermannus hundredi seu wapentachii (alderman of a hundred or wapentake). Spelman.

Aldermannus regis (alderman of the king) was so called, either because he was appointed by the king, or because he gave the judgment of the king in the premises allotted to him.

Aldermannus totius Angliæ (alderman of all England). An officer of high rank whose duties cannot be precisely determined. See Spelman, Gloss.

The aldermen of the city of London were probably originally the chiefs of guilds. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 54, 56. For an account of the selection and installation of aldermen of the guild merchant of a borough, see 1 Poll. & Maitl. 648.

In American Cities. The aldermen are generally a municipal legislative body; though in many cities they hold separate courts, and have magisterial powers to a considerable extent.

Consult 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 116; Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law; Spence, Eq. Jur.

ALE-CONNER (also called ale-taster). An officer appointed by the court-leet, sworn to look to the assize and goodness of ale and beer within the precincts of the leet. Kitchin, Courts 46; Whishaw.

An officer appointed in every court-leet, and sworn to look to the assize of bread, ale, or beer within the precincts of that lordship. Cowell.

This officer is still continued in name, though the duties are changed or given up; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 501.

ALE SILVER. A duty anciently paid to the Lord Mayor of London by the sellers of ale.

ALEATOR (Lat. alea, dice.) A diceplayer; a gambler.

"The more skilful a player he is, the wickeder he is." Calvinus, Lex.

ALEATORY CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A mutual agreement, of which the effects, with respect both to the advantages and losses, whether to all the parties or to some of them, depend on an uncertain event. La. Civ. Code, art. 2982. See Moore v. Johnston, 8 La. Ann. 488; May, Ins. § 5.

The term includes contracts, such as insurance, annuities, and the like. See GAMING; MARGIN; OPTION.

An aleatory sale is one the completion of which depends on the happening of an uncertain event.

ALER SANS JOUR (Fr. aller sans jour, to go without day). A phrase formerly used to indicate the final dismissal of a case from court. The defendant was then at liberty to go, without any day appointed for his subsequent appearance; Kitchin, Courts 146; Termes de la Ley.

ALFET. The vessel in which hot water was put, for the purpose of dipping a criminal's arm in it up to the elbow in the ordeal by water. Cowell. See ORDEAL.

ALIA (Lat.). Other things.

ALIA ENORMIA (Lat. other wrongs). A general allegation, at the end of a declaration, of wrongful acts committed by the defendant to the damage of the plaintiff. In form it is, "and other wrongs then and there did against the peace," etc. Under this allegation, damages and matters which naturally arise from the act complained of may be given in evidence; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 678; including battery of servants, etc., in a declaration for breaking into and entering a house; 2 Term 166; Shafer v. Smith, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 68; and all matters in general which go in aggravation of damages merely, but would not of themselves be ground for an action; Bull. N. P. 89; Heminway v. Saxton, 3 Mass. 222; Dimmett v. Eskridge, 6 Munf. (Va.) 308.

But matters in aggravation may be stated specially; Moore v. Fenwick, Gilm. (Va.) 227; and matters which of themselves would constitute a ground of action must be so stated; 1 Chit. Pl. 348; Loker v. Damon, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 284. See AGGRAVATION.

ALIAS (Lat. alius, another). At another time; otherwise.

The term is sometimes used to indicate an assumed name. See ALIAS DICTUS.

An alias writ is a writ issued where one of the same kind has been issued before in the same cause. See Roberts v. Church, 17 Conn. 145.

The second writ runs, in such case, "we command you as we have before commanded you" (sicut alias), and the Latin word alias is used to denote both the writ and the clause in which it or its corresponding English word is found. It is used of all species of writs.

No waiver can make an alias attachment writ good and it is unauthorized; Dennison v. Blumenthal, 37 Ill. App. 385; an alias execution should not issue on return of the original which had been delivered long prior thereto, except it be shown that it had been delivered to an officer during its life, and had not been satisfied; People v. Brayton, 37 Ill. App. 319.

ALIAS DICTUS (Lat. otherwise called). A description of the defendant by adding to his real name that by which he is known in some writing on which he is to be charged, or by which he is known. Reid v. Lord, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 118; Meredith v. Hinsdale, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 362; Petrie v. Woodworth, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 219. From long usage the word alias alone is now considered sufficient; Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 245. See NAME.

ALIBI (Lat. elsewhere). Presence in another place than that described.

When a person, charged with a crime, proves (se eadem die fuisse alibi) that he was, at the time alleged, in a different place from that in which it was committed, he is said to prove an alibi, the effect of which is to lay a foundation for the necessary inference that he could not have committed it. See Bracton 140.

This proof is usually made out by the testimony of witnesses, but it is presumed it might be made out by writings; as if the party could prove by a record, properly authenticated, that on the day or at the time in question he was in another place.

It has been said that this defence must be subjected to a most rigid scrutiny, and that it must be established by a preponderance of proof; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 324, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Washington Ben. Soc. v. Bacher, 20 Pa. 429; Creed v. People, 81 Ill. 565; State v. Reed, 62 Ia. 40, 17 N. W. 150. See remarks of Shaw, C. J., in Webster's Case, and 2 Alison's Cr. L. of Scotl. 624; Bish. Crim. L. 1061. In many states the defence is established if the evidence raises in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant; State v. Howell, 100 Mo. 628, 14 S. W. 4; Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 10 South. 106; Pate v. State, 94 Ala. 14, 10 South. 665; People v. Fong Ah Sing, 64 Cal. 253, 28 Pac. 233; Landis v. State, 70 Ga. 651, 48 Am. Rep. 588; Howard v. State, 50 Ind. 190; People v. Pearsall, 50 Mich. 233, 15 N. W. 98; and if the testimony tends to prove an alibi, failure to instruct thereon is error; Fletcher v. State, 85 Ga. 666, 11 S. E. 872. An instruction that an alibi need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt, but it should be to the satisfaction of the jury, is correct; Peo*ple v. Stone*, 117 N. Y. 480, 23 N. E. 13; Caldwell v. State, 28 Tex. App. 566, 14 S. W. 122; Garrity v. People, 107 Ill. 162; State v. Jennings, 81 Mo. 185, 51 Am. Rep. 236; Ware v. State, 67 Ga. 349. It is peculiarly liable to be supported by perjury and false testimony of all sorts. There must be satisfactory proof that the prisoner could not have been at the place where the crime was committed, but the proof need not be higher than is required as to other facts; Johnson v. State, 59 Ga. 142. See State v. Northrup, 48 Ia. 583, 30 Am. Rep. 408; People v. Gam, 69 Cal. 552, 11 Pac. 183.

ALIEN (Lat. alienus, belonging to another; foreign). A foreigner; one of foreign birth.

In England, one born out of the allegiance of the king.

In the United States one born out of the jurisdiction of the United States and who has not been naturalized under their constitution and laws. 2 Kent 50.

The alien minor child of a naturalized citizen who has never dwelt in the United States is not invested with citizenship by the provision of § 2172, U. S. R. S. 1901, p. 1334, that minor children of naturalized citizens shall if dwelling in the U. S. be considered citizens thereof; Zartarian v. Billings, 204 U. S. 170, 27 Sup. Ct. 182, 51 L. Ed. 428.

Citizens of Porto Rico are not aliens; Gonzales v. Williams, 192 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 177, 48 L. Ed. 317.

As to right to sue, see ABATEMENT.

An American woman who marries a foreigner takes her husband's nationality, but not if she continues to reside in the United States; Wallenburg v. R. Co., 159 Fed. 217. If she resides abroad at the termination of the marriage relation, she may resume her citizenship by registering as an American citizen with a consul of the United States or by returning to the United States; Act of March 2, 1907.

A treaty with Japan securing to her subjects full liberty to enter, travel or reside in any part of the United States will not include such persons as are likely to become a public charge, or those forbidden to enter by the immigrant acts; The Japanese Immigrant Case, 189 U. S. 86, 23 Sup. Ct. 611, 47 L. Ed. 721; nor will any treaty give to a British subject any different measure of justice from our own; Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 487, 27 Sup. Ct. 582, 51 L. Ed. 890.

An alien cannot in general acquire title to real estate by descent, or by other mere operation of law; 7 Co. 25*a*; Jackson v. Lunn, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 109; Hunt v. Warnicke's Heirs, Hard. (Ky.) 61; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 265, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642; and if he purchase land, he may be divested of the fee, upon an inquest of office found; but until this is done he may sell, convey, or devise the lands and pass a good title to the same; Orr v. Hodgson, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 453, 4 L. Ed. 613; Fox v. Southack, 12 Mass. 143; Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 365; Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475; 1 Washb. R. P. 49; Oregon Mtg. Co. v. Carstens, 16 Wash. 165, 47 Pac. 421, 35 L. R. A. 841. The state alone can question his right to hold land; Belden v. Wilkinson, 33 Misc. 659, 68 N. Y. Supp. 205; Madden v. State, 68 Kan. 658, 75 Pac. 1023. The disabilities of aliens in respect to holding lands are removed by statute in many of the states of the United States and by United States treaties; Bahaud v. Bize, 105 Fed. 485, and cases cited. The California Act of May 19, 1913, permits that aliens not eligible to citizenship may hold land to the extent provided by any existing treaty between the United States and such aliens' nation (and also may hold land for agricultural purposes for a term of not over three years).

Provisions in regard to the transfer, devise or inheritance of property by aliens are fitting subjects of regulation under the treaty-making power of the United States, and a treaty will control or suspend the statutes of the individual states whenever it differs from them and, for that reason, if the subject of a foreign government is disqualified, under the laws of a state, from taking, holding or transferring real property, such disqualification will be removed if a treaty between the United States and such foreign government confers the right to take, hold, or transfer real property; Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 33 N. E. 195, 19 L. R. A. 84. So by virtue of treaties existing between the United States and France and Bavaria, citizens of the latter countries are exempt from the payment of a state tax imposed on foreign heirs and legatees; Succession of Dufour, 10 La. Ann. 391; Succession of Crusius, 19 id. 369; and by the "most favored nation" clause of the treaty with Italy, a subject of that country is likewise exempt from the same tax; Succession of Rixner, 48 La. Ann. 552, 19 South. 597, 32 L. R. A. 177.

The right of a state, in the absence of a treaty, to declare an alien capable of inheritance or taking property and holding the same within its borders, is not precluded by the constitution of the United States; Art. I, § 10, declaring that no state shall enter into any treaty, alliance or confederation; Blythe v. Hinckley, 180 U. S. 333, 21 Sup. Ct. 390, 45 L. Ed. 557.

An alien woman acquires citizenship by her marriage to an American, though she be an immigrant about to be deported; Hopkins v. Fachant, 130 Fed. 839, 65 C. C. A. 1.

After the termination of the marital relation, a woman who has acquired citizenship by marriage may retain it by continuing in the United States. She may renounce it before a court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens. If she reside abroad she may retain her citizenship by registering with a United States consul within the year; Act of March 2, '07.

The right to exclude or to expel aliens in war or in peace is an inherent and inalienable right of every independent nation; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905; so in England; [1891] A. C. 272. Congress may exclude aliens altogether and prescribe the conditions upon which they may come to this country; U. S. v. Bitty, 208 U. S. 393, 28 Sup. Ct. 396, 52 L. Ed. 543; and may have its policy in that respect enforced exclusively through executive officers without judicial intervention; The Chinese Exclusion Case, 130 U. S. 581, 9 Sup. Ct. 623, 32 L. Ed. 1068; Nishimura Ekin v. U. S., 142 U. S. 651, 12 Sup. Ct. 336, 35 L. Ed. 1146; Lem Moon Sing v. U. S., 158 U. S. 538, 15 Sup. Ct. 967, 39 L. Ed. 1082; Fok Ying Yo v. U. S., 185 U. S. 296, 22 Sup. Ct. 686, 46 L. Ed. 917; Kaoru Yamataya v. Fisher, 189 U. S. 86, 23 Sup. Ct. 611, 47 L. Ed. 721.

What classes are excluded: Alien anarchists; U. S. v. Williams, 194 U. S. 279, 24 Sup. Ct. 719, 48 L. Ed. 979; all idiots, insane persons, paupers, or persons likely to become a public charge, persons suffering from a loathsome disease, persons who have been convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, and also any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes or to the class of contract laborers; 26 Stat. L. 1084, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1294; Kaoru Yamataya v. Fisher, 189 U. S. 86, 23 Sup. Ct. 611, 47 L. As to the exclusion of Chinese and Japanese, see those titles.

As to the nature of an alien's relation to the government, see ALLEGIANCE.

It is unlawful for any alien person or corporation to acquire, hold or own real estate or any interest therein in any of the territories of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by inheritance or in good faith in the ordinary course of justice in the collection of debts, except where the right to hold and dispose of lands in the United States is secured by existing treaties with such foreign countries. Corporations of which more than twenty per cent. of the stock is held by aliens come within the same category;

24 U. S. Stat. L. 476; 1 R. S. Suppl. p. 556.

Foreign governments and their representatives may own real estate for legations or residences in the District of Columbia; 1 R. S. Suppl. 582.

An alien has a right to acquire personal estate, make and enforce contracts in relation to the same; he is protected from injuries and wrongs to his person and property; he may sue and be sued; 7 Co. 17; Dyer 2 b; Judd v. Lawrence, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 531; Slatter v. Carroll, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 582; Taylor v. Carpenter, 2 Woodb. & M. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 13,785; De Lavenga v. Williams, 5 Sawy. 573, Fed. Cas. E. 258, 1 Ann. Cas. 196. A state may debar an alien from holding stock in its corporations or admit him to that privilege on such terms as it may prescribe; State v. Ins. Co., 70 Conn. 590, 40 Atl. 465, 66 Am. St. Rep. 138.

He may be an executor or administrator unless prohibited by statute; Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309; 1 Schouler's Ex'rs, 270, 537; Carthey v. Webb, 6 N. C. 268.

Discrimination in favor of local creditors is not unconstitutional where the effect of judgment in favor of an alien creditor would be to remove a fund to a foreign country there to be administered in favor of foreign creditors; The Disconto Gesellschaft v. Umbreit, 208 U. S. 570, 28 Sup. Ct. 337, 52 L. Ed. 625. See 21 H. L. R. 537.

In England no alien can own a British ship or any share of one. He has no legal remedy in respect of an act of state. He will not be heard in an English court of law to complain of the acts of the English government. He has the protection of the laws of England against all private persons who do him an injury, but between him and the servants of the Crown, the laws are silent; 18 L. Q. Rev. 47.

See Pollock, Torts, as to what extent a resident alien is or ought to be protected against acts of state; See GOVERNMENTAL ACTS.

An alien may hold lands in Mexico, as a native, except that if within twenty leagues of the Northern frontier, he must have the consent of the government and if within five leagues of the coast, the consent of Congress; Taylor, Mex. Code, 1902, 313. The ordinary case of a sailor deserting while on shore leave is not comprehended by the provisions of the immigration act of March 3, 1903, making it the duty of any officer in charge of any vessel bringing an alien to the United States to adopt precautions to prevent the landing of such alien; Taylor v. U. S., 207 U. S. 120, 28 Sup. Ct. 53, 52 L. Ed. 130.

An alien, even after being naturalized, is ineligible to the office of president of the United States, and in some states, as in New York, to that of governor; he cannot be a member of Congress till the expiration of seven years after his naturalization. An alien can exercise no political rights whatever; he cannot, therefore, vote at any political election, fill any office, or serve as a juror. See Bryce, Am. Com.; Collins v. Evans, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 333. The disabilities of aliens may be removed and they may become citizens, under the provisions of the acts of Congress.

As to their right to bring actions for death by wrongful act, see DEATH. See CHINESE; DEPORTATION; IMMIGRATION; JAPANESE; CITIZEN; NATURALIZATION; TREATY; EXPATRIATION; PARTIES.

ALIEN ENEMY. One who owes allegiance to the adverse belligerent. 1 Kent 73.

He who owes a temporary but not a permanent allegiance is an alien enemy in respect to acts done during such temporary allegiance only; and when his allegiance terminates, his hostile character terminates also; 1 B. & P. 163.

Alien enemies are said to have no rights, no privileges, unless by the king's special favor, during time of war; 1 Bla. Com. 372; Bynkershoek 195; 8 Term 186. But the tendency of modern law is to give them protection for person and property until ordered out of the country. If resident within the country, they may sue and be sued; 2 Kent 63; Clarke v. Morey, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 69; Russel v. Skipwith, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 241; Zacharie v. Godfrey, 50 Ill. 186, 99 Am. Dec. 506; they may be sued as nonresident defendants; McVeigh v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 259, 20 L. Ed. 80; Dorsey v. Kyle, 30 Md. 512, 96 Am. Dec. 617; and may be served by publication, even though they had no actual notice, being within the hostile lines; Dorsey v. Thompson, 37 Md. 25. Partnership with a foreigner is dissolved by the same event that makes him an alien enemy; Hanger v. Abbott, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 532, 18 L. Ed. 939. See WAR.

ALIEN AND SEDITION LAWS. See SEDITION.

ALIENAGE. The condition or state of an alien.

ALIENATE. To convey; to transfer. Co. Litt. 118 b. Alien is very commonly used in the same sense; 1 Washb. R. P. 53.

ALIENATION. The transfer of the property and possession of lands, tenements, or other things, from one person to another. Termes de la Ley.

It is particularly applied to absolute conveyances of real property; Conover v. Ins. Co., 1 N. Y. 290, 294. See CONVEYANCE; DEED.

By matter of record may be: Private acts of the legislature; grants, patents of lands, fines, common recovery. See CONVEYANCE; DEED; GRANT; FINE; COMMON RECOVERY; DEVISE; WILL.

In Medical Jurisprudence. A generic term denoting the different kinds of aberration of the human understanding. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 535. See INSANITY.

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS. The rank and condition of the defendant cannot be considered in assessing damages, though his occupation and perhaps his social position may be shown; Bailey v. Bailey, 94 Ia. 598, 63 N. W. 341; and evidence of the condition of defendant as to means is not admissible. Such evidence must be confined to general reputation and not extended to particulars; Kniffen v. McConnell, 30 N. Y. 285; Chellis v. Chapman, 125 N. Y. 214, 26 N. E. 308, 11 L. R. A. 784; 2 Fost. & F. 160. In other cases it is said that "evidence of the defendant's property was admissible to show the extent of the injury"; Lawrence v. Cooke, 56 Me. 187, 96 Am. Dec. 443; Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346, 4 N. W. 8, 36 Am. Rep. 442; Allen v. Baker, 86 N. C. 91, 41 Am. Rep. 444.

See ENTICE.

ALIENATION OFFICE. An office in England to which all writs of covenants and entries were carried for the recovery of fines levied thereon.

ALIENEE. One to whom an alienation is made.

ALIENI GENERIS (Lat.). Of another kind.

ALIENI JURIS (Lat.). Subject to the authority of another. An infant who is under the authority of his father, or guardian, and a wife under the power of her husband, are said to be alieni juris. See SUI JURIS.

ALIENIGENA (Lat.). One of foreign birth; an alien. 7 Coke 31.

ALIENOR. He who makes a grant or alienation.

ALIGNMENT. The act of laying out or adjusting a line. The state of being so laid out or adjusted. The ground plan of a railway or other road or work as distinguished from its profile or gradients. Village of Chester v. Leonard, 68 Conn. 495, 37 Atl. 397.

ALIMENT. In Scotch Law. To support; to provide with necessities. Paterson, Comp. §§ 845, 850.

Maintenance; support; an allowance from the husband's estate for the support of the wife. Paterson, Comp. § 893.

In Civil Law. Food and other things necessary to the support of life; money allowed for the purpose of procuring these. Dig. 50. 16. 43.

In Common Law. To supply with necessities. Purcell v. Purcell, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 194.

ALIMENTA (Lat. alere, to support). Things necessary to sustain life.

Under the term are included food, clothing, and a house; water also, it is said, in those regions where water is sold; Calvinus, Lex.; Dig. 50. 16. 43.

ALIMONY. The allowance which a husband by order of court pays to his wife, living separate from him, for her maintenance. 2 Bish. Marr. & D. 351; Chase v. Chase, 55 Me. 21; Odom v. Odom, 36 Ga. 286.

It is also commonly used as equally applicable to all allowances, whether annual or in gross, made to a wife upon a decree of divorce. Burrows v. Purple, 107 Mass. 432; Parsons v. Parsons, 9 N. H. 309, 32 Am. Dec. 362; Buckminster v. Buckminster, 38 Vt. 248, 88 Am. Dec. 652; Hedrick v. Hedrick, 28 Ind. 291.

Alimony pendente lite is that ordered during the pendency of a suit in divorce.

Permanent alimony is that ordered for the use of the wife after the termination of the suit for divorce during their joint lives.

To entitle a wife to permanent alimony, the following conditions must be complied with:

First, a legal and valid marriage must be proved; 1 Rob. Eccl. 484; Purcell v. Purcell, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 507; McGee v. McGee, 10 Ga. 477; 5 Sess. Cas. N. S. Sc. 1288; Bowman v. Bowman, 24 Ill. App. 165. It will not be allowed where the marriage is denied; Hite v. Hite, 124 Cal. 389, 57 Pac. 227, 45 L. R. A. 793, 71 Am. St. Rep. 82; McKenna v. McKenna, 70 Ill. App. 340; Vreeland v. Vreeland, 18 N. J. Eq. 43; Collins v. Collins, 71 N. Y. 269; but see Schonwald v. Schonwald, 62 N. C. 219. But it has been held that where there had been a marriage which was void because the woman had another husband, alimony would be allowed; Cray v. Cray, 32 N. J. Eq. 25. So where there had been marriage ceremony, but its legality was questioned; Reifschneider v. Reifschneider, 241 Ill. 92, 89 N. E. 255. In Brinkley v. Brinkley, 50 N. Y. 184, 10 Am. Rep. 460, it was held that where the marriage is denied, the court will pass upon the question for the purpose of an application for alimony, and grant it if there is a fair presumption of marriage.

Second, by the common law the relation of husband and wife must continue to subsist; for which reason no alimony could be awarded upon a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, or a sentence of nullity; 1 Lee, Eccl. 621; Fischli v. Fischli, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 360, 12 Am. Dec. 251; Davol v. Davol, 13 Mass. 264; Jones v. Jones, 18 Me. 308, 36 Am. Dec. 723; Holmes v. Holmes, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 295; Crane v. Meginnis, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 463, 19 Am. Dec. 237; Richardson v. Wilson, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 67. This rule, however, has been very generally changed by statute in this country; 2 Bish. M. & D. § 376.

Third, the wife must be separated from the bed and board of her husband (or by divorce a vinculo matrimonii) by judicial decree; voluntary separation, for whatever cause, is insufficient. And, as a general rule, the alimony must be awarded by the same decree which grants the separation, or at least in the same suit, it not being generally competent to maintain a subsequent and independent suit for that purpose; Lawson v. Shotwell, 27 Miss. 630; Bankston v. Bankston, id. 692; Lyon v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 185; Fischli v. Fischli, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 360, 12 Am. Dec. 251; Richardson v. Wilson, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 67. The right to alimony need not be determined in the suit for divorce, if such right is reserved in the judgment; Galusha v. Galusha, 138 N. Y. 272, 33 N. E. 1062.

Fourth, the wife must not be the guilty party; Palmer v. Palmer, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 276; Dailey v. Dailey, Wright (Ohio) 514; Pence v. Pence, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 496; Lovett v. Lovett, 11 Ala. 763; Sheafe v. Sheafe, 24 N. H. 564; Hickling v. Hickling, 40 Ill. App. 73; Spaulding v. Spaulding, 133 Ind. 122, 32 N. E. 224, 36 Am. St. Rep. 534; but in some states there are statutes in terms which permit the court, in its discretion, to decree alimony to the guilty wife; 2 Bish. M. & D. 378; [1892] Prob. Div. 1; and continued adultery of wife after divorce, is no ground for vacating a previous order allowing her permanent alimony; Cole v. Cole, 35 Ill. App. 544; Brooks v. Brooks, 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 115.

It is said to be usual in a divorce decree in England to add the words dum sola et casta (while she remains unmarried and chaste), "no doubt for the reason that it would seem a parody of justice to suggest that a woman should lose her allowance if she marries again, but should not lose it if she lives with a man as his mistress. When indeed the reputation of the wife is spotless, these words may be omitted." [1898] P. 138.

It may be that a divorce is refused and yet alimony allowed to the wife, but not if the husband is willing to be reconciled on proper terms and has not abandoned her; Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 307.

In California, a divorce having been decreed against a non-resident, an order for alimony and for custody of children was vacated on appeal; 30 Am. Law Rev. 604, with elaborate discussion and criticism of this ruling. A decree for it cannot be made against a defendant who is not served with process for appearance, does not appear, or has no property within control of the court; Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641. Whether it can be had after a final decree in the divorce case which is silent as to it, except through amendment of decree, quare; id.

Where a judgment for alimony is rendered in a court of one state, its enforcement in another, according to the laws of the latter, is not a deprivation of property without due process of law; Lynde v. Lynde, 181 U. S. 183, 21 Sup. Ct. 555, 45 L. Ed. 810.

Alimony pendente lite is granted much more freely than permanent alimony, it being very much a matter of course to allow the former, unless the wife has sufficient separate property, upon the institution of a suit; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 773; 1 Curt. Eccl. 444; Logan v. Logan, 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 142; Collins v. Collins, 2 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 9; Rose v. Rose, 11 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 166; Harding v. Harding, 40 Ill. App. 202; either for the purpose of obtaining a separation from bed and board; Smith v. Smith, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 255; a divorce a vinculo matrimonii; Ryan v. Ryan, 9 Mo. 539; Jones v. Jones, 18 Me. 308, 36 Am. Dec. 723; Hewitt v. Hewitt, 1 Bland Ch. (Md.) 101; or a sentence of nullity, and whether the wife is plaintiff or defendant. The reason is that it is improper for the parties to live in matrimonial cohabitation during the pendency of such a suit, whatever may be its final result. She need only show probable ground for divorce to entitle her to alimony; Wooley v. Wooley, 24 Ill. App. 431. Upon the same principle, the husband who has all the money, while the wife has none, is bound to furnish her, whether plaintiff or defendant, with the means to defray her expenses in the suit; Jones v. Jones, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 146; Story v. Story, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 421; Daiger v. Daiger, 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 335; Tayman v. Tayman, 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 393. See Taylor v. Taylor, 46 N. C. 528. This alimony ceases as soon as the fault of the wife is finally determined; Dawson v. Dawson, 37 Mo. App. 207.

It has been held that a court of chancery has jurisdiction to grant alimony to a wife when the conduct of the husband renders it unsafe for her to live with him or he turns her out of doors; Almond v. Almond, 4 Rand. (Va.) 662, 15 Am. Dec. 781; but there is a conflict of decisions as to whether, without a statute, an independent suit for alimony can be sustained; see 12 Am. Dec. 257, note, where the cases supporting both views are collected. Is not a matter of independent claim or right, but is incidental to a suit for divorce or other relief between husband and wife; Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641.

Alimony is not a sum of money nor a specific proportion of the husband's estate given absolutely to the wife, but it is a continuous allotment of sums payable at regular intervals, for her support from year to year; Wallingsford v. Wallingsford, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 485; Parsons v. Parsons, 9 N. H. 309, 32 Am. Dec. 362; Clark v. Clark, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 85; Miller v. Miller, 75 N. C. 70; Phelan v. Phelan, 12 Fla. 449; Crain v. Cavanaugh, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 109; but in some states statutory allowances of a gross sum have been given to the wife under the name of alimony; see Parsons v. Parsons, 9 N. H. 309, 32 Am. Dec. 362; Lyon v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 185; Herron v. Herron, 47 Ohio St. 544, 25 N. E. 420, 9 L. R. A. 667, 21 Am. St. Rep. 854; Burrows v. Purple, 107 Mass. 428; McClung v. McClung, 40 Mich. 493; Ross v. Ross, 78 Ill. 402; Williams v. Williams, 36 Wis. 362; Miller v. Clark, 23 Ind. 370; Blankenship v. Blankenship, 19 Kan. 159; Ex parte Spencer, 83 Cal. 460, 23 Pac. 395, 17 Am. St. Rep. 266. This would be enforced by the courts; Wilson v. Hinman, 182 N. Y. 408, 75 N. E. 236, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, citing to the same effect Storey v. Storey, 125 Ill. 608, 18 N. E. 329, 1 L. R. A. 320, 8 Am. St. Rep. 417; followed in Whitney v. Warehouse Co., 183 Fed. 678, 106 C. C. A. 28; if in gross it should not ordinarily exceed one-half the husband's estate; McCartin v. McCartin, 37 Mo. App. 471. It must secure to her as wife a maintenance separate from her husband; an absolute title in specific property, or a sale of a part of the husband's estate for her use, cannot be decreed or confirmed to her as alimony; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 322; Maguire v. Maguire, 7 Dana (Ky.) 181; Wallingsford v. Wallingsford, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 485; Purcell v. Purcell, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 507; Rogers v. Vines, 28 N. C. 293. Nor is alimony regarded, in any general sense, as the separate property of the wife. Hence she can neither alienate nor charge it; Romaine v. Chauncey, 60 Hun 477, 15 N. Y. Supp. 198; if she suffers it to remain in arrear for more than one year, it has been held that she cannot generally recover such arrears; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 322; if she saves anything from her annual allowance, upon her death it will go to her husband; Clark v. Clark, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 85; Sterling v. Sterling, 12 Ga. 201; if there are any arrears at the time of her death, they cannot be recovered by her executors; 8 Sim. 321; 8 Term 545; Clark v. Clark, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 85; as the husband is only bound to support his wife during his own life, her right to alimony ceases with his death; Smith v. Smith, 1 Root (Conn.) 349; Sloan v. Cox, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 75; Jamison v. Jamison, 4 Md. Ch. Dec. 289; Wilson v. Hinman, 182 N. Y. 408, 75 N. E. 236, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820; Wagoner v. Wagoner, 132 Mich. 343, 93 N. W. 889; Lockwood v. Krum, 34 Ohio St. 1; Whitney v. Elevator & Warehouse Co., 183 Fed. 678, 106 C. C. A. 28; Martin v. Martin, 33 W. Va. 695, 11 S. E. 12; Storey v. Storey, 23 Ill. App. 558; Stahl v. Stahl, 114 Ill. 375, 2 N. E. 160; Casteel v. Casteel, 38 Ark. 477; and see Miller v. Miller, 64 Me. 484; In re Lawton, 12 R. I. 210; and it ceases upon reconciliation and cohabitation. The cases upon the effect of the husband's death upon a decree for alimony involve the question whether alimony is to be considered merely as support to which the wife is entitled by virtue of the marital relation, or as her interest in the joint property. They are collected in a note in 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 232, where it is said that they cannot be satisfactorily harmonized on either theory.

Its amount is liable at any time to be increased or diminished at the discretion of the court; 8 Sim. 315; Clark v. Clark, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 85; and the court may insert a provision in the decree allowing any interested party thereafter to apply, on account of changed conditions, for a modification of the amount allowed; Stahl v. Stahl, 59 Hun 621, 12 N. Y. Supp. 854. If, however, the right is not reserved in the decree or given by statute, the amount cannot subsequently be varied in the case of absolute divorce; Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 37 Pac. 770, 43 Am. St. Rep. 70; Walker v. Walker, 155 N. Y. 77, 49 N. E. 663; otherwise under a decree for separation; Taylor v. Taylor, 93 N. C. 418, 53 Am. Rep. 460. And where a statute authorizes the amount decreed for alimony to be changed, it cannot operate retrospectively, as thereby it would deprive the person of property without due process of law; Livingston v. Livingston, 173 N. Y. 377, 66 N. E. 123, 61 L. R. A. 800, 93 Am. St. Rep. 600.

Equity has power to modify provisions as to alimony and to retain jurisdiction over such decrees. Where an agreement between the parties provides for something more than alimony (as where it binds the husband to pay the wife a certain sum until her death, irrespective of whether she survives him or not, and transfers certain property to her absolutely and to trustees to pay her an allowance during her life and such agreement is embodied in the divorce decree), equity should not afterwards destroy the agreement although the wife marries again; but three judges dissented on the ground that the insertion of such an agreement in the decree was improper and that the decree should be set aside, the wife retaining her rights at law for the breach of the agreement; Emerson v. Emerson, 120 Md. 584, 87 Atl. 1033.

The preceding observations respecting the nature and incidents of alimony should be received with some caution in this country, where the subject is so largely regulated by statute; Burr v. Burr, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 20; id., 7 Hill (N. Y.) 207. It is said that alimony cannot be regarded as a debt owing from a husband to wife; Barclay v. Barclay, 184 Ill. 375, 56 N. E. 636, 51 L. R. A. 351; but that it is rather to be considered as a penalty imposed for the failure to perform a duty; Wetmore v. Markoe, 196 U. S. 74, 25 Sup. Ct. 172, 49 L. Ed. 390, 2 Ann. Cas. 265; Romaine v. Chauncey, 129 N. Y. 566, 29 N. E. 826, 14 L. R. A. 712, 26 Am. St. Rep. 544. Nor is it a debt within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition against imprisonment for debt; State v. Cook, 66 Ohio St. 566, 64 N. E. 567, 58 L. R. A. 625.

And a discharge in bankruptcy does not bar the collection of arrears of alimony and the allowance for the support of minor children; Dunbar v. Dunbar, 190 U. S. 340, 23 Sup. Ct. 757, 47 L. Ed. 1084; Wetmore v. Markoe, 196 U. S. 68, 25 Sup. Ct. 172, 49 L. Ed. 390, 2 Ann. Cas. 265; Deen v. Bloomer, 191 Ill. 416, 61 N. E. 131; and see Beach v. Beach, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 181; contra, Arrington v. Arrington, 131 N. C. 143, 42 S. E. 554, 92 Am. St. Rep. 769.

The amount to be awarded depends upon a great variety of considerations and is governed by no fixed rules; Ricketts v. Ricketts, 4 Gill (Md.) 105; Burr v. Burr, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 207; Richmond v. Richmond, 2 N. J. Eq. 90; McGee v. McGee, 10 Ga. 477; Muir v. Muir, 133 Ky. 125, 92 S. W. 314, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1355, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909. The ability of the husband, however, is a circumstance of more importance than the necessity of the wife, especially as regards permanent alimony; and in estimating his ability his entire income will be taken into consideration, whether it is derived from his property or his personal exertions; 3 Curt. Eccl. 3, 41; McCrocklin v. McCrocklin, 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 370; Bursler v. Bursler, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 427; Batley v. Batley, 1 R. I. 212; Small v. Small, 28 Neb. 843, 45 N. W. 248; McGrady v. McGrady, 48 Mo. App. 668.

Future expectations may be taken into consideration; Cralle v. Cralle, 84 Va. 198, 6 S. E. 12; Horning v. Horning, 107 Mich. 587, 65 N. W. 555; Muir v. Muir, 133 Ky. 125, 92 S. W. 314, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909 and note. But if the wife has separate property; 2 Phill. 40; or derives income from her personal exertions, this will also be taken into account. If she has sufficient means to support herself in the rank of life in which she moved, she is entitled to no alimony; Stevens v. Stevens, 49 Mich. 504, 13 N. W. 835; Miller v. Miller, 75 N. C. 70; 2 Hagg. Consis. 203. The method of computation is, to add the wife's annual income to her husband's; consider what, under all the circumstances, should be allowed her out of the aggregate; then from the sum so determined deduct her separate income, and the remainder will be the annual allowance to be made her. There are various other circumstances, however, beside the husband's ability, to be taken into consideration: as, whether the bulk of the property came from the wife, or belonged originally to the husband; Fishli v. Fishli, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 337; Robbins v. Robbins, 101 Ill. 416; or was accumulated by the joint exertions of both, subsequent to the marriage; Lovett v. Lovett, 11 Ala. 763; Jeans v. Jeans, 2 Harr. (Del.) 142; whether there are children to be supported and educated, and upon whom their support and education devolves; Amos v. Amos, 4 N. J. Eq. 171; Fishli v. Fishli, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 337; McGee v. McGee, 10 Ga. 477; Emerson v. Emerson, 68

Hun (N. Y.) 37, 22 N. Y. Supp. 684; Parkhurst v. Race, 100 Ill. 570; Call v. Call, 65 Me. 407; Halleman v. Halleman, 65 Ga. 476; the nature and extent of the husband's delictum; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 657; Turrel v. Turrel, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 391; Williams v. Williams, 4 Dec. Eq. (S. C.) 183; Sheafe v. Sheafe, 24 N. H. 564; the demeanor and conduct of the wife towards the husband who desires cohabitation; Burr v. Burr, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 207; Dejarnet v. Dejarnet, 5 Dana (Ky.) 499; Stewartson v. Stewartson, 15 Ill. 145; Jones v. Jones, 95 Ala. 443, 11 South. 11, 18 L. R. A. 95; the condition in life, place of residence, health, and employment of the husband, as demanding a larger or smaller sum for his own support; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 526, 532; the condition in life, circumstances, health, place of residence, and consequent necessary expenditures of the wife; Bursler v. Bursler, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 427; Ricketts v. Ricketts, 4 Gill (Md.) 105; Lovett v. Lovett, 11 Ala. 763; the age of the parties; Miller v. Miller, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 91; Ricketts v. Ricketts, 4 Gill (Md.) 105; Schlosser v. Schlosser, 29 Ind. 488; the ability of the husband to work; Canine v. Canine, 16 S. W. 367, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 124; Snedager v. Kincaid, 60 S. W. 522, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1347; Furth v. Furth (N. J.) 39 Atl. 128; and whatever other circumstances may address themselves to a sound judicial discretion.

So far as any general rule can be deduced from the decisions and practice of the courts, the proportion of the joint income to be awarded for permanent alimony is said to range from one-half, where the property came from the wife (2 Phill. 235), to one-third, which is the usual amount; 29 L. J. Mat. Cas. 150; Ricketts v. Ricketts, 4 Gill (Md.) 105; Forrest v. Forrest, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 640; Musselman v. Musselman, 44 Ind. 106; Turner v. Turner, 44 Ala. 437; or even less; Draper v. Draper, 68 Ill. 17; Garner v. Garner, 38 Ind. 139. In case of alimony pendente lite, it is not usual to allow more than about one-fifth, after deducting the wife's separate income; 2 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. § 945; and generally a less proportion will be allowed out of a large estate than a small one; for, though no such rule exists in respect to permanent alimony, there may be good reasons for giving less where the question is on alimony during the suit; when the wife should live in seclusion, and needs only a comfortable subsistence; 2 Phill. Eccl. 40. See Llamosas v. Llamosas, 4 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 574; Briggs v. Briggs, 36 Ia. 383; Harrell v. Harrell, 39 Ind. 185; Williams v. Williams, 29 Wis. 517.

Courts will take judicial notice that it is not infrequent in divorce proceedings for parties to agree on details of alimony; Whitney v. Warehouse Co., 183 Fed. 678, 106 C. C. A. 28.

An action upon a decree for alimony may be maintained in a court of another state where the amount is fixed and presently due and enforceable, but not when payable in future instalments; Hunt v. Monroe, 32 Utah, 428, 91 Pac. 269, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249, where the cases are critically reviewed; Page v. Page, 189 Mass. 85, 75 N. E. 92, 4 Ann. Cas. 296; contra, where there is power to change the decree for payments; Mayer v. Mayer, 154 Mich. 386, 117 N. W. 890, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245, 129 Am. St. Rep. 477. Generally speaking, when a decree is rendered for alimony payable in instalments, the right to such instalments becomes absolute and vested upon becoming due and is protected by the full faith and credit clause of the United States constitution, provided, that no modification of the decree has been made prior to the maturity of the instalments. This general rule does not obtain where, by the law of the state in which such judgment is rendered, the right to such future alimony is discretionary with the court which made the decree, to such an extent that no absolute or vested right attaches to receive the instalments ordered to be paid; even although no application to annul or modify the decree in respect to alimony had been made prior to the instalments becoming due; Sistare v. Sistare, 218 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 682, 54 L. Ed. 905, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068, 20 Ann. Cas. 1061.

Though an action on a decree for alimony rendered in one state may be maintained in another state if the amount payable is fixed and presently due, yet a decree for alimony becoming due in the future and payable in instalments is not a final decree enforceable in another state, within the full faith and credit clause, until the court which rendered it fixes the specific amount due; Hunt v. Monroe, 32 Utah, 428, 91 Pac. 269, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249; Israel v. Israel, 148 Fed. 576, 79 C. C. A. 32, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1168, 8 Ann. Cas. 697.

Although judgments are, by statute, liens on the defendant's real estate, a decree for alimony payable by instalments does not create a lien unless the record affirmatively shows that the court so intended; Scott v. Scott, 80 Kan. 489, 103 Pac. 1005, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132, 133 Am. St. Rep. 217, 18 Ann. Cas. 564, and note. It is held that a decree for alimony in gross operates as a lien on the husband's lands; Holmes v. Holmes, 29 N. J. Eq. 9; Coffman v. Finney, 65 Ohio St. 61, 61 N. E. 155, 55 L. R. A. 794; so of a monthly allowance; Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 Mont. 449, 93 Pac. 648, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976; but it is held that in the absence of a statute there is no lien; Kerr v. Kerr, 216 Pa. 641, 66 Atl. 107, 9 Ann. Cas. 89; Swansen v. Swansen, 12 Neb. 210, 10 N. W. 713; Kurtz v. Kurtz, 38 Ark. 119; In re Lawton, 12 R. I. 210; Campbell v. Trosper, 108 Ky. 602, 57 S. W. 245. A New York decree di-reeling the husband to mortgage his New Jersey lands to secure alimony will not be enforced in New Jersey; Bullock v. Bullock, 52 N. J. Eq. 561, 30 Atl. 676, 27 L. R. A. 213, 46 Am. St. Rep. 528.

Alimony, suit money and counsel fees cannot be allowed to the husband; State v. Templeton, 18 N. D. 525, 123 N. W. 283, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 234; Hoagland v. Hoagland, 19 Utah 103, 57 Pac. 20. Some allowance was made in Casey v. Casey, 116 Ia. 655, 88 N. W. 937, and 5 Quebec Pr. Rep. 137, under peculiar circumstances.

For an outside agreement for support of wife, not made part of a decree, see Dunbar v. Dunbar, 190 U. S. 340, 23 Sup. Ct. 757, 47 L. Ed. 1084.

ALIO INTUITU. Under a different aspect; with respect to another case or condition. 6 M. & S. 231. See DIVERSO INTUITU.

ALITER (Lat.). Otherwise; as otherwise held or decided.

ALIUNDE (Lat.). From another place. Evidence aliunde (i. e. from without the will) may be received to explain an ambiguity in a will. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 291. The word is also used in the same sense with respect to the admission of evidence to modify or explain other documents, generally treated as conclusive.

ALL. Completely, wholly, the whole amount, quantity or number.

It is frequently used in the sense of "each" or "every one of;" Sherburne v. Sischo, 143 Mass. 442, 9 N. E. 797; Towle v. Delano, 144 Mass. 100, 10 N. E. 769; 54 L. J. Q. B. 539; and is a general rather than a universal term, to be understood in one sense or the other according to the demands of sound reason; Kieffer v. Ehler, 18 Pa. 391; 9 Ves. Jr. 137. As to its use in a will, see DEVISE.

ALL AND SINGULAR. All without exception.

ALL FAULTS. A term in common use in the trade. A sale of goods with "all faults," in the absence of fraud on the part of the vendor, covers all such faults and defects as are not inconsistent with the identity of the goods as the goods described; Whitney v. Boardman, 118 Mass. 242; 5 B. & Ald. 240.

ALL FOURS. A metaphorical expression, signifying that a case agrees in all its circumstances with another.

ALLEGATA. A word which the emperors formerly signed at the bottom of their rescripts and constitutions; under other instruments they usually wrote signata or testata. Encyc. Lond.

ALLEGATA ET PROBATA (Lat. things alleged and proved). The allegations made by a party to a suit, and the proof adduced in their support.

It is a general rule of evidence that the allegata and probata must correspond; that is, the proof must at least be sufficiently extensive to cover all the allegations of the party which are material; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 51; The Sarah Ann, 2 Sumn. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 12,342; White v. Noland, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 636; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 177, 9 L. Ed. 388.

ALLEGATION. The assertion, declaration, or statement of a party of what he can prove.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The statement of the facts intended to be relied on in support of a contested suit.

It is applied either to the libel, or to the answer of the respondent setting forth new facts, the latter being, however, generally called the defensive allegation. See 1 Browne, Civ. Law, 472, 473, n.

ALLEGATION OF FACULTIES. A statement made by the wife of the property of her husband, for the purpose of obtaining alimony. Lovett v. Lovett, 11 Ala. 763; Wright v. Wright, 3 Tex. 168.

To such an allegation the husband makes answer, upon which the amount of alimony is determined; 2 Lee, Eccl. 593; 3 Phill. Eccl. 387; or she may produce other proof, if necessary in consequence of his failure to make a full and complete disclosure; 2 Hagg. Cons. 199; 2 Bish. M. & Div. § 1082.

ALLEGIANCE. The tie which binds the citizen to the government, in return for the protection which the government affords him. The duty which the subject owes to the sovereign, correlative with the protection received.

It is a comparatively modern corruption of ligeance (ligeantia), which is derived from liege (ligius), meaning absolute or unqualified. It signified originally liege fealty, i. e. absolute and unqualified fealty. 18 L. Q. Rev. 47.

Acquired allegiance is that binding a citizen who was born an alien, but has been naturalized.

Local or actual allegiance is that which is due from an alien while resident in a country in return for the protection afforded by the government. From this are excepted foreign sovereigns and their representatives, naval and armed forces when permitted to remain in or pass through the country or its waters.

Natural allegiance is that which results from the birth of a person within the territory and under the obedience of the government. 2 Kent 42.

Allegiance may be an absolute and permanent obligation, or it may be a qualified and temporary one; the citizen or subject owes the former to his government or sovereign, until by some act he distinctly renounces it, whilst the alien domiciled in the country owes a temporary and local allegiance continuing during such residence; Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 154, 21 L. Ed. 426.

At common law, in England and America, natural allegiance could not be renounced except by permission of the government to which it was due; 1 Bla. Com. 370, 371; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 81; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 99, 7 L. Ed. 617; Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 242, 7 L. Ed. 666; but see 8 Op. Att.-Gen. U. S. 139; 9 id. 356. Held to be the law of Great Britain in 1868; Cockb. Nationality. After many negotiations between the two countries, the rule has been changed in the United States by act of July 27, 1868, and in England by act of May 14, 1870. Whether natural allegiance revives upon the return of the citizen to the country of his allegiance is an open question; Whart. Conf. L. § 6. See Cockb. Nationality; Webster, Citizenship; Webster, Naturalization; 2 Whart. Int. L. Dig. ch. vii.; Whart. Conf. L.; Lawrence's Wheat. Int. L. App. It is said to be due to the king in his political, not his personal, capacity; L. R. 17 Q. B. D. 54, quoted in U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 663, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; and so in this country "it is a political obligation" depending not on ownership of land, but on the enjoyment of the protection of government; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 492; and it "binds the citizen to the observance of all laws" of his own sovereign; Adams v. People, 1 N. Y. 173. See ALIEN; NATURALIZATION; EXPATRIATION.

ALLEGING DIMINUTION. See DIMINUTION OF THE RECORD.

ALLEVIARE. To levy or pay an accustomed fine. Cowell.

ALLEY. See STREET.

ALLIANCE. The union or connection of two persons or families by marriage; affinity.

In International Law. A contract, treaty, or league between two or more sovereigns or states, made for purposes of aggression or defence.

Defensive alliances are those in which a nation agrees to defend her ally in case the latter is attacked.

Offensive alliances are those in which nations unite for the purpose of making an attack, or jointly waging the war against another nation.

The term is also used in a wider sense, embracing unions for objects of common interest to the contracting parties, as the "Holy Alliance" entered into in 1815 by Prussia, Austria and Russia for the purpose of counteracting the revolutionary movement in the interest of political liberalism.

ALLISION. Running one vessel against another.

To be distinguished from collision, which denotes the running of two vessels against each other.

The distinction is not very carefully observed, but collision is used to denote cases strictly of allision.

ALLOCATIO NE FACIENDA. In English Law. A writ directed to the lord treasurer and barons of the exchequer, commanding that an allowance be made to an accountant for such moneys as he has lawfully expended in his office.

ALLOCATION. An allowance upon an account in the English Exchequer. Cowell. Placing or adding to a thing. Encyc. Lond.

ALLOCATO COMITATU. A new writ of exigent, allowed before any other county court, issued on the former not being fully served or complied with. Fitz. Exigent 14.

ALLOCATUR (Lat., it is allowed).

A Latin word formerly used to denote that a writ or order was allowed. See State v. Vanderveer, 7 N. J. L. 38.

A word denoting the allowance by a master or prothonotary of a bill referred for his consideration, whether touching costs, damages, or matter of account. Lee, Dict.; Archb. Pr. 129.

Where an appeal can be taken only by permission of the court, it is said to be by special allocatur.

ALLOCATUR EXIGENT. A writ of exigent which issued in a process of outlawry, upon the sheriff's making return to the original exigent that there were not five county courts held between the teste of the original writ and the return day. 1 Tidd, Pr. 128.

ALLOCUTION. The formal address of the judge to the prisoner, asking him if he has anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced against him.

In case of conviction of an offence not capital the omission is not fatal and the judgment will not be reversed therefor; State v. Ball, 27 Mo. 324.

In England it was held error, "for it is a necessary question, because he may have a pardon to plead, or may move in arrest of judgment," and for that reason the attainer was reversed; 3 Salk. 358; 2 id. 630. But in this country it is not material "whether a pardon was produced before or after judgment, as no attainer or other such consequences result from a capital conviction here, which a pardon may not remove"; State v. Ball, 27 Mo. 324. Form of entry was: "And thereupon it is forthwith demanded of the said J. S., if he hath or knoweth anything to say why the said justices here ought not upon the premises and verdict aforesaid to proceed to judgment against him; who nothing further saith, unless as he had before said. Whereupon," etc. Arch. Cr. Pl. & Pr. (23d ed.) 226.

ALLODIAL. Held in alodium. See ALOD, where the more recent understanding of the meaning and the accepted spelling of these words are found.

ALLONGE (Fr.). A piece of paper annexed to a bill of exchange or promissory note, on which to write endorsements for which there is no room on the instrument itself. Pardessus, n. 343; Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 121, 151; Tied. on Com. Paper 264. See ENDORSEMENT.

ALLOTMENT. A share or portion; that which is allotted.

The division or distribution of land.

Allotment System. A system in England of assigning small portions of land, from the eighth of an acre to four or five acres, to be cultivated by day-laborers after their ordinary day's work. Brande.

Allotment Certificate. A document issued to an applicant for shares in a company or public loan announcing the number of shares allotted or assigned and the amounts and due dates of the calls or different payments to be made on the same. Where a letter withdrawing an application for shares was received after the shares had been allotted, but before the notice of allotment was mailed, the applicant was held entitled to have his name removed from the register of shareholders and to have the deposit returned; 81 L. T. R. 512. See SHAREHOLDER.

To constitute a public allotment of shares there must be an issue to persons other than those taking shares in payment of wares or for work done, or as a qualification for a seat on the board; 19 T. L. R. 614.

An allotment of shares is an appropriation by the directors of a company of shares to a particular person, but it does not necessarily create the status of membership; 80 L. T. 347.

ALLOTMENT NOTE. "A writing by a seaman, whereby he makes an assignment of part of his wages in favor of his wife, father or mother, grandfather or grandmother, brother or sister. Every allotment note must be in a form sanctioned by the Board of Trade. The allottee, that is the person in whose favor it is made, may recover the amount before justices of the peace." Moz. & Wh.

ALLOW. To sanction, either directly or indirectly; as opposed to merely suffering a thing to be done. [1894] 2 Q. B. 412. A claim is said to be allowed by a court.

To permit; Kearns v. Kearns, 107 Pa. 575; Doty v. Lawson, 14 Fed. 892; 3 H. & C. 75; to yield; Doty v. Lawson, 14 Fed. 892; to suffer, to tolerate; Gregory v. U. S., 17 Blatchf. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 5,803; to fix; Hinds v. Marmolejo, 60 Cal. 229; to substitute by way of compensation something for another; Glenn v. Glenn, 41 Ala. 571. I allow to give is equivalent to I intend to give; Harmon v. James, 7 Ind. 263; Hunter v. Stembridge, 12 Ga. 192; it is used as a synonym of intent by unlearned persons in wills; id.; it is also used as an equivalent of

I will; Ramsey v. Hanlon, 33 Fed. 425. In the National Banking Act, providing that interest may be taken at a rate "allowed by the laws of the state or territory," it means fixed; Hinds v. Marmolejo, 60 Cal. 229.

ALLOWANCE. A definite sum or quantity set apart or granted. The share or portion given to a married woman, child, trustee, etc. Smith v. Smith, 45 Ala. 264. It is said to include what is awarded to a trustee for expenses, etc., in addition to his legal fees; Downing v. Marshall, 37 N. Y. 380; or a perquisite to an officer in addition to his salary, as for room, fire or light; 14 Q. B. D. 735; 23 id. 66, 531. The term is ordinarily only another name for a gift or gratuity to a child or other dependent; Taylor v. Staples, 8 R. I. 170, 5 Am. Rep. 556.

The term is not properly used to express contractual relation or regular compensation, but applies rather to the case of voluntary action in favor of dependents, servants or the poor; Mangam v. City of Brooklyn, 98 N. Y. 585, 50 Am. Rep. 705, where the meaning of the word is discussed critically and at length. It has been used in a judge's certificate as the equivalent of settlement; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cone, 37 Kan. 567, 15 Pac. 499; or to express the approval of the court; Gildart's Heirs v. Starke, 1 How. (Miss.) 450.

ALLUVIO MARIS (Lat.). Soil formed by the washing-up of earth from the sea. Schultes, Aq. Rights 138.

ALLUVION. That increase of the earth on a bank of a river, or on the shore of the sea, by the force of the water, as by a current or by waves, or from its recession in a navigable lake, which is so gradual that no one can judge how much is added at each moment of time. Inst. l. 2, t. 1, § 20; 3 B. & C. 91; Ang. Watercourses 53; Trustees of Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 551; Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 58, 16 Am. Rep. 516; Gould, Waters § 155.

Conversely, where land is submerged by the gradual advance of the sea, the sovereign acquires the title to the part thereby covered and it ceases to belong to the former owner; Wilson v. Shiveley, 11 Or. 217, 4 Pac. 324; 5 Mees & W. 327, 4 C. P. D. 438; Trustees, etc., of Town of East Hampton v. Kirk, 84 N. Y. 218, 38 Am. Rep. 505.

The proprietor of the bank increased by alluvion is entitled to the addition, this being regarded as the equivalent for the loss he may sustain from the encroachment of the waters upon his land; Chapman v. Hoskins, 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 487; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 273, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Murry v. Sermon, 8 N. C. 56; Lamb v. Rickets, 11 Ohio, 311; Municipality No. 2 v. Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624; Handly v. Anthony, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 380, 5 L. Ed.

The increase is to be divided among riparian proprietors by the following rule: measure the whole extent of their ancient line on the river, and ascertain how many feet each proprietor owned on this line; divide the newly-formed river-line into equal parts, and appropriate to each proprietor as many of these parts as he owned feet on the old line, and then draw lines from the points at which the proprietors respectively bounded on the old to the points thus determined as the points of division on the newly-formed shore. In applying this rule, allowance must be made for projections and indentations in the old line; Inhabitants of Deerfield v. Pling Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276; *Emerson v. But sea-weed below low-water mark on the bed of a navigable river belongs to the public; Chapman v. Kimball, 9 Conn. 38, 21 Am. Dec. 707; Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 16 Am. Rep. 46; *Nudd v. ALLY. A nation which has entered into an alliance with another nation. 1 Kent 69.

A citizen or subject of one of two or more allied nations. 4 C. Rob. Adm. 251; 6 id. 205; Miller v. The Resolution, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 15, 1 L. Ed. 263; Dane, Abr. Index.

ALMANAC. A book or table containing a calendar of days, weeks, and months, to which various statistics are often added, such as the times of the rising and setting of the sun and moon, etc. Whewell.

The court will take judicial notice of an almanac; 3 Bla. Com. 333; State v. Morris, 47 Conn. 179; Munshower v. State, 55 Md. 11, 39 Am. Rep. 414; Reed v. Wilson, 41 N. J. L. 29; People v. Chee Kee, 61 Cal. 404.

ALMARIA. The archives, or, as they are sometimes styled, muniments of a church or library.

ALMOIN. Alms. See FRANKALMOIN.

ALMONER. One charged with the distribution of alms. The office was first instituted in religious houses and although formerly one of importance is now in England almost a sinecure. See LORD HIGH ALMONER.

ALMS. Any species of relief bestowed upon the poor.

That which is given by public authority for the relief of the poor. Shelf. Mortm. 802, note (X); Hayw. Elect. 263; 1 Dougl. El. Cas. 370; 2 id. 107. As to its meaning historically, see 1 Poll. & Maitl. 219.

ALMS FEE. Peter's pence; which see.

ALMSHOUSE. A house for the publicly supported paupers of a city or county. People v. City of New York, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 311. In England an almshouse is not synonymous with a workhouse or poorhouse, being supported by private endowment.

ALNAGER (spelled also Ulnager). A public sworn officer of the king, who, by himself or his deputy, looks to the assize of woollen cloth made throughout the land, and to the putting on the seals for that purpose ordained. Statute 17 Ric. II. c. 2; Cowell; Blount; Termes de la Ley.

ALOD, ALODIUM. It is a term used in opposition to feodum or fief, which means property, the use of which was bestowed upon another by the proprietor, on condition that the grantee should perform certain services for the grantor, and upon the failure of which the property should revert to the original possessor. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. 45.

A kind of tenure in England, not infrequently mentioned in Domesday Book. It is a French term and, in Continental law, is opposed to feudum. But no such opposition can be traced in the English common law after the Conquest. All ownership of land in England resolved itself into tenure, derived from a royal grant in consideration of service. There was no independent property in English feudal law like the dominium of Roman law, or like the alleu of Southern France. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. in Eleventh Cent. 236. Maitland (Domesday Book and Beyond 154) takes the same view: "Such sparse evidence as we can obtain from Normandy strengthens our belief that the wide, the almost insuperable gulf that modern theorists have found or set between 'alodial ownership' and 'feudal tenure' was not perceptible in the 11th Century."

These writers express the result of modern research on alod in early English institutions. But a different meaning has been given it from Coke down to recent times and, in that sense, has become fixed, as a mode of expression, in our law. This will appear from the following (from the last edition of this work):

An estate held by absolute ownership, without recognizing any superior to whom any duty is due on account thereof. 1 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) *16.

In the United States the title to land is essentially allodial, and every tenant in fee-simple has an absolute and unqualified dominion over it; yet in technical language his estate is said to be in fee, a word which implies a feudal relation, although such a relation has ceased to exist in any form, while in several of the states the lands have been declared to be allodial; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 492; Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 443; but see Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 92; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 77, n.; 1 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) *41, *42; Sharsw. Lect. on Feudal Law (1870). In some states, the statutes have declared lands to be allodial. See also Barker v. Dayton, 28 Wis. 367.

In England there is no allodial tenure, for all land is held mediately or immediately of the king; but the words tenancy in fee-simple are there properly used to express the most absolute dominion which a man can have over his property; 3 Kent Com. *487; Cruise, Prelim. Dis. c. 1, § 13; 2 Bla. Com. 105.

ALODIAN. Sometimes used for alodial, but not well authorized. Cowell.

ALODIARIUM. Those who own alodial lands. Those who have as large an estate as a subject can have. Co. Litt.; Bac. Abr. Tenure A. But see ALOD.

ALONE. Apart from others; singly; sole. Salem Capital Flour Mills Co. v. Water-Ditch & Canal Co., 33 Fed. 154.

ALONG. By, on, up to or over, according to the subject-matter and context. Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 425; Walton v. R. Co., 67 Mo. 58; 1 B. & Adol. 448; Benton v. Horsley, 71 Ga. 619; Stevens v. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269; id., 21 N. J. Eq. 259; but not necessarily touching at all points; Com. v. Franklin, 133 Mass. 569.

ALSO. The word imports no more than "item" and may mean the same as "more-over"; but not the same as "in like manner"; Evans v. Knorr, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 68. It may be (1) the beginning of an entirely different sentence, or (2) a copulative carrying on the sense of the immediately preceding words into those immediately succeeding. Stroud, Jud. Dict., citing 1 Jarm. 497 n.; 1 Salk. 239.

ALTA PROBITIO. High treason.

ALTA VIA. The highway.

ALTARAGE. Offerings made on the altar; all profits which accrue to the priest by means of the altar. Ayliffe, Par. 61.

ALTERATION. A change in the terms of a contract or other written instrument by a party entitled under it, without the consent of the other party, by which its meaning or language is changed.

The term is properly applied to the change in the language of instruments, and is not used of changes in the contract itself. And it is in strictness to be distinguished from the act of a stranger in changing the form or language of the instrument, which is called a spoliation. This latter distinction is not always observed in practice, however.

Also sometimes applied to a change made in a written instrument, by agreement of the parties; but this use of the word is rather colloquial than technical. Such an alteration becomes a new agreement, superseding the original one; Leake, Cont. 430.

An alteration avoids the instrument; 11 Coke 27; 5 C. B. 181; Lewis v. Payn, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 71, 18 Am. Dec. 427; Wright v. Wright, 7 N. J. L. 175, 11 Am. Dec. 546; Wegner v. State, 28 Tex. App. 419, 13 S. W. 608; Palmer v. Poor, 121 Ind. 135, 22 N. E. 984, 6 L. R. A. 469; but not, it seems, if the alteration be not material; Bowers v. Jewell, 2 N. H. 543; Nichols v. Johnson, 10 Conn. 192; Smith v. Crooker, 5 Mass. 540; Langdon v. Paul, 20 Vt. 217; Huntington v. Finch, 3 Ohio St. 445; Palmer v. Largent, 5 Neb. 223, 25 Am. Rep. 479; Oliver v. Hawley, 5 Neb. 439; Morrill v. Otis, 12 N. H. 466; King v. Rea, 13 Colo. 69, 21 Pac. 1084; Harper v. Reaves, 132 Ala. 625, 32 South. 721 (a deed); Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co. v. Stewart, 2 Marv. (Del.) 275, 36 Atl. 88; Crowe v. Beem, 36 Ind. App. 207, 75 N. E. 302. The insertion of such words as the law supplies is said to be not material; Granite Ry. Co. v.

Bacon, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 239; Thornton v. Appleton, 29 Me. 298. As to whether tearing and putting on a seal is material, see Powers v. Ware, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 451; Truett v. Wainwright, 4 Gilm. (Ill.) 411; 11 M. & W. 778. The question of materiality is one of law for the court; Martendale v. Follet, 1 N. H. 95; Brackett Ex'r v. Mountfort, 11 Me. 115; Wheelock v. Freeman, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 165, 23 Am. Dec. 674; Hill v. Calvin, 4 How. (Miss.) 231; Pritchard v. Smith, 77 Ga. 463; and depends upon the facts of each case; L. R. 1 Ex. D. 176. The principle seems to be that a party "is discharged from his liability, if the altered instrument, supposed to be genuine, would operate differently to the original instrument, whether it be or be not to his prejudice;" Anson, Contr. (2d Am. Ed.) *327; 5 E. & B. 89. For instances, see Schwarz v. Oppold, 74 N. Y. 307; Leonard v. Phillips, 39 Mich. 182, 33 Am. Rep. 370; Toomer v. Rutland, 57 Ala. 379, 29 Am. Rep. 722; Robinson v. State, 66 Ind. 331; Moore v. Hutchinson, 69 Mo. 429; Express Pub. Co. v. Aldine Press, 126 Pa. 347, 17 Atl. 608; Warder v. Willyard, 46 Minn. 531, 49 N. W. 300, 24 Am. St. Rep. 250. Alteration of a deed will not defeat a vested estate or interest acquired under the deed; 11 M. & W. 800; 2 H. Bla. 259; Chessman v. Whittemore, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 231; Barrett v. Thorndike, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 73; Withers v. Atkinson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 236; Smith v. McGowan, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 404; see Bliss v. McIntyre, 18 Vt. 466, 46 Am. Dec. 165; but as to an action upon covenants, has the same effect as alteration of an unsealed writing; 11 M. & W. 800; Chessman v. Whittemore, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 231; Waring v. Smyth, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 119, 47 Am. Dec. 299. As to filling blanks, see BLANK.

The same rule as to alterations applies to negotiable promissory notes as to other instruments; Wilson v. Hayes, 40 Minn. 531, 42 N. W. 467, 4 L. R. A. 196, 12 Am. St. Rep. 754. The unauthorized insertion of "or bearer" in a note, if made innocently, will not make the note void; Crosswell v. Labree, 81 Me. 44, 16 Atl. 331, 10 Am. St. Rep. 238; but the insertion of "or order" will avoid; Taylor v. Moore (Tex.) 20 S. W. 53.

Where the alteration of a promissory note, though made by the holder, is prompted by honest motives, the instrument retains its legal validity and a bill in equity will lie to recover thereon; Wallace v. Tice, 32 Or. 283, 51 Pac. 733; the fraudulent detaching a stub containing conditions favorable to maker, from a note, avoids the note; Stephens v. Davis, 85 Tenn. 271, 2 S. W. 382.

A spoliation by a third party without the knowledge or consent of a party to the instrument will not avoid an instrument even if material, if the original words can be restored with certainty; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 566; Andrews v. Calloway, 50 Ark. 358, 7 S. W.

449; but the material alteration of an instrument by a stranger, while it is in the custody of the promisee, avoids his rights under it; 11 Coke 27 b; L. R. 10 Ex. 330; because one who "has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit, is bound to preserve it in its original state;" 13 M. & W. 352; 3 E. & B. 687; Leake, Cont. 425; but see Clapp v. Shephard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 231.

When a note was given by a corporation payable to its manager's wife for his salary, an alteration making it payable to the manager himself is material; Sneed v. Milling Co., 73 Fed. 925, 20 C. C. A. 230.

Where there has been manifestly an alteration of a parol instrument, the party claiming under it is bound to explain the alteration; Wilde v. Armsby, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 314; Simpson v. Stackhouse, 9 Pa. 186, 49 Am. Dec. 554; Hills v. Barnes, 11 N. H. 395; McMicken v. Beauchamp, 2 La. 290; Warren v. Layton, 3 Har. (Del.) 404; Commercial & R. Bank of Vicksburg v. Lum, 7 How. (Miss.) 414; Tillou v. Ins. Co., 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 564; 6 C. & P. 273. As to the rule in case of deeds, see Co. Litt. 225 b; 1 Kebl. 22; 5 Eng. L. & Eq. 349; Den v. Farlee, 21 N. J. L. 280.

Under the common law erasures and alterations of written instruments were presumed to have been made at the time of, or anterior to, their execution, the law presuming the honesty of purpose and action until the contrary is shown; Paramore v. Lindsey, 63 Mo. 66; Gooch v. Bryant, 13 Me. 386; Herrick v. Malin, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 388; North River Meadow Co. v. Christ Church, 22 N. J. L. 424, 53 Am. Rep. 258.

See INTERLINEATION; SPOILIATION.

ALTERNAT. A usage among diplomatists by which the rank and places of different powers, who have the same right and pretensions to precedence, are changed from time to time, either in a certain regular order, or one determined by lot. In drawing up treaties and conventions, for example, it is the usage of certain powers to alternate, both in the preamble and the signatures, so that each power occupies, in the copy intended to be delivered to it, the first place. Wheat. Int. Law § 157.

ALTERNATIVE. Allowing a choice between two or more things or acts to be done.

In contracts, a party has often the choice which of several things to perform. A writ is in the alternative which commands the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he has not done it; Finch 257; 3 Bla. Com. 273. Under the common-law practice, the first mandamus is an alternative writ; 3 Bla. Com. 111; but in modern practice this writ is often dispensed with and its place is taken by a rule to show cause. See MANDAMUS.

ALTUUS NON TOLLENDI. In Civil Law. A servitude by which the owner of a house is restrained from building beyond a certain height.

ALTUS TOLLENDI. In Civil Law. A servitude which consists in the right, to him who is entitled to it, to build his house as high as he may think proper. In general, every one enjoys this privilege, unless he is restrained by some contrary title.

ALTO ET BASSO. High and low.

This phrase is applied to an agreement made between two contending parties to submit all matters in dispute, alto et basso to arbitration. Cowell.

ALTUM MERE. The high sea.

ALUMNUS. A foster-child.

Also a graduate from a school, college, or other institution of learning.

ALVEUS (Lat.). The bed or channel through which the stream flows when it runs within its ordinary channel. Calvinus, Lex.

Alveus derelictus, a deserted channel. 1 Mackelvey, Civ. Law 280.

AMALGAMATION. Union of different races, or diverse elements, societies, or corporations, so as to form a homogeneous whole or new body; interfusion; intermarriage; consolidation; coalescence; as the amalgamation of stock. Stand. Dict.

In England it is used in the case of the merger of two incorporated companies.

The word has no definite meaning; it involves the blending of two concerns into one; [1904] 2 Ch. 268.

See MERGER; SHAREHOLDER.

AMALPHITAN TABLE. A code of sea laws compiled for the free and trading republic of Amalphi toward the end of the eleventh century. 3 Kent 9.

It consists of the laws on maritime subjects which were or had been in force in countries bordering on the Mediterranean; and, on account of its collecting them into one regular system, it was for a long time received as authority in those countries. 1 Azuni, Mar. Law 376. It became a part of the law of the sea; The Scotia, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 170, 20 L. Ed. 822. See CODE.

AMBACTUS (Lat. ambire, to go about). A servant sent about; one whose services his master hired out. Spelman, Gloss.

AMBASSADOR IN INTERNATIONAL LAW. Ambassadors formed the first class of the public ministers (q. v.) who were sent abroad by sovereign states with authority to represent their government and to transact business with the government to which they were sent.

A distinction was formerly made between Ambassadors Extraordinary, who were sent to conduct special business or to remain for an indeterminate period, and Ambassadors Ordinary, who were sent on permanent missions; but this distinction is no longer observed.

Ambassadors are regarded as the personal representatives of the head of the state which sends them, and in consequence they are entitled to special honors, and have special privileges, chiefly that of negotiating personally with the head of the state, though this privilege is of little value at the present day, owing to the general adoption of constitutional forms of government. Only Empires, Kingdoms, Grand Duchies, and great Republics are entitled to send and receive Ambassadors. Until recently the United States was represented by Ministers Plenipotentiary, never having sent persons of the rank of Ambassador in the diplomatic sense. On March 3, 1893, a law was passed authorizing the President to designate as Ambassadors the representatives of the United States to such countries as he might be advised were so represented or about to be represented in the United States. In consequence of this law the United States is now represented by Ambassadors in Great Britain, Germany, Austria-Hungary, France, Italy, Mexico, Brazil, Russia, Japan, Turkey, and Spain.

Before an Ambassador is sent to a foreign country, it is the custom to inquire if the designated person will be a persona grata to the government of that country. No reasons need be given by the foreign government for refusing to receive a given individual. After an appointment the Ambassador is provided with a letter of credence (q. v.) which identifies him at the foreign court.

The duties of an Ambassador are varied; he is the mouthpiece of communications from his state to the foreign country; he must keep his government informed upon all questions of interest to it; he must see to the protection of citizens of his country resident in the foreign state; and he may negotiate treaties when his government specially empowers him to do so by giving him a document called Full Powers (q. v.).

The person of an Ambassador is inviolable. He is exempt from both the criminal and civil jurisdiction of the country to which he is sent. As early as 1708 an act was passed by the British Parliament confirming the immunity of Ambassadors from arrest and imposing heavy penalties upon any persons who should serve a writ or process upon them. They can not be arrested for debt, nor for violation of the law, except in cases where it may be necessary to prevent them from committing acts of violence. If, however, they should be so regardless of their duty and of the object of their immunity as to injure or openly attack the laws of the foreign government, their functions may be suspended by a refusal to treat with them, or application can be made to their own sovereign for their recall, or they may be dismissed or required to depart within a reasonable time.

By what is called the fiction of ex-territoriality, the exemption of an ambassador from the jurisdiction of the country in which he resides has been extended to his house and his suite. His house cannot be entered by officers of police, nor can his servants be arrested by the ordinary writ or process. In consequence, the Ambassador's house has sometimes been used as an asylum (q. v.) for criminals. Much diplomatic controversy has taken place upon this point, and at present asylum is not given, except occasionally, in times of revolution, to political refugees.

An ambassador's children born abroad retain the citizenship of their father; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642; Moore, IV, §§ 623-695.

AMBIDEXTER (Lat.). Skilful with both hands.

Applied anciently to an attorney who took pay from both sides, and subsequently to a juror guilty of the same offence; Cowell.

AMBIGUITY. Duplicity, indistinctness or uncertainty of meaning of an expression used in a written instrument.

The word "uncertainty" in a suit refers to the uncertainty defined in pleading and does not include ambiguity; Kraner v. Halsey, 82 Cal. 209, 22 Pac. 1137.

Latent is that which arises from some collateral circumstance or extrinsic matter in cases where the instrument itself is sufficiently certain and intelligible. Inhabitants of Jay v. Inhabitants of East Livermore, 56 Me. 107; Tilton v. Bible Society, 60 N. H. 377, 49 Am. Rep. 321; Simpson v. Dix, 131 Mass. 179; Clark v. Woodruff, 83 N. Y. 518.

Patent is that which appears on the face of the instrument; that which occurs when the expression of an instrument is so defective that a court which is obliged to place a construction upon it, cannot, placing itself in the situation of the parties, ascertain therefrom the parties' intention. Williams v. Hichborn, 4 Mass. 205; U. S. v. Cantril, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 167, 2 L. Ed. 584; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 292; Ans. Contr. 248; Peisch v. Dickson, 1 Mas. 9, Fed. Cas. No. 10,911; Chambers v. Ringstaff, 69 Ala. 140; Palmer v. Albee, 50 Ia. 429; Nashville Life Ins. Co. v. Mathews, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 499.

The term does not include mere inaccuracy, or such uncertainty as arises from the use of peculiar words, or of common words in a peculiar sense; Wigr. Wills 174; 3 Sim. 24; 3 M. & G. 452; Brown v. Brown, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 576; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Day, 13 Vt. 36; see Fish v. Hubbard's Admr's, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 651; 8 Bing. 244; and intends such expressions as would be found of uncertain meaning by persons of competent skill and information; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 298.

Latent ambiguities are subjects for the consideration of a jury, and may be explained by parol evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 301; and see Wigr. Wills 48; 5 Ad. & E. 302; 3 B. & Ad. 728; Brown v. Brown, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 576; Astor v. Ins. Co., 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 202; Peisch v. Dickson, 1 Mas. 9, Fed. Cas. No. 10,911. Patent ambiguity cannot be explained by parol evidence, and renders the instrument as far as it extends inoperative;

Williams v. Hichborn, 4 Mass. 205; New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 167, 3 L. Ed. 303; Jarm. Wills (6th Am. Ed.) *400. See Neal v. Reams, 88 Ga. 298, 14 S. E. 617; *Whaley v. See LATENT AMBIGUITY; PATENT AMBIGUITY.

AMBIT. A boundary line. Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 412, 442, 9 L. Ed. 475.

AMBITUS (Lat.). A space beside a building two and a half feet in width, and of the same length as the building; a space two and a half feet in width between two adjacent buildings; the circuit, or distance around. Cicero; Calvinus, Lex.

AMBULANCE. A vehicle for the conveyance of the sick or wounded. In time of war they are considered neutral and must be respected by the belligerents. Oppenheim, Int. L. 126.

AMBULATORY (Lat. ambulare, to walk about). Movable; changeable; that which is not fixed.

Ambulatoria voluntas (a changeable will) denotes the power which a testator possesses of altering his will during his lifetime.

AMBUSH. The act of attacking an enemy unexpectedly from a concealed station; a concealed station, where troops or enemies lie in wait to attack by surprise; an ambuscade; troops posted in a concealed place, for attacking by surprise. To lie in wait, to surprise, to place in ambush.

AMELIORATIONS. Betterments. 6 Low. Can. 294; 9 id. 503.

AMENABLE. Responsible; subject to answer in a court of justice; liable to punishment.

AMENDE HONORABLE. A penalty imposed upon a person by way of disgrace or infamy, as a punishment for any offence, or for the purpose of making reparation for any injury done to another, as the walking into church in a white sheet, with a rope about the neck and a torch in the hand, and begging the pardon of God, or the king, or any private individual, for some delinquency.

In French Law. A punishment somewhat similar to this, which bore the same name, was common in France; it was abolished by the law of the 25th of September, 1791; Merlin, Répert. In 1826 it was re-introduced in cases of sacrilege and was finally abolished in 1830.

For the form of a sentence of Amende Honorable, see D'Aguesseau, Œuvres, 43<sup>e</sup> Plaidoyer, tom. 4, p. 246.

In modern usage, an apology.

AMENDMENT. In Legislation. An alteration or change of something proposed in a bill or established as law.

Thus the senate of the United States may amend money-bills passed by the house of representatives, but cannot originate such bills. The constitution of the United States contains a provision for its amendment; U. S. Const. art. 5.

In Practice. The correction, by allowance of the court, of an error committed in the progress of a cause.

Amendments, at common law, independently of any statutory provision on the subject, are in all cases in the discretion of the court, for the furtherance of justice. Under statutes in modern practice, they are very liberally allowed in all formal and most substantial matters, either without costs to the party amending, or upon such terms as the court think proper to order. See JEOPAILLE.

An amendment, where there is something to amend by, may be made in a criminal as in a civil case; 12 Ad. & E. 217; Com. v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 550. But an indictment, which is a finding upon the oaths of the grand jury, can only be amended with their consent before they are discharged; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 25, §§ 97, 98; Com. v. Child, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 200; State v. McCarthy, 17 R. I. 370, 22 Atl. 282; but see Miller v. State, 68 Miss. 221, 8 South. 273. In many states there are statutory provisions relative to the amendment of indictments; State v. Curtis, 44 La. Ann. 320, 10 South. 784. A bill of exceptions when signed and filed becomes a part of the record and may be amended like any other record; Martin v. R. Co., 53 Ark. 250, 13 S. W. 765; Leferts v. State, 49 N. J. Law 26, 6 Atl. 521; Pollard v. Rutter, 35 Ill. App. 370; Burdoin v. Town of Trenton, 116 Mo. 358, 22 S. W. 728.

An information may be amended after demurrer; 4 Term 457; 4 Burr. 2568. At common law a mistake in an information may be amended at any time; State v. White, 64 Vt. 372, 24 Atl. 250.

Where a verdict is supported by evidence, a pleading will be considered as amended; Haley v. Kilpatrick, 104 Fed. 647, 44 C. C. A. 102.

Where, in the course of a trial, it appears that the pleadings should be amended, the usual practice is to move that "the declaration (or other pleading) be amended to conform to the facts." Ordinarily no further action is required.

An amended pleading speaks as of the time of the original; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 73 Fed. 519, 19 C. C. A. 551.

It is not permitted by amendment to make an entirely new case; In re Sims, 9 Fed. 440.

AMENDS. A satisfaction given by a wrong-doer to the party injured, for a wrong committed. 1 Lilly, Reg. 81.

By statute 24 Geo. II, c. 44, in England, and by similar statutes in some of the United States, justices of the peace, upon being notified of an intended suit against them, may tender amends for the wrong alleged as done by them in their official character, and, if found sufficient, the tender bars the action; Lake v. Shaw, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 517.

AMERCEMENT. A pecuniary penalty imposed upon an offender by a judicial tribunal.

The judgment of the court is, that the party be at the mercy of the court (sit in misericordia), upon which the affeerors—or, in the superior courts, the coroner—liquidate the penalty. As distinguished from a fine, at the old law an amercement was for a lesser offence, might be imposed by a court not of record, and was for an uncertain amount until it had been affeered. Either party to a suit who failed was to be amerced pro clamore falso (for his false claim); but these amercements have been long since disused; 4 Bla. Com. 379; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Amercements.

The officers of the court, and any person who committed a contempt of court, was also liable to be amerced.

Formerly, if the sheriff failed in obeying the writs, rules, or orders of the court, he might be amerced; but this practice has been generally superseded by attachment. In some of the United States, however, the sheriff may, by statutory provision, be amerced for making a return contrary to the provision of the statute; Cox v. 136, 169; Stephens v. Clark, 8 N. J. L. 270; Wright v. Green, 11 N. J. L. 334; President, etc., of Paterson Bank v. Hamilton, 13 N. J. L. 159; Le Roy v. Blauvelt, 13 N. J. L. 341; Dawson v. Holcomb, 1 Ohio, 275, 13 Am. Dec. 618; McLin v. Hardie, 25 N. C. 407; Cam. & N. 477; or if he fails to make a return within the proper time; Sharp v. Ross, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. 55.

AMERCEMENT ROYAL. In Great Britain a penalty imposed on an officer for a misdemeanor in his office.

AMERICAN. Pertaining to the western hemisphere or in a more restricted sense to the United States. See Beardsley v. Selectmen of Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 493, 3 Atl. 557, 55 Am. Rep. 152.

AMEUBLISSEMENT. A species of agreement which by a fiction gives to immovable goods the quality of movable. Merl. Rép.; 1 Low. Can. 25, 58.

AMI (Fr.). A friend. See PROCHAIN AMY.

AMICABLE ACTION. An action entered by agreement of parties.

This practice prevails in Pennsylvania. When entered, such action is considered as if it had been adversely commenced and the defendant had been regularly summoned.

It presupposes that there is a real dispute between the parties, an actual controversy and adverse interests. The parties, to save needless expense and trouble, agree to conduct the suit in an amicable manner; Lord v. Veazie, 8 How. (U. S.) 255, 12 L. Ed.

1067; Adams v. R. Co., 21 R. I. 134, 42 Atl. 515, 44 L. R. A. 275; Ex parte Steele, 162 Fed. 694. It differs entirely from a "Moot" Case (q. v.).

An agreement between a county and a proposed buyer of its bonds to prosecute a made-up case to settle the question of the validity of the bonds, prior to issue, at the expense of the county, is void; Van Horn v. Kittitas County, 112 Fed. 1.

See CASE STATED.

AMICUS CURIAE (Lat. a friend of the court). In Practice. A friend of the court.

One who, for the assistance of the court, gives information of some matter of law in regard to which the court is doubtful or mistaken; such as a case not reported or which the judge has not seen or does not, at the moment, recollect; 2 Co. Inst. 178; 2 Viner, Abr. 475.

This custom cannot be traced to its origin, but is immemorial in the English law. It is recognized in the Year Books, and it was enacted in 4 Hen. IV. (1403) that any stranger as "amicus curiae" might move the court, etc. Under the Roman system the Judex, "especially if there was but one, called some lawyer to assist him with their counsel" "sibi advocavit ut in consilio adessent;" Cic. Quint. 2 Gell. xiv. 2; Suet. Lib. 33. There was in that day also the "amicus consiliarii," who was ready to make suggestions to the advocate, and this "amicus" was called a "ministrator;" Cic. de Orat. II. 75. This custom became incorporated in the English system, and it was recognized throughout the earlier as well as the later periods of the common law. At first suggestions could come only from the barristers or counsellors, although by the statute of Hen. IV. a "bystander" had the privilege. The custom included instructing, warning, informing, and moving the court. The information so communicated may extend to any matter of which the court takes judicial cognizance; 8 Coke 15.

It is not the function of amicus curiae to take upon himself the management of a cause; Taft v. Transp. Co., 56 N. H. 416; In re Pina's Estate, 112 Cal. 14, 44 Pac. 332; Parker v. State, 133 Ind. 178, 32 N. E. 836, 33 N. E. 119, 18 L. R. A. 567; or to proceed by error or appeal; Martin v. Tapley, 119 Mass. 116; or demurrer; Ex parte Henderson, 84 Ala. 36, 4 South. 284; or for a rehearing; People v. Loan Ass'n, 127 Cal. 400, 58 Pac. 822, 59 Pac. 692.

Any one as amicus curiae may make application to the court in favor of an infant, though he be no relation; 1 Ves. Sen. 313; and see Williams v. Blunt, 2 Mass. 215; In re Green's Estate, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 427; In re Guernsey's Estate, 21 Ill. 443. Any attorney as amicus curiae may move the dismissal of a fictitious suit; Haley v. Bank, 21 Nev. 127, 26 Pac. 64, 12 L. R. A. 815; Birmingham Loan & Auction Co. v. Bank, 100 Ala. 249, 13 South. 945, 46 Am. St. Rep. 45; Judson v. Jockey Club, 14 Misc. Rep. 562, 36 N. Y. Supp. 128; In re Guernsey's Estate, 21 Ill. 443; or one in which there is no jurisdiction; Williams v. Blunt, 2 Mass. 215; In re Columbia Real Estate Co., 101 Fed. 965; Jones v. City of Jefferson, 66 Tex. 576, 1 S. W. 903; 2 Show.

596; or move to quash a vicious indictment, for in case of trial and verdict, judgment must be arrested; Comberb. 13; or suggest an error which would prevent judgment when the absence of the party prevented a motion in arrest; 2 Show. 297. He may be allowed a reasonable compensation to be taxed by the court; In re St. Louis Institute of Christian Science, 27 Mo. App. 633.

The intervention may be by affidavit; Ex parte Guernsey's Estate, 21 Ill. 443; motion; Haley v. Bank, 21 Nev. 127, 26 Pac. 64, 12 L. R. A. 815; or oral statement; Olsen v. Ins. Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 371, 32 S. W. 446; or it may be requested by the court; Ex parte Randolph, 2 Brock. 447, Fed. Cas. No. 11,558.

The term is sometimes applied to counsel heard in a cause because interested in a similar one; Ex parte Yeager, 11 Grat. (Va.) 656; State v. Rost, 49 La. Ann. 1451, 22 South. 421; and occasionally to strangers suggesting the correction of errors in the proceedings; Year Books 4 Hen. VI. 16; 11 Mod. 137; U. S. v. Gale, 109 U. S. 68, 3 Sup. Ct. 1, 27 L. Ed. 857.

Leave to file briefs as amicus curiae will be denied when it does not appear that the applicant is interested in any other case that will be affected by the decision and the parties are represented by competent counsel, whose consent has not been secured; Northwestern Securities Co. v. U. S., 191 U. S. 555, 24 Sup. Ct. 119, 48 L. Ed. 299; where many cases are cited in the argument.

The Attorney General of the United States has appeared in the Supreme Court in The Income Tax Cases, 158 U. S. 601, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108; The Corporation Tax Cases, 220 U. S. 107, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312; The Safety Appliance Case, 196 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 158, 49 L. Ed. 363, and the Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44. In cases where the United States is not a party, but is substantially interested, it is the practice to ask leave to intervene, or to be heard as amicus curiae, or he is heard by leave of court.

In the Reading Receivership (U. S. C. C. E. D. of Pa., 1893, Dallas, C. J.) certain Union employees petitioned the Court for an order restraining the receivers from discharging the petitioners unless they would dissolve their connections with their Union. The Attorney General, Mr. Olney, sent the Court an argument on behalf of the petitioners. The Court said at bar that, if counsel for the petitioners saw proper to offer it as part of their argument, it would be received. Opposing counsel did not object to it if so offered.

Where the question of the constitutionality of the Employers' Liability Act of 1906 was involved the court permitted an Assistant Attorney General to intervene and to be heard, though considering that such a practice in a litigation strictly inter partes with which the United States had no concern, ought not to be encouraged, in the absence of any statute or law authorizing or directing the Attorney General to support by argument in the courts generally the legislation of Congress where the United States is not a party nor its interests involved in any tangible way; Brooks v. Southern Pac. Co., 148 Fed. 986.

In Mason v. Ry., 197 Mass. 349, 83 N. E. 876, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276, 125 Am. St. Rep. 371, 14 Ann. Cas. 574, on motion of a member of the bar suggesting that the action be dismissed as being virtually brought against the King of England, accompanied by an affidavit establishing that fact, it was held that the action could not be maintained. There was no appearance for defendant.

AMITA (Lat.). An aunt on the father's side.

Amita magna. A great-aunt on the father's side.

Amita major. A great-great-aunt on the father's side.

Amita maxima. A great-great-great-aunt, or a great-great-grandfather's sister. Calvinus, Lex.

AMITINUS. The child of a brother or sister; a cousin; one who has the same grandfather, but different father and mother. Calvinus, Lex.

AMITTERE CURIAM (Lat. to lose court). To be excluded from the right to attend court. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 44.

AMITTERE LIBERAM LEGEM. To lose the privilege of giving evidence under oath in any court; to become infamous, and incapable of giving evidence. Glanville 2.

If either party in a wager of battle cried "craven" he was condemned amittere liberam legem; 3 Bla. Com. 340.

AMNESTY. An act of oblivion of past offences, granted by the government to those who have been guilty of any neglect or crime, usually upon condition that they return to their duty within a certain period.

Express amnesty is one granted in direct terms.

Implied amnesty is one which results when a treaty of peace is made between contending parties. Vattel, 1, 4, c. 2, § 20.

Amnesty and pardon are very different. The former is an act of the sovereign power, the object of which is to efface and to cause to be forgotten a crime or misdemeanor; the latter is an act of the same authority, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for the crime he has committed; U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 160, 8 L. Ed. 640. Amnesty is the abolition and forgetfulness of the offence; pardon is forgiveness. A pardon is given to one who is certainly guilty, or has been convicted; amnesty, to those who may have been so; State v. Bialock, 61 N. C. 242.

Their effects are also different. That of pardon is the remission of the whole or a part of the punishment awarded by the law,—the conviction remaining unaffected when only a partial pardon is granted; an amnesty, on the contrary, has the effect of destroying the criminal act, so that it is as if it had not been committed, as far as the public interests are concerned.

Their application also differs. Pardon is always given to individuals, and properly only after judgment or conviction; amnesty may be granted either before judgment or afterwards, and it is in general given to whole classes of criminals, or supposed criminals, for the purpose of restoring tranquility in the state. But sometimes amnesties are limited, and certain classes are excluded from their operation.

The term amnesty belongs to international law, and is applied to rebellions which, by their magnitude, are brought within the rules of international law, but has no technical meaning in the common law, but is a synonym of oblivion, which, in the English law, is the synonym of pardon; Knote v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cl. 397.

The distinction here taken between pardon and amnesty was formerly drawn rather in a philosophical than legal sense, and it doubtless has its origin in the civil law. It is, however, not recognized in American law, and it is thus referred to: "Some distinction has been made, or attempted to be made, between pardon and amnesty. * * * This distinction is not, however, recognized in our law. The constitution does not use the word 'amnesty'; and, except that the term is generally employed where pardon is extended to whole classes or communities instead of individuals, the distinction between them is one rather of philosophical interest than of legal importance." Knote v. U. S., 95 U. S. 149, 24 L. Ed. 442. Amnesty, therefore, may be rather characterized as a general pardon granted to a class of persons by law or proclamation. The act in such case is as properly a pardon as if simply granted to an individual. Indeed, it seems to be generally conceded in the United States that the word "pardon" includes the word "amnesty"; Davies v. McKeeby, 5 Nev. 369, 373.

As to the amnesty proclamation of 29th May, 1865, see Hamilton's Case, 7 Ct. Cl. 444.

The general amnesty granted by President Johnson on Dec. 25, 1868, did not entitle one receiving its benefits to the proceeds of his property previously condemned and sold under the act of 17th July, 1862, the proceeds having been paid into the treasury; Knote v. U. S., 95 U. S. 149, 24 L. Ed. 442. As to amnesty in cases arising out of the War of Secession, see Armstrong's Foundry, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 766, 18 L. Ed. 882; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 20 L. Ed. 519; Armstrong v. U. S., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 154, 20 L. Ed. 614; Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 147, 21 L. Ed. 426; Witkowski's Case, 7 Ct. Cl. 398; Haym's Case, 7 Ct. Cl. 443; Waring's Case, 7 Ct. Cl. 501; Meldrim's Case, 7 Ct. Cl. 595; Scott's Case, 8 Ct. Cl. 457.

As to the power of the president to grant a general amnesty, and whether there is any legislative power to grant pardon and amnesty, see EXECUTIVE POWER; PARDON; CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES; 34 L. R. A. 251, note.

AMONG. Mingled with or in the same group or class.

As used in the commercial clause of the federal constitution C. J. Marshall defines it as "intermingled with"; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 194, 6 L. Ed. 23; and it is sometimes held to be equivalent to between; Hick's Estate, 134 Pa. 507, 19 Atl. 705; Records v. Fields, 155 Mo. 314, 55 S. W. 1021; Senger v. Senger's Ex'r, 81 Va. 687.

AMORTISE. To alien lands in mortmain.

AMORTISSEMENT (Fr.). The redemption of a debt by a sinking fund.

AMORTIZATION. An alienation of lands or tenements in mortmain.

It is used colloquially in reference to paying off a mortgage or other debt by installments, or by a sinking fund.

AMOTION (Lat. amovere, to remove; to take away).

An unlawful taking of personal chattels out of the possession of the owner, or of one who has a special authority in them.

A turning out of the proprietor of an estate in realty before the termination of his estate. 3 Bla. Com. 198. See OUSTER.

In Corporations. A removal of an official agent of a corporation from the station assigned to him, before the expiration of the term for which he was appointed. 8 Term 356; 1 East 562; Fuller v. Trustees, 6 Conn. 532; Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th ed.) § 238.

The term is distinguished from disfranchisement, which deprives a member of a public corporation of all rights as a corporator; while amotion applies only to officers; Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774; White v. Brownell, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 162, 192. In Bagg's Case, recognized as a leading one, the distinction between amotion and disfranchisement was not quite clearly noted; 11 Co. 93; and see the observations upon it in Wilcock, Mun. Corp. 270. See 24 Cent. L. J. 99, as to the difference between amotion and disfranchisement.

Expulsion is the usual phrase in reference to loss of membership of private corporations. The term seems in strictness not to apply properly to cases where officers are appointed merely during the will of the corporation, and are superseded by the choice of a successor, but, as commonly used, includes such cases.

See DISFRANCHISEMENT; EXPULSION; ASSOCIATION.

The right of amotion of an officer for just cause is a common-law incident of all corporations; 1 Burr. 517; 2 Kent 297; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th ed.) § 251; Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774; State v. Judges, 35 La. Ann. 1075; and the power is inherent; Fawcett v. Charles, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 473; Evans v. Philadelphia Club, 50 Pa. 107, 127; T. Raym. 435; Burr's Ex'r v. McDonald, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 215 (and see 2 Ld. Raym. 1564, where the contrary was asserted, though it may be considered settled as above stated); and in case of mere ministerial officers appointed durante bene placito, at the mere pleasure of those appointing him, without notice; Primm v. City of Carondelet, 23 Mo. 22; see 1

Ventr. 77; 2 Show. 70; 11 Mod. 403; Field v. Field, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 394; O'Dowd v. City of Boston, 149 Mass. 443, 21 N. E. 949. Power to remove is necessarily incidental to the power of appointment and the trustees may remove without assigning any specific cause whenever it is in their judgment in the interest of the corporation; People v. Higgins, 15 Ill. 110. Notice and an opportunity to be heard are requisite where the appointment is during good behavior, or the removal is for a specified cause; Field v. Com., 32 Pa. 478; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 648; City of Hoboken v. Gear, 27 N. J. L. 265; City of Madison v. Korbly, 32 Ind. 74; Stadler v. City of Detroit, 13 Mich. 346; 10 H. L. Cas. 404.

Before amotion the officer is entitled to notice of hearing, an accusation to be answered, reasonable time for answer, representation by counsel and an adjudication after hearing; Murdock v. Trustees, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 244. Mere acts, which are a cause for amotion, do not create a vacancy till the amotion takes place; State v. Trustees, 5 Ind. 77; Murdock v. Trustees, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 244.

Directors themselves have no implied power to remove one of their own number from office even for cause; nor to exclude him from taking part in their proceedings; Com. v. Detwiller, 131 Pa. 614, 18 Atl. 990, 992, 7 L. R. A. 357. In the absence of a statute authorizing amotion by the directors of one of their number, the power can only be exercised by the stockholders; Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society's Lessee, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 149; Fuller v. Trustees, 6 Conn. 532; and see Com. v. Detwiller, 131 Pa. 614, 18 Atl. 990, 992, 7 L. R. A. 357, 360; State v. Trustees, 5 Ind. 77.

The causes for amotion are said by Lord Mansfield (1 Burr. 538) to be:—"first, such as have no immediate relation to the office, but are in themselves of so infamous a nature as to render the offender unfit to execute any public franchise (but indictment and conviction must precede amotion for such causes, except where he has left the country before conviction; 1 B. & Ad. 936); second, such as are only against his oath and the duty of his office as a corporator, and amount to breaches of the tacit condition annexed to his office; third, such as are offences not only against the duty of his office, but also matter indictable at common law." See Com. v. Society, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 448, 4 Am. Dec. 453; Evans v. Philadelphia Club, 50 Pa. 107; 11 Mod. 379.

Sufficient grounds of removal: Poverty and inability to pay taxes; 3 Salk. 229; total desertion of duty; Bull. N. P. 206; 1 Burr. 541; as to neglect of duty, see 1 B. & Ad. 936; 4 Burr. 2004; 2 Stra. 819; 1 Vent. 146; habitual drunkenness; 3 Salk. 231; 3 Bulst. 190; official misconduct in the office; 4 Burr. 1990; habitual but not mere casual non-attendance; Murdock v. Trustees, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 244; Fuller v. Trustees, 6 Conn. 532.

Insufficient grounds of removal: Bankruptcy; 2 Burr. 723; Atlas Nat. Bank v. Gardner, 8 Biss. 537, Fed. Cas. No. 635; casual intoxication; 3 Salk. 231; 1 Rolle 409; old age; 2 Rolle 11; threats, insulting language, or libel upon the mayor or officers; 11 Coke 93; 1 C. & P. 257; 10 Ad. & E. 374.

The K. B. in England will see that a right of amotion of an officer is lawfully exercised; but it will not control the discretion of the corporation, if so exercised; L. R. 5 H. L. 636.

AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY. See JURISDICTION.

AMOUNT COVERED. The amount that is insured, and for which underwriters are liable for loss under a policy of insurance.

It is limited by that specified in the policy to be insured, and this limit may be applied to an identical subject only, as a ship, a building, or a life; or to successive subjects, as successive cargoes on the same ship, or successive parcels of goods transmitted on a certain canal or railroad during a specified period; and it may also be limited by the terms of the contract to a certain proportion, as a quarter, half, etc., of the value of the subject or interest on which the insurance is made; Jackson v. Ins. Co., 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 242; Estabrook v. Smith, 6 Gray (Mass.) 574, 66 Am. Dec. 443; Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 13 La. Ann. 246; Cushman v. Ins. Co., 34 Me. 487; 39 Eng. L. & Eq. 228.

AMOUNT OF LOSS. The diminution, destruction, or defeat of the value of, or of the charge upon, the insured subject to the assured, by the direct consequence of the operation of the risk insured against, according to its value in the policy, or in contribution for loss, so far as its value is covered by the insurance. 2 Phill. Ins. c. xv., xvi., xvii.; Forbes v. Ins. Co., 1 Gray, (Mass.) 371; Cromble v. Portsmouth Ins. Co., 26 N. H. 389; Flanagan v. Ins. Co., 25 N. J. L. 506; Cincinnati v. Duffield, 6 Ohio St. 200, 67 Am. Dec. 339; Eddy St. Foundry v. Ins. Co., 5 R. I. 426; Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 2 Md. 217; 7 Ell. & B. 172. See Loss.

AMOVEAS MANUS (Lat. that you remove your hands). After office found, the king was entitled to the things forfeited, either lands or personal property; the remedy for a person aggrieved was by "petition," or "monstrans de droit," or "traverses," to establish his superior right. Thereupon a writ issued, quod manus domini regis amoveatur; 3 Bla. Com. 260.

AMPARO (Span.). A document protecting the claimant of land till properly authorized papers can be issued. Trimble v. Smithers' Adm'r, 1 Tex. 790.

AMPLIATION. In Civil Law. A deferring of judgment until the cause is further examined.

In this case, the judges pronounced the word amplius, or by writing the letters N. L. for non liquet (q. v.), signifying that the cause was not clear. It is very similar to the common-law practice of entering cur. adv. vult in similar cases.

In French Law. A duplicate of an acquittance or other instrument.

A notary's copy of acts passed before him, delivered to the parties.

AMUSEMENT. Pastime; diversion; enjoyment. See ENTERTAINMENT; PLACE OF AMUSEMENT; THEATRE.

AMY (Fr.). Friend. See PROCHEIN AMY; NEXT FRIEND.

AN, JOUR ET WASTE. Year, day and waste. See that title.

ANALOGY. The similitude of relations which exist between things compared. See Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 58.

Analogy has been declared to be an argument or guide in forming legal judgments, and is very commonly a ground of such judgments; 3 Bingh. 265; 4 Burr. 1962, 2022, 2068; 6 Ves. 675; 3 Swanst. 561; 3 P. Will. 391; 3 Bro. C. C. 639, n.

ANALYTICAL JURISPRUDENCE. A theory and system of jurisprudence wrought out neither by inquiring for ethical principles or the dictates of the sentiments of justice nor by the rules which may be actually in force, but by analyzing, classifying and comparing various legal conceptions.

See JURISPRUDENCE.

ANARCHY. The absence of all political government; by extension, Confusion in government.

The absence of government; a state of society where there is no law or supreme power. Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 253, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

A social theory which regards the union of order with the absence of all direct government of man by man as the political ideal; absolute individual liberty. Cent. Dict.

Taken in its proper sense, the word has nothing to do with disorder or crime, but in the Act of Congress of March 3, 1903, the word "anarchists" is used synonymously with "persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the government of the United States or of all government or of all forms of law or the assassination of public officials," and this would seem to be the popular sense attaching to the word. In the address of U. M. Rose, President of the American Bar Association in 1902, criminal anarchy is defined as the doctrine that organized government should be overthrown by force and violence, or by assassination of the executive head or of any of the executive officials of the government, by any unlawful means. 15 Rep. Am. Bar Assn. 210.

In U. S. v. Williams, 194 U. S. 294, 24 Sup. Ct. 719, 48 L. Ed. 979, it was held that even though an alien anarchist only regarded the absence of government as a political ideal, yet when he sought to attain it by advocating a universal strike and discoursing upon "the legal murder of 1887" (Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320) there was a justifiable inference that he contemplated the ultimate realization of his ideal by the use of force, or that his speeches were incitements to that end. And further, that even if "anarchists" should be interpreted to mean political philosophers innocent of evil intent, yet the tendency of the general exploitation of such views is so dangerous to the public weal that aliens who hold and advocate them would be undesirable additions to the population and their exclusion infringes none of the constitutional guaranties respecting freedom of speech, etc. See ALIEN.

ANATHEMA. A punishment by which a person is separated from the body of the church, and forbidden all intercourse with the faithful.

It differs from excommunication, which simply forbids the person excommunicated from going into the church and taking the communion with the faithful.

ANATOCISM. In Civil Law. Taking interest on interest; receiving compound interest.

ANCESTOR. One who has preceded another in a direct line of descent; an ascendant.

A former possessor; the person last seised. Termes de la Ley; 2 Bla. Com. 201.

In the common law, the word is understood as well of the immediate parents as of those that are higher; as may appear by the statute 25 Edw. III., De natis ultra mare, and by the statute 6 Ric. II. c. 6, and by many others. But the civilians' relations in the ascending line, up to the great-grandfather's parents, and those above them, they term maiores, which common lawyers aptly expound antecessors or ancestors, for in the descendants of like degree they are called posteriores; Cary, Litt. 46. The term ancestor is applied to natural persons. The words predecessors and successors are used in respect to the persons composing a body corporate. See 2 Bla. Com. 209; Bacon, Abr.; Ayliffe, Pand. 58.

It designates the ascendants of one in the right line, as father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, and does not include collateral relatives as brothers and sisters; Valentine v. Wetherill, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 659.

ANCESTRAL. What relates to or has been done by one's ancestors; as homage ancestral (see HOMAGE) and the like.

That which belonged to one's ancestors.

Ancestral estates are such as come to the possessor by descent. 3 Washb. R. P. (5th Ed.) 411, 412.

ANCESTRAL ACTIONS. See ABATEMENT.

ANCHOR. A measure containing ten gallons.

The instrument used by which a vessel or other body is held. See The Lady Franklin, 2 Low. 220, Fed. Cas. No. 7,984; Walsh v. Dock Co., 77 N. Y. 448; Reid v. Ins. Co., 19 Hun (N. Y.) 284.

An Anchor Watch is one kept by a reduced number of men on a vessel in port or at anchor; The Lady Franklin, 2 Low. 220, Fed. Cas. No. 7,984; it may consist of one man on deck; The Rival, 1 Sprague 128, Fed. Cas. No. 11,867.

ANCHORAGE. A toll paid for every anchor cast from a ship in a port.

Such a toll is said to be incident to almost every port; 1 W. Bla. 413; 4 Term 260; and is sometimes payable though no anchor is cast; 2 Chit. Com. Law 16.

ANCIENT DEEDS. See ANCIENT WRITINGS.

ANCIENT DEMESNE. Manors which in the time of William the Conqueror were in the hands of the crown and are so recorded in the Domesday Book. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 14, 56.

Tenure in ancient demesne may be pleaded in abatement to an action of ejectment; 2 Burr. 1046.

Tenants of this class had many privileges; 2 Bla. Com. 99.

ANCIENT DOCUMENTS. See ANCIENT WRITINGS.

ANCIENT HOUSE. One which has stood long enough to acquire an easement of support. 3 Kent 437; 2 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) *74, *76. See EASEMENT; LATERAL SUPPORT.

ANCIENT LIGHTS. Windows or openings which have remained in the same place and condition twenty years or more. Wright v. Freeman, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 477; Story v. Odin, 12 Mass. 157, 7 Am. Dec. 46; Thurston v. Hancock, 12 Mass. 220, 7 Am. Dec. 57.

In England, a right to unobstructed light and air through such openings is secured by mere user for that length of time under the same title.

Until the last forty years there was no right of action merely because there was less light than formerly, but only where material inconvenience was caused in ordinary occupations; 1 Dick. 163; 2 C. & P. 465; 5 id. 438. This rule was followed in L. R. 4 Eq. 421; [1897] 2 Ch. 214; Ir. Rep. 11 Eq. 541. It is held that one is entitled to as much light as his building may ordinarily require for habitation or business; [1900] 2 K. B. 722. In L. R. [1904] A. C. 179, it is said: "To constitute actionable deprivation of light, it is not enough that there be less light than before; there must be a substantial deprivation of light,—enough to render occupation uncomfortable according to ordinary notions of mankind." This has been said to be the leading case; 23 L. Q. R. 254. In [1902] 1 K. B. 15, the plaintiffs had an easement of light and needed an extraordinary amount in their business; a newly erected building cut off a substantial amount of it, but enough was left for all ordinary purposes of habitation or business; it was held they were entitled to relief. This case was approved; L. R. 6 Ch. 809; and disapproved; L. R. 4 Eq. 21; 28 L. T. 186. In [1907] A. C. 1, there had been a large obstruction of light by the erection of the defendant's house, and a large interference with the cheerfulness of a room in the plaintiff's house, so that the character of such room had been altered, and it had lost one of its chief advantages, causing a substantial depreciation in the rental value. It was held that an actionable nuisance had been committed. It is said the decision of the House of Lords in [1904] A. C. 179, has left the obstruction of ancient lights still, as it always has been, a question of nuisance or no nuisance, but has readjusted the law in respect to the test of nuisance, and that the test now is, not how much light has been taken, and whether that is enough materially to lessen the enjoyment and use of the house which the owner previously had, but how much light is left, and whether that is enough for the comfortable use and enjoyment of the house according to the ordinary requirements of mankind; 74 L. J. Ch. 621; [1905] 2 Ch. 210.

In the United States, such right is not acquired without an express grant, in most of the states; 2 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) 62, 63; 3 Kent 446, n. See Cherry v. Stein, 11 Md. 1; Hulley v. Safe Deposit Co., 5 Del. Ch. 578; Parker v. Foote, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 309; Ward v. Neal, 37 Ala. 501; Pierre v. Fernald, 26 Me. 436, 46 Am. Dec. 573; Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80; and cases under Ark. This same doctrine has been upheld in Illinois and Louisiana; Gerber v. Grabel, 16 Ill. 217; Taylor v. Boulware, 35 La. Ann. 469. It is said not to be suited to the conditions of a growing country and that it never became part of our common law; Myers v. Gemmel, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 537. Other courts decline to adopt the English doctrine; Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80; Randall v. Sanderson, 111 Mass. 119; Hoy v. Sterrett, 2 Watts (Pa.) 327, 27 Am. Dec. 313; Doyle v. Lord, 64 N. Y. 439, 21 Am. Rep. 629; Powell v. Sims, 5 W. Va. 1, 13 Am. Rep. 629; Ingraham v. Hutchinson, 2 Conn. 597; Gerber v. Grabel, 16 Ill. 217; and even where it is accepted, its application should be limited to cases where the easement is strictly necessary to the beneficial user of the property granted; Turner v. Thompson, 58 Ga. 268, 24 Am. Rep. 497; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 305.

One who claims that the land adjoining his shall remain unimproved should show an express grant or covenant; Morrison v. Marquardt, 24 Ia. 35, 92 Am. Dec. 444. There can be no such easement by implication over adjoining unimproved land of the grantor; id.; Stein v. Hauck, 56 Ind. 68, 26 Am. Rep. 10; Keating v. Springer, 146 Ill. 481, 34 N. E. 805, 22 L. R. A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175; Mullen v. Stricker, 19 Ohio St. 135, 2 Am. Rep. 379; Rennyson's Appeal, 94 Pa. 147, 39 Am. Rep. 777; Wilmurt v. McGrane, 16 App. Div. 412, 45 N. Y. Supp. 32. But it has been held that a grantee of land has an easement of light by implied grant over the adjoining unimproved land of his grantor; Sutphen v. Therkelson, 38 N. J. Eq. 318; Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 25, 26 Sup. Ct. 224, 50 L. Ed. 353; Janes v. Jenkins, 34 Md. 1, 6 Am. Rep. 300. In 15 L. Q. R. 317, it is said that American courts, in declining to follow the English doctrine, have assumed that it was unknown prior to Independence. It was so said by Bronson, J., in Parker v. Foote, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 309. But this is said to be incorrect. There is a dictum of Wray, C. J., in Mosely v. Bland (1611), cited in 9 Rep. 58 b., and a reference to it as an established doctrine in 1443 Y. B., 32 Hen. VI, f. 15, and in 4 Del. Ch. 643, it was held that the doctrine was part of the common law of England and of the colonies at the time of American Independence, and as such continued to be the law of Delaware under the constitution adopted in 1776. See Ark.

As between landlord and tenant it is held that a lease of a tenement carries with it an implied grant of the right to light and air from the adjoining land of the landlord where the situation and habitual use of the demised tenement are such that the right is essential to its beneficial enjoyment; Darnell v. Show-Case Co., 129 Ga. 62, 58 S. E. 631, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 333, 121 Am. St. Rep. 206; Ware v. Chew, 43 N. J. Eq. 493, 11 Atl. 746; Case v. Minot, 158 Mass. 577, 33 N. E. 700, 22 L. R. A. 536 (where the tenant of an upper floor was held entitled to light and air from a well); Doyle v. Lord, 64 N. Y. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 629; Hazlett v. Powell, 30 Pa. 293; contra, Keating v. Springer, 146 Ill. 484, 34 N. E. 805, 22 L. R. A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175; Myers v. Gemmel, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 537.

As to the right of an abutting owner to light and air over the highway, see Ark.

ANCIENT READINGS. Essays on the early English statutes. Co. Litt. 280.

ANCIENT RECORDS. See ANCIENT WRITINGS.

ANCIENT RENT. The rent reserved at the time the lease was made, if the building was not then under lease. 2 Vern. 542.

ANCIENT WRITINGS. Deeds, wills, and other writings, more than thirty years old.

They may, in general, be read in evidence without any other proof of their execution than that they have been in the possession of those claiming rights under them; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 141; 12 M. & W. 205; 8 Q. B. 158; 7 Beav. 93; Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 4 L. Ed. 553; Lessee of Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 319, 8 L. Ed. 140; Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 663, 9 L. Ed. 266; Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 292, 3 Am. Dec. 485; Middleton v. Mass, 2 Nott. & McC. (S. C.) 55; Duncan v. Beard, id. 400; Tolman v. Emerson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 160; Crane v. Marshall, 16 Me. 27, 33 Am. Dec. 631; Dodge v. Briggs, 27 Fed. 170; O'Donnell v. Johns & Co., 76 Tex. 362, 13 S. W. 376; Pettingell v. Boynton, 139 Mass. 244, 29 N. E. 655; McClaskey v. Barr, 47 Fed. 154; King v. Sears, 91 Ga. 577, 18 S. E. 830; Whitman v. Heneberry, 73 Ill. 109. As to the admission of duplicate copies, see National Commercial Bank v. Gray, 71 Hun 295, 24 N. Y. Supp. 997. See DECLARATION; EVIDENCE.

The rule is broad enough to admit ancient deeds purporting to have been signed by an agent without production of the power of attorney; Wilson v. Snow, 228 U. S. 217, 33 Sup. Ct. 487, 57 L. Ed. —.

Spanish documents produced to and inspected by the court, coming from official custody and bearing on their face every evidence of age and authenticity, and otherwise entitled to admissibility as ancient documents, will not be excluded because subjected to various changes of possession during the transition of the government of Florida from Spain to the United States and during the Civil War, it not appearing that they were ever out of the custody of a proper custodian, that the originals were lost, or that there had been any fraudulent substitution; McGuire v. Blount, 199 U. S. 142, 26 Sup. Ct. 1, 50 L. Ed. 125.

Ancient documents are not admissible in evidence as "public documents" where they were not intended to be so, but to serve temporary purposes only. Also where the records were made by a deceased official, there being nothing to show that they were made contemporaneously with the doing of something which it was the duty of the deceased official to record. In this case it was attempted to prove that certain land, within legal memory, had been covered by the sea. A survey made in 1616 by the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports and an estimate by the King's engineer for the reparation of certain castles were rejected for the above reasons; [1905] 2 Ch. 538.

Where an instrument itself would be admissible without proof of execution, being over thirty years old, and its absence is satisfactorily accounted for, held that evidence of its contents was likewise admissible without proof of execution; Walker v. Peterson (Tex.) 33 S. W. 269, Dec. 18, 1895.

A deed signed by the grantor by his mark and not witnessed or acknowledged, and therefore insufficient on its face, is inadmissible as an ancient deed without proof of execution; O'Neal v. Railroad Co., 140 Ala. 378, 37 South. 275, 1 Ann. Cas. 319. As a general rule in the case of ancient writings, proof of execution is not necessary; Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389, 6 Sup. Ct. 780, 29 L. Ed. 915; Whitman v. Heneberry, 73 Ill. 109; such documents when admitted are to be construed as duly executed; Brown v. Wood, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 155; and the genuineness must be established; McCleskey's Adm'rs v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551; mere antiquity is not enough if the paper appears defective upon its face; Reaume v. Chambers, 22 Mo. 36; Williams v. Bass, 22 Vt. 352; mere production is not sufficient; Fogal v. Pirro, 23 N. Y. Super. Ct. 100; when no consideration is expressed and the words "this indenture" are omitted, it is insufficient; Gitting's Lessee v. Hall, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 14, 2 Am. Dec. 502. Deeds were admitted, though defective in form and execution, in Hoge v. Hubb, 94 Mo. 489, 7 S. W. 443; Hill v. Lord, 48 Me. 83; White v. Hutchings, 40 Ala. 253, 88 Am. Dec. 766.

ANCIENTS. Gentlemen in the Inns of Courts who are of a certain standing.

In the Middle Temple, all who have passed their readings are termed ancients. In Gray's Inn, the ancients are the oldest barristers; besides which, the society consists of benchers, barristers, and students; in the Inns of Chancery, it consists of ancients and students or clerks.

The Council of Ancients was the upper Chamber of the French legislature under the constitution of 1795, consisting of 250, each required to be at least forty years old.

ANCIENTY. Eldership; seniority. Used in the statute of Ireland, 14 Hen. VIII; Cowel.

ANCILLARY (Lat. ancilla, a handmaid). Auxiliary, subordinate.

As it is beneath the dignity of the king's courts to be merely ancillary to other inferior jurisdictions, the cause, when once brought there, receives its final determination; 3 Bla. Com. 98.

Used of deeds, and also of an administration of an estate taken out in the place where assets are situated, which is subordinate to the principal administration, which is that of the domicile; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 583. See ADMINISTRATION. And in the same way in the case of receiverships. See RECEIVER.

ANCIPITIS USUS (Lat.). Of use for various purposes.

As it is impossible to ascertain the final use of an article ancipitis usus, it is not an injurious rule which deduces the final use from its immediate destination; 1 Kent 140.

AND. A conjunction connecting words or phrases expressing the idea that the latter is to be added to or taken along with the first.

It is said to be equivalent to "as well as"; Porter v. Moores, 4 Helsk. (Tenn.) 16.

It is sometimes construed as meaning "or," and has been so treated in the construction of statutes; Bay State Iron Co. v. Goodall, 39 N. H. 223, 75 Am. Dec. 219; U. S. v. Fisk, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 445, 18 L. Ed. 243; 1 U. C. Q. B. 357, deeds; Jackson v. Topping, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 388, 19 Am. Dec. 515; resolutions of a corporate board of directors; Brown v. Furniture Co., 58 Fed. 286, 7 C. C. A. 225, 22 L. R. A. 817 (per Taft, C. J.); and wills; Sayward v. Sayward, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 210, 22 Am. Dec. 191; 1 Ves. 217; 7 id. 453; 4 Bligh U. R. 321; Jackson v. Blanshan, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 54, 5 Am. Dec. 188 (per Kent, C. J.); Janney v. Sprigg, 7 Gill (Md.) 197, 48 Am. Dec. 557, where the cases are reviewed, as also in a note thereto in 48 Am. Dec. 565.

That the power to change the words is not arbitrary, but only to effectuate the intention, see Armstrong v. Moran, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 314.

The character & has been recognized as "sanctioned by age and good use for perhaps centuries, and is used even at this day in written instruments, in daily transactions, and with such frequency that it may be said to be a part of our language"; Brown v. State, 16 Tex. App. 245. So the abbreviation &c. is said to have "been naturalized in English for ages," and was constantly used by Lord Coke without a suggestion from any quarter that it is not English; Berry v. Osborn, 28 N. H. 279.

See OR.

ANDROLEPSY. The taking by one nation of the citizens or subjects of another in order to compel the latter to do justice to the former. Wolffius, § 1164; Molloy, de Jure Mar. 26.

ANECIUS (Lat. Spelled also æsnecius, enitius, aneas, eneyus Fr. aisne). The eldest-born; the first-born; senior, as contrasted with the puis-ne (younger); Burrill, Law Dict. 99; Spelman, Gloss. Æsnecia.

ANGARIA. In Roman and Feudal Law. A service exacted by the government for public purposes; in particular, the right of a public officer to require the service of vehicles or ships; personal service exacted from a vassal by his lord. Dig. 50, 4, 18, § 29; Spelman, Gloss.

ANGARY, RIGHT OF. In International Law. Formerly the right (jus angariæ) claimed by a belligerent to seize merchant vessels in the harbors of the belligerent and to compel them, on payment of freight, to transport troops and supplies to a designated port. It was frequently exercised by Louis XIV. of France, but as a result of specific treaties entered into by states not to exercise the right, it has now come to be abandoned. 2 Opp. 446.

At the present day, the right of a belligerent to appropriate, either for use, or for destruction in case of necessity, neutral property temporarily located in his own territory or in that of the other belligerent. The property may be of any description whatever, provided the appropriation of it be for military or naval purposes.

Requisition of neutral property is justified by military necessity, and accordingly the right of angary is a belligerent right, although the claim of the neutral owner to indemnity properly comes under the law of neutrality (q. v.).

An indirect recognition, a fortiori, of the duty of the belligerent to pay indemnity may be found in Arts. 52-53 of IV Hague Conf. 1907, which requires the payment of such indemnity when private enemy property is requisitioned. Art. 19 of V Hague Conf. 1907, provides that railway material coming from the territory of neutral powers shall not be requisitioned, except in case of absolute necessity, and neutral powers may, under similar necessity, retain railway material coming from the territory of the belligerent, due compensation being made by both sides.

ANGEL. An ancient English coin, of the value of ten shillings sterling. Jacobs, Law Dict.; Cunningham.

ANGILD (Sax.). The bare, single valuation or estimation of a man or thing, according to the legal estimates.

When a crime was committed, before the Conquest, the angild was the money compensation that the person who had been wronged was entitled to receive. Maitl. Domesday Book & Beyond 274:

The terms twigild, trigild, denote twice, thrice, etc. angild. Leges Inæ, c. 20; Cowell.

ANHLOTE (Sax.). A single tribute or tax. Cunningham. The sense is, that every one should pay, according to the custom of the country, his respective part and share. Spelman, Gloss.

ANIENS. Void; of no force. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 214.

ANIENT (Fr. anéantir). Abrogated, or made null. Littleton, § 741.

ANIMAL. Any animate being which is not human, endowed with the power of voluntary motion.

Domitæ are those which have been tamed by man; domestic.

Feræ naturæ are those which still retain their wild nature.

A man may have an absolute property in animals of a domestic nature; 2 Mod. 319; 2 Bla. Com. 390; but not so in animals feræ naturæ, which belong to him only while in his possession; Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 546; Pierson v. Post, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 175, 2 Am. Dec. 264; Gillet v. Mason, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 16; State v. Murphy, 8 Blackf. (Ind.)

498; 2 B. & C. 934. Yet animals which are sometimes feræ naturæ may be tamed so as to become subjects of property; as an otter; State v. House, 65 N. C. 315, 6 Am. Rep. 744; pigeons which return to their house; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 362; 4 C. & P. 131; Com. v. Chace, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 15, 19 Am. Dec. 348; or pheasants hatched under a hen; 1 Fost. & F. 350. And the flesh of animals feræ naturæ may be the subject of larceny; 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 572; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 501; 2 C. & K. 981; State v. House, 65 N. C. 315, 6 Am. Rep. 744.

Animals feræ naturæ were considered by the Roman law as belonging in common to all the citizens of the state; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 319, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793; and by the common law the property in game was based on common ownership and subject to governmental authority; 2 Bla. Com. 14. One may have the privilege of hunting wild animals to the exclusion of other persons; 7 Co. 18 a; but only by grant of the king or of his officers or by prescription; id. (the case of the swans). In the United States the ownership of such animals is vested in the state, not as proprietor, but in its sovereign capacity, as representing the people and for their benefit; Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 37 Pac. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129; State v. Repp, 104 Ia. 305, 73 N. W. 829, 40 L. R. A. 687, 65 Am. St. Rep. 463. It alone has power to control the killing and ownership of wild game; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 532, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793. Animals wild by nature are subjects of ownership while living only when on the land of the person claiming them; Cal. Civ. Code § 656. Under this provision it was held that one has a right in wild game birds within his game preserves, which entitles him to protect them against trespassers; Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 378, 46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 66. Deer, when reclaimed and enclosed, are property, Dietrich v. Fargo, 194 N. Y. 359, 87 N. E. 518, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 696.

Bees are feræ naturæ; Goff v. Kilts, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 550; but when hived or reclaimed one may have a qualified property in them; Goff v. Kilts, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 550; Rexroth v. Coon, 15 R. I. 35, 23 Atl. 37, 2 Am. St. Rep. 863; because they "have a local habitation, more often in a tree than elsewhere, and while there they may be said to be within control, because the tree may at any time be felled. But the right to cut it down is in the owner of the soil, and therefore such property as the bees are susceptible of is in him also"; Cooley on Torts 435; State v. Repp, 104 Ia. 305, 73 N. W. 829, 40 L. R. A. 687, 65 Am. St. Rep. 463. The mere finder of them on the land of another acquires no title to the tree or the bees; State v. Repp, 104 Ia. 305, 73 N. W. 829, 40 L. R. A. 687, 65 Am. St. Rep. 463; Gillet v. Mason, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 16; Merrills v. Goodwin, 1 Root (Conn.) 209. In a suit against the owner of bees for injuries caused by them to horses, it was held that however it might have been anciently, in modern days the bee has become almost as completely domesticated as the ox or the cow; Earl v. Van Alstine, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 630.

But the ancient rule that animals feræ naturæ can only be the subject of property while in actual possession, and that loss of possession without intention to return on the part of the animal carries with it the loss of property by the owner; Mullett v. Bradley, 24 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 695, 53 N. Y. Supp. 781; seems inconsistent with the related law governing the responsibility of owners for injuries done by such animals; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 346; as where a bear slipped his collar and in his escape to the woods injured a man, the owner was held liable; Vredenburg v. Behan, 33 La. Ann. 627; but where a sea lion escaped from the possession of its owner and was abandoned by him and recaptured a year afterwards seventy miles from the place of its escape, the owner was held to have lost his property, expressly on the ground of loss of possession; Mullett v. Bradley, 24 Misc. Rep. 695, 53 N. Y. Supp. 781; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 346. In Manning v. Mitcherson, 69 Ga. 447, 47 Am. Rep. 764, it was said that to hold that wild animals of a menagerie, should they escape from their owner's immediate possession, would belong to the first person who should subject them to his dominion, would be an injustice.

The common law recognized a property in dogs; State v. Sumner, 2 Ind. 377; Chapman v. Decrow, 93 Me. 378, 45 Atl. 295, 74 Am. St. Rep. 357; Uhlein v. Comack, 109 Mass. 273; and in the United States it is generally recognized by the law; Fisher v. Badger, 95 Mo. App. 289, 69 S. W. 26; Harrington v. Hall, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 72, 63 Atl. 875; Jones v. R. Co., 75 Miss. 970, 23 South. 358; Reed v. Goldneck, 112 Mo. App. 310, 86 S. W. 1104. Such property, however, is held to be of a peculiar character; Chunot v. Larson, 43 Wis. 536, 28 Am. Rep. 567; and of a qualified nature; Woolf v. Chalker, 31 Conn. 121, 81 Am. Dec. 175; City of Hagerstown v. Witmer, 86 Md. 293, 37 Atl. 965, 39 L. R. A. 649. The owner may recover for its wrongful injury; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 129 Ala. 322, 29 South. 859, 87 Am. St. Rep. 64; Chapman v. Decrow, 93 Me. 378, 45 Atl. 295, 74 Am. St. Rep. 357; Moore v. Electric Co., 136 N. C. 554, 48 S. E. 822, 67 L. R. A. 470; or its conversion; Graham v. Smith, 100 Ga. 434, 28 S. E. 225, 40 L. R. A. 503, 62 Am. St. Rep. 323; or unlawful killing; Wheatley v. Harris, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 468, 70 Am. Dec. 258; Smith v. Ry. Co., 79 Minn. 254, 82 N. W. 577; State v. Coleman, 29 Utah, 417, 82 Pac. 465; Harrington v. Hall, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 72, 63 Atl. 875. At common law it was not larceny to steal a dog; 4 Bla. Com. 235; Mullaly v. People, 86 N. Y. 365;

State v. Jenkins, 78 N. C. 481; Jenkins v. Ballantyne, 8 Utah, 245, 30 Pac. 760, 16 L. R. A. 689 (see note in 15 Am. Rep. 356); because larceny was a crime punishable by death, and it was thought not fit that a man should die for a dog; Brainard v. Knapp, 9 Misc. 207, 29 N. Y. Supp. 678; but by statute in many of the states it is now made larceny; Com. v. Depuy, 148 Pa. 201, 23 Atl. 896; Patton v. State, 93 Ga. 111, 19 S. E. 734, 24 L. R. A. 732; Johnson v. McConnell, 80 Cal. 545, 22 Pac. 219; Harrington v. Miles, 11 Kan. 481, 15 Am. Rep. 355; City of Carthage v. Rhodes, 101 Mo. 175, 14 S. W. 181, 9 L. R. A. 352; State v. Mease, 69 Mo. App. 581; Harris v. Eaton, 20 R. I. 84, 37 Atl. 308. There is a conflict of opinion as to whether statutes against taking goods or other property shall be construed to include dogs. In subjecting them to taxation they are thereby made the subject of larceny under the generic term personal property or chattel; Com. v. Hazelwood, 84 Ky. 681, 2 S. W. 489; and see Hurley v. State, 30 Tex. App. 335, 17 S. W. 455, 28 Am. St. Rep. 916; Mullaly v. People, 86 N. Y. 365; but by other courts it is held that taxes are not imposed on the theory that they are property, but as police regulations; State v. Doe, 79 Ind. 9, 41 Am. Rep. 599; State v. Lymus, 26 Ohio St. 400, 20 Am. Rep. 772.

A statute requiring dogs to be put on the assessment rolls, and limiting any recovery by the owner to the value fixed by himself for the purpose of taxation, is constitutional; Sentell v. Railroad Co., 166 U. S. 698, 17 Sup. Ct. 693, 41 L. Ed. 1169. In this case the animal was a valuable Newfoundland bitch kept by the owner for breeding purposes and was killed by an electric car. The court held that the statute put a premium upon valuable dogs by giving them a recognized position and permitting the owner to put his own valuation upon them.

They are embraced in the term "all brute creatures"; State v. Giles, 125 Ind. 124, 25 N. E. 159; or "animals"; Warner v. Perry, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 337; State v. Coleman, 29 Utah, 417, 82 Pac. 465; or "domestic animal"; Shaw v. Craft, 37 Fed. 317 (contra, State v. Harriman, 75 Me. 562, 46 Am. Rep. 423); and have been held to be included in the term "chattel"; Com. v. Hazelwood, 84 Ky. 681, 2 S. W. 489; see 40 L. R. A. 503 n.; not within the term "other beasts"; U. S. v. Gideon, 1 Minn. 292 (Gil. 226).

They are not considered as being upon the same plane with horses, cattle, sheep and other domesticated animals (see State v. Harriman, 75 Me. 562), but rather in the category of cats, monkeys, parrots, singing birds, etc., kept for pleasure. They are peculiar in that they differ among themselves more widely than any other class of animals, and can hardly be said to have a characteristic common to the entire race. They stand between animals feræ naturæ, in which, until killed, there is no property, and domestic animals, in which the right of property is complete; Sentell v. R. Co., 166 U. S. 698, 17 Sup. Ct. 693, 41 L. Ed. 1169.

A dog cannot lawfully be killed merely for trespassing; Marshall v. Blackshire, 44 Ia. 475; Brent v. Kimball, 60 Ill. 211, 14 Am. Rep. 35; Dinwiddie v. State, 103 Ind. 101, 2 N. E. 290; Bowers v. Horen, 93 Mich. 420, 53 N. W. 535, 17 L. R. A. 773, 32 Am. St. Rep. 513; Fenton v. Bisel, 80 Mo. App. 135; but killing a trespassing dog is justifiable if it be necessary to protect one's property; King v. Kliue, 6 Pa. 318; Fisher v. Badger, 95 Mo. App. 289, 69 S. W. 26; and where dogs congregated on one's premises at night and by their noise interfered with the rest of a family, shooting among them was justified, as a reasonable and necessary means to protect the family from a nuisance; Hubbard v. Preston, 90 Mich. 221, 51 N. W. 209, 15 L. R. A. 249, 30 Am. St. Rep. 426.

The owner of any animal, tame or wild, is liable for the exercise of such dangerous tendencies as generally belong to its nature, but not of any not in accordance with its nature, unless the owner or keeper knew, or ought to have known, of the existence of such dangerous tendency; Whart. Negl. § 923. To recover for damages inflicted by a ferocious dog, it is not necessary actually to prove that it has bitten a person before; L. R. 2 C. P. 1; Linnehan v. Sampson, 126 Mass. 511, 30 Am. Rep. 692; Rider v. White, 65 N. Y. 54, 22 Am. Rep. 600; Rowe v. Ehrmanntraut, 92 Minn. 17, 99 N. W. 211; Barclay v. Hartman, 2 Marv. (Del.) 351, 43 Atl. 174; McConnell v. Lloyd, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 25.

The owner of a mischievous animal, known to him to be so, is responsible, when he permits him to go at large, for the damage he may do; Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 25 L. Ed. 487; Lyons v. Merrick, 105 Mass. 71; Partlow v. Haggarty, 35 Ind. 178; Kightlinger v. Egan, 75 Ill. 141; Meibus v. Dodge, 38 Wis. 300, 20 Am. Rep. 6; Snyder v. Patterson, 161 Pa. 98, 28 Atl. 1006; Shaw v. Craft, 37 Fed. 317; Harvey v. Buchanan, 121 Ga. 384, 49 S. E. 281; Burleigh & Jackson v. Hines, 124 Ia. 199, 99 N. W. 723; he is liable, though not negligent, in the matter of his escape from a close; Hammond v. Melton, 42 Ill. App. 186; Vredenburg v. Behan, 33 La. Ann. 627; Manger v. Shipman, 30 Neb. 352, 46 N. W. 527; 19 Ont. Rep. 39. In Muller v. McKesson, 73 N. Y. 195, 29 Am. Rep. 123, it is said that though it may be, in a certain sense, that the action for injury by vicious animals is based upon negligence, such negligence consists not in the manner of keeping the animal, or the care exercised in respect to confining him, but in the fact that he is ferocious and the owner knows it. The negligence consists in keeping such an animal. See Speckmann v. Kreig, 79 Mo. App. 376. This rule is old: "If an ox gore a man or woman, that they die; then the ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quit. But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death." Exodus xxi, 28, 29.

One knowingly harboring a vicious and dangerous dog is liable for damages sustained by others from its bite; McGurn v. Grubnau, 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 454, 459. In [1908] 2 K. B. Div. 352, Channel, J., said that keeping a dog known to be savage stands on the same footing as keeping a wild beast. It is enough if he occasionally attacks human beings without provocation; Merritt v. Matchett, 135 Mo. App. 176, 115 S. W. 1066; the owner must have had actual knowledge; Muller v. Shufeldt, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1012; Alexander v. Crosby, 143 Ia. 50, 119 N. W. 717; but constructive knowledge has been held sufficient; Merritt v. Matchett, 135 Mo. App. 176, 115 S. W. 1066; the mere fact of the attack does not raise a presumption that the dog was vicious, but it can be established by proof that on previous occasions it had attacked people without provocation; id.; and one who has long harbored a vicious dog is presumed to know its propensities; id. Running out and barking at horses and persons passing is not, as a matter of law, evidence of viciousness; Muller v. Shufeldt, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1012. Where one kept dogs of the same family and appearance, a person bitten by one of them is not required to prove which one, nor to prove that previous attacks on others were made by the same dog; McGurn v. Grubnau, 37 Super. Ct. Pa. 454, 459.

On the other hand it has been held that when wild animals are kept for a purpose recognized as not censurable, all that can be demanded of their keeper is that he shall take that superior precaution to prevent their doing mischief which their propensities in that direction justly demand of him; Coolley, Torts (3d ed.) 707, n.; 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748, n. One who knowingly, voluntarily and unnecessarily places himself within reach of a ferocious animal which is chained up cannot recover for injuries received; Ervin v. Woodruff, 119 App. Div. 603, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1051; Molloy v. Starin, 113 App. Div. 852, 99 N. Y. Supp. 603. An injunction will lie against keeping a vicious dog without appropriate restraint; it is a nuisance; Rider v. Clarkson, 77 N. J. Eq. 469, 78 Atl. 676, 140 Am. St. Rep. 614.

Any person may justify the killing of ferocious animals; Leonard v. Wilkins, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 233; Putnam v. Payne, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 312; Nehr v. State, 35 Neb. 638, 53 N. W. 589, 17 L. R. A. 771.

Running at large is defined as strolling about without restraint or confinement. Morgan v. People, 103 Ill. App. 257.

An animal untethered and unattended in the street in front of its owner's premises was held to be running at large; Decker v. McSorley, 111 Wis. 91, 86 N. W. 554; or trespassing upon the premises of another and not under the immediate control of the owner; Gilbert v. Stephens, 6 Okl. 673, 55 Pac. 1070; but a domestic animal which has escaped from its inclosure without the fault of the owner; Briscoe v. Alfrey, 61 Ark. 196, 32 S. W. 505, 30 L. R. A. 607, 54 Am. St. Rep. 203; Myers v. Lape, 101 Ill. App. 182; and to recover which such owner is making reasonable efforts, is not running at large; Myers v. Lape, 101 Ill. App. 182.

It is unlawful to kill a dog because he is in the street outside of a poultry yard, inclosed by an impassable fence, though the dog had harassed the poultry before, or because of his predatory habits; State v. Smith, 156 N. C. 628, 72 S. E. 321, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 910.

It is the duty of the owner of domestic animals to keep them upon his own premises; Klenberg v. Russell, 125 Ind. 531, 25 N. E. 596; Robinson v. R. Co., 79 Mich. 323, 44 N. W. 779, 19 Am. St. Rep. 174. It is the nature of cattle and other animals to stray and to do damage, and the owner is bound to keep them from straying at his peril; Haigh v. Bell, 41 W. Va. 19, 23 S. E. 666, 31 L. R. A. 131. The common law doctrine is that the owner of cattle must fence them in; Taber v. Cruthers, 59 Hun 619, 13 N. Y. Supp. 446; Bulpit v. Matthews, 145 Ill. 345, 34 N. E. 525, 22 L. R. A. 55. He is not compelled to fence the cattle of others out. Owing to change of circumstances, due in part to the settlement of a new country, in many states a different rule prevails. The owner of land must fence out the cattle of others. He need not fence in his own. He takes the risk of loss or injury to them from their running at large and wandering into danger; Haigh v. Bell, 41 W. Va. 19, 23 S. E. 666, 31 L. R. A. 131; Sprague v. R. Co., 6 Dak. 86, 50 N. W. 617; Buford v. Houtz, 133 U. S. 320, 10 Sup. Ct. 305, 33 L. Ed. 618; Kerwhaker v. R. Co., 3 Ohio St. 179, 62 Am. Dec. 246; Muir v. Thixton, 119 Ky. 753, 78 S. W. 466. To leave uncultivated lands uninclosed is an implied license to cattle to graze on them; Kerwhaker v. R. Co., 3 Ohio St. 179, 62 Am. Dec. 246; Seeley v. Peters, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 142; Comerford v. Dupuy, 17 Cal. 308; Chase v. Chase, 15 Nev. 259; Delaney v. Errickson, 10 Neb. 492, 6 N. W. 600, 35 Am. Rep. 487; Burgwyn v. Whitfield, 81 N. C. 261; Moore v. White, 45 Mo. 206; Little Rock & F. S. Ry. Co. v. Finley, 37 Ark. 562; Lee County v. Yarbrough, 85 Ala. 590, 5 South. 341; Frazier v. Nortinus, 34 Ia. 82; Faut v. Lyman, 9 Mont. 61, 22 Pac. 120; Meyers v. Menter, 63 Neb. 427, 88 N. W. 662. The keeping of live stock is usually under police regulation; Reser v. Umatilla County, 48 Or. 326, 86 Pac. 595, 120 Am. St. Rep. 815; and in many states statutes forbidding animals to run at large, or restricting them or limiting such rights, are in force. By statute in Illinois the common law liability is now restored; Fredrick v. White, 73 Ill. 590; as it is in Pennsylvania; Barber v. Mensch, 157 Pa. 390, 27 Atl. 708. A statute in Idaho prohibits sheep from grazing on the public domain within two miles of a dwelling house. This was held not an unreasonable discrimination against the sheep industry, but rather as a matter of protection to the owners of other grazing cattle, as cattle will not graze and will not thrive upon lands where sheep are grazed to any extent; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 27 Sup. Ct. 289, 51 L. Ed. 499; and the act was held to be a valid exercise of the police power; Sifers v. Johnson, 7 Ida. 798, 65 Pac. 709, 54 L. R. A. 785, 97 Am. St. Rep. 271; Sweet v. Ballentyne, 8 Ida. 431, 69 Pac. 995. See FENCE.

In the western states cattle are required to be branded. Such marks and brands are evidence of ownership and are a matter of statutory regulation, and the court will take judicial notice that in some states cattle run at large in great stretches of country with no other means of determining their separate ownership than by the marks and brands upon them; New Mexico v. R. Co., 203 U. S. 51, 27 Sup. Ct. 1, 51 L. Ed. 78.

As to the right to impound estrays, see ESTRAY; POUND.

Acts of congress have established a bureau of animal industry, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to use such means as he may deem necessary for the prevention of the spread of pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases of animals. Carriers are forbidden to receive for transportation any live stock affected by any contagious or infectious disease. A state statute for the protection of domestic animals from contagious diseases is not a regulation of commerce between the states simply because it may incidentally or indirectly affect such commerce; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 627, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878, citing Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 16 Sup. Ct. 1086, 41 L. Ed. 166; New York, N. H. & H. R. R. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 17 Sup. Ct. 418, 41 L. Ed. 853; and where a statute provides a right of action for injuries arising from disease communicated to domestic cattle by cattle of a particular kind brought into a state, it does not conflict with any regulation established under the authority of congress to prevent the spread of contagious or infectious diseases from one state to another; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 627, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878. See COMMERCE; INSPECTION LAWS; COMMON CARRIERS.

See AGISTOR; ACCESSION; CRUELTY.

Animals of a base nature are those animals which, though they may be reclaimed, are not such that at common law a larceny may be committed of them, by reason of the baseness of their nature.

Some animals which are now usually tamed come within this class, as dogs and cats; and others which, though wild by nature and often reclaimed by art and industry, clearly fall within the same rule, as bears, foxes, apes, monkeys, ferrets, and the like; Coke, 3d Inst. 109; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 511, 512; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 33, § 36; 4 Bla. Com. 236; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 614. See 1 Wms. Saund. 84, note 2.

ANIMAL INDUSTRY, BUREAU OF. See HEALTH.

ANIMO (Lat.). With intention. See ANIMUS, used with various other words.

ANIMUS (Lat., mind). The intention with which an act is done. See INTENT.

ANIMUS CANCELLANDI. An intention to destroy or cancel. See CANCELLATION.

ANIMUS CAPIENDI. The intention to take. 4 C. Rob. Adm. 126, 155.

ANIMUS FURANDI. The intention to steal.

In order to constitute larceny, the thief must take the property animo furandi; but this is expressed in the definition of larceny by the word felonious; Coke, 3d Inst. 107; Hale, Pl. Cr. 503; 4 Bla. Com. 229. See 2 Russell, Crimes 96; Rapalje, Larceny, § 18. When the taking of property is lawful, although it may afterwards be converted animo furandi to the taker's use, it is not larceny; Bacon, Abr. Felony, C; People v. Anderson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 294, 7 Am. Dec. 462; Ry. & M. 160, 137; State v. Shermer, 55 Mo. 83; [1895] 2 Ir. 709. See LARCENY; MENS REA; MOTIVE; INTENT.

ANIMUS LUCRANDI. The intention to gain or profit. 3 Kent 357.

ANIMUS MANENDI. The intention of remaining.

To acquire a domicile, the party must have his abode in one place, with the intention of remaining there; for without such intention no new domicile can be gained, and the old will not be lost. See DOMICIL.

ANIMUS MORANDI. The intention to remain or delay.

ANIMUS RECIPIENDI. The intention of receiving.

ANIMUS REPUBLICANDI. The intention of republishing (as a will).

ANIMUS RESTITUENDI. An intention of restoring. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 3.

ANIMUS REVERTENDI. The intention of returning.

A man retains his domicile if he leaves it animo revertendi; In re Miller's Estate, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 312, 24 Am. Dec. 345; 4 Bla. Com. 225; 2 Russ. Cr. 23; Poph. 42, 52; 4 Coke 40. See DOMICIL.

ANIMUS REVOCANDI. An intention to revoke. 1 Powell, Dev. 595.

ANIMUS TESTANDI. An intention to make a testament or will.

This is required to make a valid will; for, whatever form may have been adopted, if there was no animus testandi, there can be no will. An idiot, for example, can make no will, because he can have no intention; Beach, Wills 77.

ANNALES. A title given to the Year Books. Burrill, Law Dict. Young cattle; yearlings. Cowell.

ANNALS. Masses said in the Romish church for the space of a year or for any other time, either for the soul of a person deceased, or for the benefit of a person living, or for both. Aylif. Parerg.

ANNATES. First-fruits paid out of spiritual benefices to the pope, being the value of one year's profit. Cowell.

ANNEXATION. The union of one thing to another.

It conveys the idea, properly, of fastening a smaller thing to a larger; an incident to a principal. It has been applied to denote the union of Texas to the United States.

Actual annexation includes every movement by which a chattel can be joined or united to the freehold. Mere juxtaposition, or the laying on of an object, however heavy, does not amount to annexation; Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 64.

Constructive annexation is the union of such things as have been holden parcel of the realty, but which are not actually annexed, fixed, or fastened to the freehold. Sheppard, Touchst. 469; Amos & F. Fixt. 3d ed. See FIXTURES.

ANNI NUBILES (Lat. marriageable years). The age at which a girl becomes by law fit for marriage; the age of twelve.

ANNICULUS (Lat.). A child of a year old. Calvinus, Lex.

ANNO DOMINI (Lat. in the year of our Lord; abbreviated A. D.). The computation of time from the birth of Christ.

In a complaint, the year of the alleged offence may be stated by "A. D.," followed by words expressing the year; Com. v. Clark, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 596. But an indictment or complaint which states the year of the commission of the offence in figures only, without prefixing the letters "A. D.," is insufficient; Com. v. McLoon, 5 Gray (Mass.) 91, 66 Am. Dec. 354. The letters "A. D.," followed by figures expressing the year, have been held sufficient; State v. Hodgeden, 3 Vt. 481; State v. Seamons, 1 G. Greene (Ia.) 418; State v. Reed, 35 Me. 489, 58 Am. Dec. 727; 1 Bennett & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 512; but the phrase, or its equivalents, may be dispensed with; 12 Q. B. 834; Engleman v. State, 2 Ind. 91, 52 Am. Dec. 494; State v. Munch, 22 Minn. 67; but see Whitesides v. People, Breese (Ill.) 21. See Whart. Prec. 4th ed. (2) n. g.; YEAR OF OUR LORD; INDICTION.

ANNONA. Barley; corn; grain; a yearly contribution of food, of various kinds, for support.

Annona porcum, acorns; annonia frumentum hordeo admixtum, corn and barley mixed; annonia panis, bread without reference to the amount. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

The term is used in the old English law, and also in the civil law quite generally, to denote anything contributed by one person towards the support of another; as, si quis mancipio annonam dederit (if any shall have given food to a slave); Du Cange.

ANNONÆ CIVILES. Yearly rents issuing out of certain lands and payable to monasteries.

ANNOTATION. In Civil Law. The answers of the prince to questions put to him by private persons respecting some doubtful point of law. See RESCRIPT.

Summoning an absentee; Dig. 1. 5.

The designation of a place of deportation. Dig. 32. 1. 3.

ANNOYANCE. Discomfort; vexation. It is held to mean something less than nuisance. 25 S. J. 30. See NUISANCE.

ANNUAL ASSAY. An annual trial of the gold and silver coins of the United States, to ascertain whether the standard fineness and weight of the coinage is maintained.

At every delivery of coins made by the coiner to a superintendent, it is made the duty of the superintendent, in the presence of the assayer, to take indiscriminately a certain number of pieces of each variety for the annual trial of coins, the number for gold coins being not less than one piece for each one thousand pieces, or any fractional part of one thousand pieces delivered; and for silver coins, one piece for each two thousand pieces, or any fractional part of two thousand pieces delivered. The pieces so taken shall be carefully sealed up in an envelope, properly labelled, stating the date of the delivery, the number and denominations of the pieces enclosed, and the amount of the delivery from which they were taken. These sealed parcels containing the reserved pieces shall be deposited in a pyx, designated for the purpose at each mint, which shall be under the joint care of the superintendent and assayer, and be so secured that neither can have access to its contents without the presence of the other, and the reserved pieces in their envelopes from the coinage of each mint shall be transmitted quarterly to the mint at Philadelphia. A record shall also be kept of the number and denomination of the pieces so delivered, a copy of which shall be transmitted quarterly to the director of the mint; Sect. 40, Act of Feb. 12, 1873; U. S. R. S. § 3539.

To secure a due conformity in the gold and silver coins to their respective standards and weights, it is provided by law that an annual trial shall be made of the pieces reserved for this purpose at the mint and its branches, before the judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the comptroller of the currency, the assayer of the assay office at New York, and such other persons as the president shall from time to time designate for that purpose, who shall meet as assay commissioners, on the second Wednesday in February annually, at the mint in Philadelphia, to examine and test, in the presence of the director of the mint, the fineness and weight of the coins reserved by the several mints for this purpose, and may continue their meetings by adjournment, if necessary; and if a majority of the commissioners shall fail to attend at any time appointed for their meeting, then the director of the mint shall call a meeting of the commissioners at such other time as he may deem convenient, and if it shall appear that these pieces do not differ from the standard fineness and weight by a greater quantity than is allowed by law, the trial shall be considered and reported as satisfactory; but if any greater deviation from the legal standard or weight shall appear, this fact shall be certified to the president of the United States, and if, on a view of the circumstances of the case, he shall so decide, the officer or officers implicated in the error shall be therefor disqualified from holding their respective offices: § 48, Act of Feb. 12, 1873 (U. S. R. S. § 3547); id. §§ 49, 50 (R. S. §§ 3548, 3549). As to the standard weight and fineness of the gold and silver coins of the United States, see sections of the last-cited act. The limit of allowance for wastage is fixed: § 43, Act of Feb. 12, 1873; R. S. § 3542.

For the purpose of securing a due conformity in the weight of the coins of the United States, the brass troy pound weight procured by the minister of the United States (Mr. Gallatin) at London, in the year 1827, for the use of the mint, and now in the custody of the director thereof, shall be the standard troy pound of the mint, of the United States, conformably to which the coinage thereof shall be regulated; and it is made the duty of the director of the mint to procure and safely keep a series of standard weights corresponding to the aforesaid troy pound, and the weights ordinarily employed in the transactions of the mint shall be regulated according to such standards at least once in every year under his inspection, and their accuracy tested annually in the presence of the assay commissioners on the day of the annual assay; Act of Feb. 12, 1873; R. S. § 3548.

In England, the accuracy of the coinage is reviewed once in about every four years; no specific period being fixed by law. It is an ancient custom or ceremony, and is called the Trial of the Pyx; which name it takes from the pyx or chest in which the specimen-coins are deposited. These specimen-pieces are taken to be a fair representation of the whole money coined within a certain period. It having been notified to the government that a trial of the pyx is called for, the lord chancellor issues his warrant to summon a jury of goldsmiths who, on the appointed day, proceed to the Exchange Office, Whitehall, and there, in the presence of several privy councillors and the officers of the mint, receive the charge of the lord chancellor as to their important functions, who requests them to deliver to him a verdict of their finding. The jury proceed to Goldsmiths' Hall, London, where assaying apparatus and all other necessary appliances are provided, and, the sealed packages of the specimen-coins being delivered to them by the officers of the mint, they are tried by weight, and then a certain number are taken from the whole and melted into a bar, from which the assay trials are made, and a verdict is rendered according to the results which have been ascertained; Encyc. Brit. titles Coinage, Mint, Money, Numismatics.

ANNUAL INCOME. The annual receipts from property. See INCOME; TAX.

ANNUAL RENT. In Scotch Law. Interest.

To avoid the law against taking interest, a yearly rent was purchased; hence the term came to signify interest; Bell, Dict.; Paterson, Comp. §§ 19, 265.

ANNUALLY. Yearly; returning every year.

As applied to interest it is not an undertaking to pay interest at the end of one year only, but to pay interest at the end of each and every year during a period of time, either fixed or contingent; Sparhawk v. Wills, 6 Gray (Mass.) 164.

ANNUITY (Lat. annuus, yearly). A yearly sum stipulated to be paid to another in fee, or for life or years, and chargeable only on the person of the grantor. Co. Litt. 144 b; 2 Bla. Com. 40; Lumley, Ann. 1; Mayor, etc., of City of New Orleans v. Duplessis, 5 Mart. O. S. (La.) 312; Dav. Ir. 14; Stephens' Ex'rs

v. Milnor, 24 N. J. Eq. 358; Wagstaff v. Lowerre, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 216.

An annuity is different from a rent-charge, with which it is sometimes confounded,—the annuity being chargeable on the person merely, and so far personalty; while a rent-charge is something reserved out of realty, or fixed as a burden upon the estate in land; 2 Bla. Com. 40; Rolle, Abr. 226; Horton v. Cook, 10 Watts (Pa.) 127, 36 Am. Dec. 151. An annuity in fee is said to be a personal fee; for, though transmissible, as is real estate of inheritance; Ambli. Ch. 782; Challis, R. P. 46; liable to forfeiture as a hereditament; 7 Coke, 34 a; and not constituting assets in the hands of an executor, it lacks some other characteristics of realty. The husband is not entitled to curtesy, nor the wife to dower, in an annuity; Co. Litt. 32 a. It cannot be conveyed by way of use; 2 Wils. 224; is not within the statute of frauds, and may be bequeathed and assigned as personal estate; 2 Ves. Sen. 70; 4 B. & Ald. 59; Roscoe, Real Act. 68, 35; 3 Kent 460.

To enforce the payment of an annuity, an action of annuity lay at common law, but when brought for arrears must be before the annuity determines; Co. Litt. 285. In case of the insolvency or bankruptcy of the debtor, the capital of the constituted annuity becomes exigible; La. Civ. Code, art. 2769; stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, §§ 54, 108; 5 Ves. 708; 4 id. 763; 1 Belt, Supp. Ves. 308, 431.

Land charged with an annuity, having descended to heirs at law of which the annuitant is one, is relieved of the annuity only pro tanto; but quare if the annuitant had acquired the same right by purchase; Adams v. Heffernan, 9 Watts (Pa.) 529.

See CHARGE; LIFE TABLES.

ANNUL. To abrogate, nullify, or abolish; to make void.

It is not a technical word and there is nothing which prevents the idea from being expressed in equivalent words; Woodson v. Skinner, 22 Mo. 24.

ANNULUS ET BACULUS (Lat. ring and staff). The investiture of a bishop was per annulum et baculum by the prince's delivering to the prelate a ring and pastoral staff, or crozier. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 378.

ANNUM, DIEM ET VASTUM. See YEAR, DAY AND WASTE.

ANNUS LUCTUS (Lat.). The year of mourning. Code, 5. 9. 2.

It was a rule among the Romans, and also the Danes and Saxons, that the widows should not marry infra annum luctus (within the year of mourning); 1 Bla. Com. 457.

In the Transvaal a widower may not remarry within three months and a widow within 300 days, unless by dispensation. In the Orange River Colony the period for a widow is 280 days.

ANNUS UTILIS. A year made up of available or serviceable days. Brissonius; Calvinus, Lex. In prescription, the period of incapacity of a minor, etc., was not counted; it was no part of the anni utiles.

ANNUUS REDITUS. A yearly rent; annuity. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 41; Reg. Orig. 158 b.

ANONYMOUS. Without name.

Books published without the name of the author are said to be anonymous. Cases in the reports of which the names of the parties are not given are said to be anonymous.

An anonymous society in the Mexican code is one which has no firm name and is designated by the particular designation of the object of the undertaking. The shareholders are liable for debts only to the extent of their shares.

ANSWER. A defence in writing, made by a defendant to the charges contained in a bill or information filed by the plaintiff against him in a court of equity.

In case relief is sought by the bill, the answer contains both the defendant's defence to the case made by the bill, and the examination of the defendant, on oath, as to the facts charged in the bill, of which discovery is sought; Gresley, Eq. Ev. 19; Jeremy's Mitf. Eq. Pl. 15, 16. These parts were kept distinct from each other in the civil law; their union, in chancery, has caused much confusion, in equity pleading; Langd. Eq. Pl. 41; Story, Eq. Pl. § 850; Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. *711.

As to the form of the answer, it usually contains, in the following order: the title, specifying which of the defendants it is the answer of, and the names of the plaintiffs in the cause in which it is filed as answer; 8 Ves. 79; 11 id. 62; 1 Russ. 441; see McLure v. Colclough, 17 Ala. 89; a reservation to the defendant of all the advantages which might be taken by exception to the bill, which is mainly effectual in regard to other suits; Beames, Eq. Pl. 46; Surget v. Byers, 1 Hempst. 715, Fed. Cas. No. 13,629; O'Niell v. Cole, 4 Md. 107; the substance of the answer, according to the defendant's knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief, in which the matter of the bill, with the interrogatories founded thereon, are answered, one after the other, together with such additional matter as the defendant thinks necessary to bring forward in his defence, either for the purpose of qualifying or adding to the case made by the bill, or to state a new case on his own behalf; a general traverse or denial of all unlawful combinations charged in the bill, and of all other matters therein contained not expressly answered.

The answer must be upon oath of the defendant, or, if of a corporation, under its seal; Langd. Eq. Pl. § 78; Bisp. Eq. 9; Royston v. Royston, 21 Ga. 161; Lahens v. Fielden, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 22; see Maryland & N. Y.

Coal & Iron Co. v. Wingert, 8 Gill (Md.) 170; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. *734; Van Valtenburg v. Alberry, 10 Ia. 264; unless the plaintiff waives an oath; Story, Eq. Pl. § 824; Bingham v. Yeomans, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 58; Chace v. Holmes, 2 Gray (Mass.) 431; Clements v. Moore, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 299, 18 L. Ed. 786; Brown v. Bulkley, 14 N. J. Eq. 306; Wallwork v. Derby, 40 Ill. 527; in which case it must generally be signed by the defendant; 6 Ves. 171, 285; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 326; Van Valtenburg v. Alberry, 10 Ia. 264; and must be signed by counsel; Story, Eq. Pl. § 876; unless taken by commissioners; Davis v. Davidson, 4 McL. 136, Fed. Cas. No. 3,631; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. *732. It is held that a corporation cannot be compelled to answer under oath; Colgate v. Compagnie Française du Telegraphe De Paris à N. Y., 23 Fed. 82; Coca-Cola Co. v. Gay-Ola Co., 200 Fed. 720, 119 C. C. A. 164. Where the bill waives an answer under oath, the waiver is ineffectual unless accepted; Heath v. Ry. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 6,306; and if the defendant, notwithstanding the waiver, answers under oath, the answer has the same effect as if there had been no waiver; Conley v. Nailor, 118 U. S. 127, 6 Sup. Ct. 1001, 30 L. Ed. 112; Woodruff v. R. Co., 30 Fed. 91; but it is held that even if its answer when sworn to is evidence under the equity rule, it cannot prove an affirmative defence; Coca-Cola Co. v. Gay-Ola Co., 200 Fed. 720, 119 C. C. A. 164 (C. C. A. 6 Circ.).

Where bill waives answer under oath, the bill ceases to be a bill of discovery, and the defendant need not answer interrogatories therein; McFarland v. Bank, 132 Fed. 399. An averment that "defendant has no knowledge or belief" as to defendant's corporate capacity is sufficient to put plaintiff on proof thereof; W. L. Wells Co. v. Mfg. Co., 198 U. S. 177, 25 Sup. Ct. 640, 49 L. Ed. 1003.

As to substance, the answer must be full and perfect to all the material allegations of the bill, confessing and avoiding, denying or traversing, all the material parts; Comyns. Dig. Chancery, K, 2; Mayer v. Galluchat, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 1; Beall v. Blake, 10 Ga. 449; Shotwell's Adm'r v. Struble, 21 N. J. Eq. 31; 24 Beav. 421; not literally merely, but answering the substance of the charge; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 309; Grady v. Robinson, 28 Ala. 289; Pitts v. Hooper, 16 Ga. 442; Smith v. Loomis, 5 N. J. Eq. 60; and see Hogencamp v. Ackerman, 10 N. J. Eq. 267; must be responsive; Howell v. Robb, 7 N. J. Eq. 17; Chambers v. Warren, 13 Ill. 318; Mann v. Betterly, 21 Vt. 326; and must state facts, and not arguments, directly and without evasion; Story, Eq. Pl. § 852; Spivey v. Frazee, 7 Ind. 661; Gates v. Adams, 24 Vt. 70; Thompson v. Mills, 39 N. C. 390; Gamble & Johnston v. Johnson, 9 Mo. 605; without scandal; Langdon v. Pickering, 19 Me. 214; Burr v. Burton, 18 Ark. 215; or impertinence; Langdon v. Goddard, 3 Sto. 13, Fed. Cas. No. 8,061; 6 Beav. 558; Gier v. Gregg, 4 McL. 202, Fed. Cas. No. 5,406; Conwell v. Claypool, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 124. See 10 Sim. 345; 17 Eng. L. & Eq. 509; Saltmarsh v. Bower & Co., 22 Ala. 221; McIntyre v. Trustees of Union College, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 239; U. S. v. McLaughlin, 24 Fed. 823; Cramer v. Water Co., 39 N. J. Eq. 76; 6 Ves. 456.

Under the modern English practice the form of the answer has been much simplified; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, § 17. Under the General Orders of 1852 a form was adopted, though scarcely necessary in view of the absence of all technicality; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 724; 3 id. 2139. In the United States generally the answer has been simplified, but the variations from the old practice consist mainly in dividing the answer into numbered paragraphs, adjusting its general form to the bill as now drawn (see BILL), and in omitting the clause reserving exceptions (though in practice this is very frequently retained), and the clause denying combination, retaining merely, to form an issue on them, a general traverse of all allegations not expressly answered.

A material allegation in a bill, which is neither expressly admitted or denied, is deemed to be controverted; Glos v. Randolph, 133 Ill. 197, 24 N. E. 426; Yates v. Thompson, 44 Ill. App. 145.

Insufficiency of answer is a ground for exception when some material allegation, charge, or interrogatory is unanswered or not fully answered; West v. Williams, 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 358; Hardeman v. Harris, 7 How. (U. S.) 726, 12 L. Ed. 889; Lea v. Vanbibber, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 18. See Lanum v. Steel, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 280; McCormick v. Chamberlin, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 543; American Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 40 Fed. 384; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 760; Blaisdell v. Stevens, 16 Vt. 179.

Where the defendant in equity suffers a default he does not admit facts not alleged in the bill nor conclusions of the pleader from the facts stated; Cramer v. Bode, 24 Ill. App. 219.

An answer may, in some cases, be amended; 2 Bro. C. C. 143; 2 Ves. 85; to correct a mistake of fact; Ambl. 292; 1 P. Wms. 297; but not of law; Ambl. 65; nor any mistake in a material matter except upon evidence of surprise; Howe v. Russell, 36 Me. 124; Smith v. Babcock, 3 Sumn. 583, Fed. Cas. No. 13,008; 1 Bro. C. C. 319; and not, it seems, to the injury of others; Story, Eq. Pl. § 904; Bell's Adm'r v. Hall, 5 N. J. Eq. 49. The court may permit an answer to be amended even after the announcement of the decision of the cause; Arnett v. Welch's Ex'rs, 46 N. J. Eq. 543; 20 Atl. 48. A supplemental answer may be filed to introduce new matter; Suydam v. Truesdale, 6 McL. 459, Fed. Cas. No. 13,656; U. S. v. Morris, 7

Mackey (D. C.) 8; or correct mistakes; 2 Coll. 133; Graham v. Tankersley, 15 Ala. 634; Carey v. Ector, 7 Ga. 99; Coquillard v. Suydam, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 24; which is considered as forming a part of the original answer. See DISCOVERY; Mittf. Eq. Pl. 244, 254.

The effect of an answer must be overcome by two witnesses or by one witness and corroborating evidence; but the answer of a corporation is not entitled to the same probative force as that of an individual; Langd. Eq. Pl. § 87, citing Union Bank v. Geary, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 111, 8 L. Ed. 60; and the rule does not apply where there is a mere denial made for want of knowledge; Blair v. Silver Peak Mines, 93 Fed. 332.

For an historical account, see 2 Brown, Civ. Law 371, n.; Barton, Suit in Eq.; Langdell's Summary of Equity 41.

By the Equity Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, in effect February 1, 1913 (198 Fed. xix; 226 U. S. appendix) every defence to a bill in point of law, which might heretofore have been made by demurrer or plea, shall be made by motion to dismiss or by answer. Defences formerly presentable by plea in bar or abatement shall be made in the answer. It shall in short and simple terms set out the defence to each claim in the bill, omitting any mere statement of evidence and avoiding any general denial of the averments of the bill, but specifically admitting or denying or explaining the facts upon which the plaintiff relies, unless defendant is without knowledge, in which case he shall so state, such statement operating as a denial. It may state as many defences in the alternative, regardless of consistency, as the defendant deems essential. Counter-claims arising out of the transaction must be stated. Any set-off or counter-claim, which might be the subject of any independent equity suit, may be set up without cross-bill.

In Practice. The declaration of a fact by a witness after a question has been put, asking for it.

ANTAPOCHA (Lat.). An instrument by which the debtor acknowledges the debt due the creditor, and binds himself. A copy of the apocha signed by the debtor and delivered to the creditor. Calvinus, Lex.

ANTE JURAMENTUM (Lat.; called also Juramentum Calumniæ). The oath formerly required of the parties previous to a suit, —of the plaintiff that he would prosecute, and of the defendant that he was innocent. Jacobs, Dict.; Whishaw.

ANTE LITEM MOTAM. Before suit brought.

ANTE-NUPTIAL. Before marriage; before marriage, with a view to entering into marriage. See CONTEMPLATION OF MARRIAGE.

ANTE-NUPTIAL CONTRACT. A contract made before marriage.

The term is most generally applied to a contract entered into between a man and woman in contemplation of their future marriage, and in that case it is called a marriage contract.

A wife may waive all right to any portion of the estate of her husband by an ante-nuptial contract, and this is binding on her unless fraud, advantage or collusion can be shown; Edwards v. Martin, 39 Ill. App. 145. An ante-nuptial agreement that the wife shall claim no right of dower does not deprive her of her distributive share in the husband's personal property; Pitkin v. Peet, 87 Ia. 268, 54 N. W. 215. A contract by which each agreed to make no claim to the property of the one dying first is void so far as dower is concerned, as it makes no provision in lieu thereof; Brandon v. Dawson, 51 Mo. App. 237.

Conveyances made by one of two persons about to be married, usually called marriage settlements.

They are usually made in contemplation of marriage, for the benefit of the married pair, or one of them, or for the benefit of some other persons; as their children. They may be of either personal or real estate. Such settlements vest the property in trustees upon specified terms, usually, for the benefit of the husband and wife during their joint lives, and then for the benefit of the survivor for life, and afterwards for the benefit of children.

Ante-nuptial agreements of this kind will be enforced in equity by a specific performance of them, provided they are fair and valid and the intention of the parties is consistent with the principles and policy of law; Barnett v. Goings, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 284, 44 Am. Dec. 766; Eaton v. Tillinghast, 4 R. I. 276; Whitchote v. Lyle's Ex'rs, 28 Pa. 73; Magniac v. Thompson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 348, 8 L. Ed. 709; Neves v. Scott, 9 How. (U. S.) 196, 13 L. Ed. 102. Settlements after marriage, if made in pursuance of an agreement in writing entered into prior to the marriage, are valid both against creditors and purchasers; Reinhart v. Miller, 22 Ga. 402, 68 Am. Dec. 506.

A conveyance by the husband or wife prior to marriage, which, if permitted, would deprive the other of his or her marital rights in the property conveyed.

In Chandler v. Hollingsworth, 3 Del. Ch. 99, considering equitable relief against ante-nuptial agreements, Bates, Ch., held that the husband will be protected against a voluntary conveyance or settlement, by his intended wife, of all her estate, to the exclusion of the husband, made pending an engagement of marriage, without his knowledge, even in the absence of express misrepresentation or deceit, and whether the husband knew of the existence of the property or not; and that the wife's dower will be protected against the voluntary conveyance of the husband, under like circumstances. A settlement after marriage conveying property in execution of an oral ante-nuptial agreement is void as against creditors; 2 De G. & J. 76. But they have been allowed; Hussey v. Castle, 41 Cal. 239; Brown v. Lunt, 37 Me. 423. By an oral ante-nuptial agreement a husband agreed to convey to trustees, when it should come into possession, a reversion belonging to his wife to be held on certain trusts, which under voluntary settlements would not be valid as against creditors. In a post-nuptial writing the husband covenanted to perform the oral agreement. He afterwards became bankrupt. It was held that, the one agreement being oral and the other gratuitous, the trustee in bankruptcy would not be ordered to perform; [1901] 2 Ch. 145. It has been held that marriage is sufficient part performance to make the contract binding; Nowack v. Berger, 133 Mo. 24, 34 S. W. 489, 31 L. R. A. 810, 54 Am. St. Rep. 663; Chandler v. Hollingsworth, 3 Del. Ch. 99.

See MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT.

ANTEDATE. To put a date to an instrument of a time before the time it was written.

ANTENATI (Lat. born before). Those born in a country before a change in its political condition such as to affect their allegiance.

The term is ordinarily applied by American writers to denote those born in this country prior to the Declaration of Independence. It is distinguished from postnati, those born after the event.

As to the rights of British antenati in the United States, see Apthorp v. Backus, Kirby (Conn.) 413, 1 Am. Dec. 26; Miller v. English, 6 N. J. Eq. 305; Adams v. Ryerson, 6 N. J. Eq. 337; Kilham v. Ward, 2 Mass. 236, 244; Jackson v. Wright, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 75; Hunter v. Fairfax's Devisee, 1 Munf. (Va.) 218; Com. v. Bristow, 6 Call (Va.) 60; Jackson's Lessee v. Burns, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 75; Dawson v. Godfrey, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 321, 2 L. Ed. 634; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 99, 7 L. Ed. 617. As to the use of the term in England, see 7 Coke 1, 27; 2 B. & C. 779; 5 id. 771; 1 Wood. Lect. 382; POSTNATI.

ANTHROPOMETRY. A word given by a French savant, Alphonse Bertillon, to a system of identification depending on the unchanging character of certain measurements of parts of the human frame. It was largely adopted after its introduction in France in 1883, but fell into disfavor as being costly and as liable to error. It has given place to the "finger print" system devised by Francis Galton, which was adopted in Bengal by the Indian government in 1897 and in England three years later. Encycl. Br. Anthropometry. This method is in use also in Germany and Italy; in other countries both systems are used; 4 Towns. Cr. Law 301.

See report of United States Commissioner of Education, 1895-6, vol. 2, c. 28, where the Bertillon system is fully described and statistics of Massachusetts, New York Pennsylvania, etc., are collected. See also Wigmore, Jud. Proof 79.

The Bertillon system was based upon: (1) The almost absolute immutability of the human frame after the twentieth year of age; the growth thereafter, being only of the thigh bone, is so little that it is easy to make allowance for it. (2) The diversity of dimension of the human skeleton of different subjects is so great that it is difficult, if not impossible, to find two individuals whose bony structure is even sufficiently alike to make confusion between them possible. (3) The facility and comparative precision with which certain dimensions of the skeleton may be measured in the living subject by calipers of simple construction. The measurements which, as the result of minute criticism, have been preferred, are as follows: (1) Height (man standing); (2) reach (finger tip to finger tip); (3) trunk (man sitting); (4) length; (5) width; (6) length of right ear; (7) width of right ear; (8) length of left foot; (9) length of left middle finger; (10) length of left little finger; (11) length of left forearm.

See ROGUES' GALLERY.

ANTI-MANIFESTO. The declaration of the reasons which one of the belligerents publishes, to show that the war as to him is defensive. Wolffius § 1187.

ANTI-TRUST ACTS. Federal and state statutes to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies. See U. S. v. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

ANTICHRESIS. In Civil Law. An agreement by which the debtor gives to the creditor the income from the property which he has pledged, in lieu of the interest on his debt. Guyot, Répert.; Story Bailm. § 344.

It is analogous to the Welsh mortgage of the common law. In the French law, if the income was more than the interest, the debtor was entitled to demand an account of the income, and might claim any excess; La. Civ. Code, 2085. See Dig. 20. 1. 11; id. 13. 7. 1; Code, 8. 28. 1; Livingston's Ex'x v. Story, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 351, 9 L. Ed. 746; 1 Kent 137; Calderwood v. Calderwood, 23 La. Ann. 658.

ANTICIPATION (Lat. ante, before, capere, to take). The act of doing or taking a thing before its proper time.

In deeds of trust there is frequently a provision that the income of the estate shall be paid by the trustee as it shall accrue, and not by way of anticipation. A payment made contrary to such provision would not be considered as a discharge of the trustee; Bisp. Eq. 104.

As to the use of the term in patent law, see PATENT.

ANTICIPATORY BREACH OF CONTRACT. See BREACH.

ANTINOMIA. In Roman Law. A real or apparent contradiction or inconsistency in the laws. Merlín, Répert.

It is sometimes used as an English word, and spelled Antinomy.

ANTIQUA CUSTUMA (L. Lat. ancient custom). The duty due upon wool, woollens, and leather under the statute 3 Edw. 1.

The distinction between antiqua and nova custuma arose upon the imposition of an increased duty upon the same articles, in the twenty-second year of his reign; Bacon, Abr. Smuggling, C. 1.

ANTIQUA STATUTA. Also called Vetere Statuta. English statutes from the time of Richard First to Edward Third. Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law 227. See NOVA STATUTA.

ANTIQUARE. In Roman Law. To resolve a former law or practice; to reject or vote against a new law; to prefer the old law. Those who voted against a proposed law wrote on their ballots the letter "A," the initial of antiquo, I am for the old law; Calvin; Black, Dict.

ANTIQUITIES. The act of June 8, 1906, provides for the punishment of any person who shall injure or destroy, etc., any historic or prehistoric ruin, or object of antiquity, on any government lands. See LANDMARKS.

ANTITHETARIUS. In Old English Law. A man who endeavors to discharge himself of the crime of which he is accused, by retorting the charge on the accuser. He differs from an approver in this, that the latter does not charge the accuser, but others; Jacobs, Law Dict.

ANY. Some; one out of many; an indefinite number.

It is synonymous with "either;" State v. Antonio, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 562, 3 Wheel. Crim. Law Cas. 508; and is given the full force of "every" or "all"; Logan v. Small, 43 Mo. 254; 4 Q. B. D. 409; McMurray v. Brown, 91 U. S. 265, 23 L. Ed. 321; L. R. 5 H. L. 134; but its generality may be restricted by the context; 6 Q. B. D. 607.

ANY TERM OF YEARS. In Massachusetts, this term, in the statutes relating to additional punishment, means not less than two years. Ex parte Seymour, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 40; Ex parte Dick, id. 86; Ex parte White, id. 90; Ex parte Stevens, id. 94.

APANAGE. In French Law. A portion set apart for the use and support of the younger ones, upon condition, however, that it should revert, upon failure of male issue, to his original donor and his heirs. Spelman, Gloss.

APARTMENT. A part of a house occupied by a person, while the rest is occupied by another or others. 7 M. & G. 95; 6 Mod. 214; Woodf. L. & T. (1st Am. ed.) 660. "Apartments is a proper description of the premises so occupied;" 7 M. & G. 95.

The occupier of part of a house, where the landlord resides on the premises and retains the key of the outer door, is held a mere lodger, and is not a person occupying "as owner or tenant;" 7 M. & G. 85.

If a house, originally entire, be divided into several apartments, with an outer door to each apartment, and no communication with each other, the several apartments shall be rated as distinct mansion houses; but if the owner live therein, all the untenanted apartments shall be considered as parts of his house; 6 Mod. 214.

A flat or flat house is a building consisting of more than one story in which there are one or more suites of rooms on each floor equipped for private house-keeping purposes. An apartment house is either a building otherwise termed a flat or it is a building divided into separate suites of rooms intended for residence, but commonly without facilities for cooking; Lignot v. Jaekle, 72 N. J. Eq. 233, 65 Atl. 221.

By the lease of apartments in a building, in a town, for the purpose of trade, the lessee takes only such interests in the sub-jacent lands as is dependent upon the enjoyment of the apartments rented and necessary thereto; and if they are totally destroyed by fire, this interest ceases; McMillan v. Solomon, 42 Ala. 356, 94 Am. Dec. 654. See Cunningham v. Entekin, 34 W. N. C. (Pa.) 353.

In an indictment for "entering a room or apartment, with the intention to commit larceny," it is right to charge the ownership of the room to be his who rented it from one who had the general supervision and control of the whole house, and occupied the same as a lodger; People v. St. Clair, 38 Cal. 137. See FLAT.

APERTA BREVIA. Open, unsealed writs. Rap. & Lawr. Law Dict.

APEX JURIS (Lat. the summit of the law). A term used to indicate a rule of law of extreme refinement. A term used to denote a stricter application of the rules of law than is indicated by the phrase summum jus. Dennis v. Ludlow, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 117; Ex parte Foster, 2 Sto. 143, Fed. Cas. No. 4,960; Hinsdale v. Miles, 5 Conn. 334; 1 Burr. 341; 14 East 522. See Co. Litt. 3046; Wing. Max. 19; MAXIMS, apices juris, etc.

APHASIA. Loss of the power of using words properly, of comprehending them when spoken or written or of remembering the nature and uses of familiar objects. Sensory aphasia or apraxia is an inability to recognize the use or import of objects or the meaning of words, and includes word blindness and word deafness, visual and auditory asphasia. Motor asphasia is a loss of memory of the efforts necessary to pronounce words, and often includes agraphia, or the inability to write words of the desired meaning.

APICES LITIGANDI. Extremely fine points or subtleties of litigation nearly equivalent to the modern phrase "sharp practice." Rap. & Lawr. Law Dict., citing 3 Burr. 1243.

APOCA (Lat.). A writing acknowledging payments; acquittance.

It differs from acceptance in this, that acceptance imports a complete discharge of the former obligation whether payment be made or not; apoca discharge only upon payment being made. Calvinus, Lex.

APOCRISARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A messenger; an ambassador.

Applied to legatees or messengers, as they carried the messages (ἀπόκρισεις) of their principals. They performed several duties distinct in character, but generally pertaining to ecclesiastical affairs.

A messenger sent to transact ecclesiastical business and report to his superior; an officer who had charge of the treasury of a monastic edifice; an officer who took charge of opening and closing the doors. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex.

Apocrisarius Cancellarius. An officer who took charge of the royal seal and signed royal despatches.

Called, also, secretarius, consiliarius (from his giving advice); referendarius; a consiliis (from his acting as counsellor); a responsis, or responsalis.

APOGRAPHIA. In Civil Law. An examination and enumeration of things possessed; an inventory. Calvinus, Lex.

APOPLEXY. In Medical Jurisprudence. The group of symptoms arising from rupture of a minute artery and consequent hemorrhage into the substance of the brain or from the lodgment of a minute clot in one of the cerebral arteries.

The symptoms consist usually of sudden loss of consciousness, muscular relaxation, lividity of the face and slow stertorous respiration, lasting from a few hours to several days. Death frequently ensues. If consciousness returns, there is found paralysis of some of the voluntary muscles, very frequently of the muscles of the face, arm, and leg upon one side, giving the symptom of hemiplegia. There is usually more or less mental impairment.

The mental impairment presents no uniform characters, but varies indefinitely, in extent and severity, from a little failure of memory, to an entire abolition of all the intellectual faculties. The power of speech is usually more or less affected; it may be a slight difficulty of utterance, or an inability to remember certain words or parts of words, or an entire loss of the power of articulation. This feature may arise from two different causes—either from a loss of the power of language, or a loss of power in the muscles of the larynx. This fact must be borne in mind by the medical jurist, and there can be little difficulty in distinguishing between them. In the latter, the patient is as capable as ever of reading, writing, or understanding spoken language. In the former, he is unable to communicate his thoughts by writing, because they are disconnected from their articulate signs. He recognizes their meaning when he sees them, but cannot recall them by any effort of the perceptive powers. This affection of the faculty of language is manifested in various ways. One person loses all recollection of the names of persons and things, while other parts of speech are still at command. Another forgets everything but substantives, and only those which express some mental quality or abstract idea. Another loses the memory of all words but yes or no. In these cases the patient is able to repeat the words on hearing them pronounced, but, after a second or third repetition, loses them altogether.

See APHASIA.

Wills and contracts are not unfrequently made in that equivocal condition of mind which sometimes follows an attack of apoplexy or paralysis; and their validity is contested on the score of mental incompetency. In cases of this kind there are, generally, two questions at issue, viz., the absolute amount of mental impairment, and the degree of foreign influence exerted upon the party. They cannot be considered independently of each other. Neither of them alone might be sufficient to invalidate an act, while together, even in a much smaller degree, they would have this effect.

In testing the mental capacity of paralytics, reference should be had to the nature of the act in question. The question is not, had the testator sufficient capacity to make a will? but, had he sufficient capacity to make the will in dispute? A capacity which might be quite adequate to a distribution of a little personal property among a few near relatives would be just as clearly inadequate to the disposition of a large estate among a host of relatives and friends possessing very unequal claims upon the testator's bounty. Here, as in other mental conditions, all that is required is mind sufficient for the purpose, neither more nor less. See DEMENTIA; DELIRIUM; IMBECILITY; MANIA. In order to arrive at correct conclusions on this point, we must be careful, among other things, not to confound the power to appreciate the terms of a proposition with the power to discern its relations and consequences.

In testing the mental capacity of one who has lost the power of speech, it is always difficult, and often impossible, to arrive at correct results. If the person is able and willing to communicate his thoughts in writing, his mental capacity may be clearly revealed. If not disposed to write, he may communicate by constructing words and sentences by the help of a dictionary or block letters. Failing in this, the only other intellectual manifestation possible is the expression of assent or dissent by signs to propositions made by others. Any of these means of communication, other than that of writing, must leave us much in the dark respecting the amount of intellect possessed by the party. If the act in question is complicated in its relations, if it is unreasonable in its dispositions, if it bears the slightest trace of foreign influence, it cannot but be regarded with suspicion. If the party has only the power of assenting or dissenting, it must always be impossible to decide whether this does not refer to the terms rather than the merits of the proposition; and, therefore, an act which bears no other evidence than this of the will of the person certainly ought not to be established. Besides, it must be considered that a will drawn up in this manner is, actually, not the will of the testator, since every disposition has originated in the minds of others; Ray, Med. Jur. 363. The phenomena and legal consequences of paralytic affections are extensively discussed in Clark v. Fisher, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 171, 19 Am. Dec. 402; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 502, 577; 2 id. 84; 1 Curt. Eccl. 782; Parish Will Case, 4 vols. N. Y. 1858. And see DEATH; INSANITY.

APOSTASY. A total renunciation of Christianity by embracing either a false religion or having no religion at all. 4 Bla. Com. 43. See BLASPHEMY; CHRISTIANITY.

APOSTLES. Brief letters of dismissal granted to a party who takes an appeal from the decision of an English court of admiralty, stating the case, and declaring that the record will be transmitted. 2 Brown, Civ. and Adm. Law 438; Dig. 49. 6. It is used in Adm. Rule 6, of the 2d Circ. 90 Fed. lxi.

This term was used in the civil law. It is derived from apostolos, a Greek word, which signifies one sent, because the judge from whose sentence an appeal was made, sent to the superior judge these letters of dismission, or apostles; Merlin, Répert. mot Apôtres; 1 Pars. Marit. Law 745.

APOSTOLI. In Civil Law. Certificates of the inferior judge from whom a cause is removed, directed to the superior. Dig. 49. 6. See APOSTLES.

Those sent as messengers. Spelman, Gloss.

APOTHECARY. "Any person who keeps a shop or building where medicines are compounded or prepared according to prescriptions of physicians, or where medicines are sold, shall be regarded as an apothecary." 14 Stat. L. 119, § 23.

In England and Ireland an apothecary is a member of an inferior branch of the medical profession and is licensed by the Apothecaries Company to practice medicine as well as to sell drugs.

See DRUGGIST.

APPARATOR (Lat.). A furnisher; a provider.

The sheriff of Bucks had formerly a considerable allowance as apparator comitatus (apparator for the county); Cowell.

APPARENT. That which appears; that which is manifest; what is proved. It is required that all things upon which a court must pass should be made to appear, if matter in pais, under oath; if matter of record, by the record. It is a rule that those things which do not appear are to be considered as not existing: de non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio; Broom,

Max. 20. What does not appear does not exist: quod non apparet, non est; La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 600, 18 Am. Dec. 463; 1 Term 404; 12 M. & W. 316.

In case of homicide when the term "apparent danger" is used it means such overt actual demonstration, by conduct and acts, of a design to take life or do some great personal injury as would make the killing apparently necessary for self-preservation; Evans v. State, 44 Miss. 762.

APPARITOR. An officer or messenger employed to serve the process of the spiritual courts in England and summon offenders. Cowell.

APPARURA. In Old English Law. Furniture or implements.

Carucaria apparura, plough-tackle. Cowell; Jacob, Dict.

APPEAL. In Criminal Practice. A formal accusation made by one private person against another of having committed some heinous crime. 4 Bla. Com. 312.

Anciently, appeals lay for treason as well as felonies; but appeals for treason were abolished by statutes 5 Edw. III. c. 9, 25 Edw. III. c. 24, and 1 Hen. IV. c. 14, and for all other crimes by the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 46.

An appeal lay for the heir male for the death of his ancestors; for the widow while unmarried for the death of her husband; and by the party injured, for certain crimes, as robbery, rape, mayhem, etc.; Co. Litt. 287 b; 2 Bish Cr. Law 1001, note, par. 4.

It might be brought at any time within a year and a day, even though an indictment had been found. If the appellee was found innocent, the appellor was liable to imprisonment for a year, a fine, and damages to the appellee.

The appellee might claim wager of battel. This claim was last made in the year 1818 in England; 1 B. & Ald. 405. And see 2 W. Bla. 713; 5 Burr. 2643, 2793; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 312-318, and notes.

In the 12th and 13th centuries and for some time thereafter, the Crown relied as much upon the Appeal of the private accuser as upon the presentment of a jury. The indictment came to take its place and at the end of the 13th century the action of trespass was an efficient substitute for the appeal, and it gradually decayed as a mode of criminal prosecution. It lived long in the law because it came to be forgotten. Appeals of treason brought in Parliament were abolished in 1400. Other appeals were gradually abolished. It was considered that certain appeals alleging felony were good in Coke's day; Co. Litt. 127; 2 Hawk. P. C. 157. The appeal of murder had the longest history and was only abolished by 59 Geo. III. c. 46. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 155.

In Legislation. The act by which a member of a legislative body who questions the correctness of a decision of the presiding officer, procures a vote of the body upon the decision. In the House of Representatives of the United States the question on an appeal is put to the House in this form: "Shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the House?" Rob. R. of O. 14, 66.

If the appeal relates to an alleged breach of decorum, or transgression of the rules of order, the question is taken without debate. If it relates to the admissibility or relevancy of a proposition, debate is permitted, except when a motion for the previous question is pending.

As to Appeal, in practice, as one of the methods of appellate jurisdiction, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

APPEAL AND ERROR. The methods of exercising appellate jurisdiction for "the review by a superior court of the final judgment, order, or decree of some inferior court." Ex parte Batesville & Brinkley R. Co., 39 Ark. 82.

"The most usual modes of exercising appellate jurisdiction * * * are by a writ of error, or by an appeal, or by some process of removal of a suit from an inferior tribunal. An appeal is a process of civil law origin, and removes a cause, entirely subjecting the facts as well as the law to a review and a retrial. A writ of error is a process of common law origin, and it removes nothing for re-examination but the law. The former mode is usually adopted in cases of equity and admiralty jurisdiction; the latter in suits at common law tried by a jury." Sto. Const. § 1762; Behn v. Campbell, 205 U. S. 403, 27 Sup. Ct. 502, 51 L. Ed. 857; U. S. v. Goodwin, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 108, 3 L. Ed. 284.

The appellate jurisdiction "is exercised by revising the action of the inferior court, and remanding the cause for the rendition and execution of the proper judgment"; Dodds v. Duncan, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 731, 734. It "implies a resort from an inferior tribunal of justice, to a superior, for the purpose of revising the judgments" of the former; Smith v. Carr, Hard. (Ky.) 305; and it was said in Marbury v. Madison, that its essential criterion is "that it revises and corrects the proceedings in a cause already instituted, and does not create that cause"; 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 175, 2 L. Ed. 60. Auditor of State v. R. Co., 6 Kan. 500, 505, 7 Am. Rep. 575; Sto. Const. Sec. 1761; Tierney v. Dodge, 9 Minn. 166 (Gil. 153).

The methods of obtaining a review are different in law and equity. In the latter the legal process by which it is obtained is termed an appeal, which is the removal of a cause from a court of inferior to one of superior jurisdiction, for the purpose of obtaining a review and retrial; Wiscart v. Dauchy, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 321, 1 L. Ed. 619; U. S. v. Goodwin, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 110, 3 L. Ed. 284; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pét. (U. S.) 205, 9 L. Ed. 388; Wetherbee v. Johnson, 14 Mass. 414; King v. Sloan, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 78. When taken in open court it does not need the formalities of ancient law to indicate that it is taken against all adverse interests: Taylor v. Leesnitzer, 220 U. S. 93, 31 Sup. Ct. 371, 55 L. Ed. 382.

An appeal generally supersedes the judgment of the inferior court so far that no action can be taken upon it until after the final decision of the cause; Archer v. Hart, 5 Fla. 234; Danforth, Davis & Co. v. Carter, 4 Ia. 230; Waterman v. Raymond, 5 Wis. 185; Frederick v. Bank, 106 Ill. 147; Lamphear v. Lamprey, 4 Mass. 107; Walker v. Spencer, 86 N. Y. 162. A decree is final for the purposes of an appeal when it terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce what has been determined; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. R. Co. v. Southern Co., 108 U. S. 24, 2 Sup. Ct. 6, 27 L. Ed. 638; Bostwick v. Brinkerhoff, 106 U. S. 3, 1 Sup. Ct. 15, 27 L. Ed. 73; Grant v. Ins. Co., 106 U. S. 429, 1 Sup. Ct. 414, 27 L. Ed. 237. Before an appeal can be prosecuted by one of several defendants, the case should be determined as to all; Meagher v. Mfg. Co., 145 U. S. 611, 12 Sup. Ct. 876, 36 L. Ed. 834. In equity cases all parties against whom a joint decree is rendered must join in an appeal, if any be taken; and when only one takes an appeal, and there is nothing in the record to show that the others were applied to and refused to appeal, and no order is entered by court, on notice, granting him a separate appeal, his appeal cannot be sustained; Beardsley v. R. Co., 158 U. S. 123, 15 Sup. Ct. 786, 39 L. Ed. 919.

A writ of error is the means of bringing under review by an appellate court, for revision and correction, the judgment in an action at law of an inferior court of record, when the proceedings are according to the course of the common law. See WRIT OF ERROR. In cases in which the proceedings are summary or different from the course of the common law they are reviewed by Certiorari. See that title. And in England the judgments of inferior courts not of record were brought up for review by writ of false judgment. See FALSE JUDGMENT. 4 Archb. Pr. 4, quoted in Ex parte Henderson, 6 Fla. 279.

A writ of error is considered, generally, as a new action; Gregg v. Bethea, 6 Porter (Ala.) 9. It does not vacate the judgment of the court below; that continues in force until reversed; Railway Co. v. Twombly, 100 U. S. 81, 25 L. Ed. 550. If such writ can ever be issued nunc pro tunc after the lapse of time allowed by law for bringing suits in error, the default must be attributable solely to official delinquency; Knight & Knight v. Towles, 32 Fla. 473, 14 South. 91.

If the common law is adopted in a state, the writ of error is introduced as part of that system; Moore v. Harris, 1 Tex. 36; but it is said that it is not a new action, but a continuation of the same one transferred to the appellate court for review; Corbett v. Territory, 1 Wash. T. 434; the allowance of such a writ is a matter of judicial determination on consideration of the sufficiency of the grounds for it stated in the petition and assignment of errors; Simpson v. Bank, 129 Fed. 257, 63 C. C. A. 371; an appeal is a matter of right; Lockman v. Lang, 132 Fed. 1, 65 C. C. A. 621; Simpson v. Bank, 129 Fed. 257, 63 C. C. A. 371; where it was said, in reference to the rule requiring filing of an assignment of error, "no court or judge has any jurisdiction or power to condition allowance of an appeal upon his consideration or determination of the question whether or not the applicant presents alleged errors, which form reasonable grounds for the review of the decision below. That question is reserved for the consideration of the appellate court exclusively"; and it was held that, notwithstanding the rule, the assignment of errors need not be filed before an allowance of appeal.

Where one court administers law and equity, an appeal and writ of error are sometimes taken in a case, because of doubt whether it is strictly legal or equitable. An appeal and writ of error to review the same adjudications is not only proper, but commendable, where there is just reason to doubt which is the proper proceeding to give jurisdiction to the appellate court and that one will be dismissed which is ineffective, and the case will be reviewed according to the rules of the method applicable to it; Lockman v. Lang, 132 Fed. 1, 65 C. C. A. 621; but some courts hold that the two remedies cannot be pursued simultaneously, but that an appeal must be dismissed before a writ of error is taken; State v. Thompson, 30 Mo. App. 503.

While the word appeal has a strict technical definition, it is frequently used as embracing all kinds of proceedings for the review of causes; City of Rockford v. Compton, 115 Ill. App. 406; but in states adhering to common law forms an appeal will not lie from a judgment at law; Files v. Brown, 124 Fed. 133, 59 C. C. A. 403; Roberts v. Ry. Co., 138 Fed. 711, 71 C. C. A. 127; Trabue v. Williams, 46 Fla. 228, 35 South. 872; Ewings v. Hoffine, 67 Neb. 26, 93 N. W. 186; and in jurisdictions where the same courts administer both law and equity appeals and proceedings for review for errors of law are frequently governed by like rules; Traders' Ins. Co. v. Carpenter, 85 Ind. 350. A writ of error is the proper method of reviewing a judgment of the supreme court of a territory in an action at law tried without a jury; National Live Stock Bank of Chicago v.

Where a common law form of reviewing statutory proceedings does not exist or is not resorted to, the conditions and form of appeal depend entirely upon statute and cannot be changed or aided by judicial action; People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior, 43 Mich. 336, 5 N. W. 398. An appeal is a continuation of a suit, whereas a writ of error is considered a new action; Macklin v. Allenberg, 100 Mo. 337, 13 S. W. 350; the right of appeal in civil actions being unknown to the common law and of statutory origin, it is necessary that the requirements of the statute be strictly complied with to confer jurisdiction on the appellate courts; Arkansas & O. R. Co. v. Powell, 104 Mo. App. 362, 80 S. W. 336.

A writ of error is a writ of right which is grantable ex debito justitiæ; Skipwith v. Hill, 2 Mass. 35. The right to an appeal or writ of error cannot be refused, however indifferent or baseless the demand on the merits may be; People v. Knickerbocker, 114 Ill. 539, 2 N. E. 507, 55 Am. Rep. 879; State v. Judge of Superior District Court, 28 La. Ann. 547; McCreary v. Rogers, 35 Ark. 298; Ridgely v. Bennett, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 206. It is the constitutional right of every citizen to have his case reviewed in one form or another by a court of error; 1 Bland. 5; but in another state it is said not to be a constitutional right but subject to legislative control; Messenger v. Teagan, 106 Mich. 654, 64 N. W. 499. A suit at law can be reviewed only on writ of error; Behn, M. & Co. v. Campbell, 205 U. S. 403, 27 Sup. Ct. 502, 51 L. Ed. 857; and an equity cause cannot be reviewed on writ of error; Files v. Brown, 124 Fed. 133, 59 C. C. A. 403; Nelson v. Lowndes County, 93 Fed. 538, 35 C. C. A. 419; Grooms v. Wood, 43 Fla. 50, 29 South. 445; Ex parte Sanford, 5 Ala. 562; Delaplaine v. City of Madison, 7 Wis. 407; Evans v. Hamlin, 164 Mass. 239, 41 N. E. 267; Hayes v. Fischer, 102 U. S. 121, 26 L. Ed. 95. But see contra, Woodard v. Glos, 113 Ill. App. 353; but the error of a chancellor in refusing to grant an appeal on dismissal of injunction bill should be corrected by writ of error; Boyd v. Knox (Tenn.) 53 S. W. 972. A writ of error will not lie in a divorce case, an appeal is the only remedy; Miller v. Miller, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 30; Parmenter v. Parmenter, 3 Head (Tenn.) 225. But this does not apply to a decree for alimony, which is subject to revision by writ of error; McBee v. McBee, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 558; an appeal and not a writ of error is the proper proceeding to review probate orders; Horner v. Goe, 54 Ill. 285; Peckham v. Hoag, 92 Mich. 423, 52 N. W. 734; Shay v. Henk, 49 Pa. 79; but a writ of error lies to revise probate proceedings which are strictly according to the course of the common law; Fitzgerald v. Com., 5 Allen (Mass.) 509; or a proceeding for the probate of a will in which the parties have a right to a jury trial; Ormsby v. Webb, 134 U. S. 47, 10 Sup. Ct. 478, 33 L. Ed. 805; or where a case had been appealed from the probate court to a law court and the decree affirmed; Brunson v. Burnett, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 9. A writ of error will lie in cases where an appeal is not allowed; Ex parte Thistleton, 52 Cal. 220; Haines v. People, 97 Ill. 161; or if the aggrieved party cannot avail himself of an appeal; Valier v. Hart, 11 Mass. 300.

In an appellate court it is the general rule that findings of fact in the trial court are conclusive; E. Bement & Son v. Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058; American Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 135 Fed. 323, 68 C. C. A. 131; Smith v. City of Buffalo, 159 N. Y. 427, 54 N. E. 62; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Freeman, 12 Gray (Mass.) 401, 74 Am. Dec. 600; Hoffman v. Silverthorn, 137 Mich. 60, 100 N. W. 183; Jersey City v. Tallman, 60 N. J. L. 239, 37 Atl. 1026; Appeal of Melony, 78 Conn. 334, 62 Atl. 151; and when the case is tried by the court, without a jury, the findings of the trial judge are as conclusive as the verdict of a jury; York v. Washburn, 129 Fed. 564, 64 C. C. A. 132; Bell v. Wood, 87 Ky. 56, 7 S. W. 550; Rademacher v. Greenwood, 114 Ill. App. 542; Rauen v. Ins. Co., 129 Ia. 725, 106 N. W. 198; but when the appellate court is convinced that the premise upon which the lower court acted is without any support in the evidence, and that its finding is clearly erroneous, it may be disregarded; Darlington v. Turner, 202 U. S. 195, 26 Sup. Ct. 630, 50 L. Ed. 992; U. S. v. Puleston, 106 Fed. 294, 45 C. C. A. 297; Petition of Barr, 188 Pa. 122, 41 Atl. 303; Brown v. Brown, 174 Mass. 197, 54 N. E. 532, 75 Am. St. Rep. 292; Menz v. Beebe, 102 Wis. 342, 77 N. W. 913, 78 N. W. 601.

Cross appeals in equity must be prosecuted like other appeals; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 10 Sup. Ct. 771, 34 L. Ed. 246. Where defendant appeals from part of the decree, which is affirmed, and the plaintiff thereafter appeals from the other part of the decree, a motion to dismiss will be denied; State v. R. Co., 99 Minn. 280, 109 N. W. 238, 110 N. W. 975.

A federal appellate court in reversing a judgment for the plaintiff cannot direct a judgment for defendant, notwithstanding a verdict for the plaintiff, since under the VIIth Amendment of the Constitution the only course is to order a new trial, and this is true notwithstanding the state statute and practice authorizes such action; Slocum v. Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. —; Pederson v. R. Co., 229 U. S. 146, 33 Sup. Ct. 648, 57 L. Ed. —; but this amendment is not applicable to the state courts; Slocum v. Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. —; and the reversal of a cause upon the facts and rendition of final judgment by the appellate court is generally held not to be an infringement of the right of trial by jury secured by the state constitutions; Borg v. R. Co., 162 Ill. 348, 44 N. E. 722; Gunn v. R. Co., 27 R. I. 320, 62 Atl. 118, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362; id., 27 R. I. 432, 63 Atl. 239, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883; nor is the constitutional guaranty infringed by a statute authorizing the appellate court to make findings of facts "which shall be final and conclusive as to all matters of fact in controversy in such cause"; Larkins v. R. Ass'n, 221 Ill. 428, 77 N. E. 678; nor does it imply that a verdict on an issue of fact is beyond the controlling power of the trial or appellate court, to be exercised to prevent injustice; Chitty v. Ry. Co., 148 Mo. 64, 49 S. W. 868; nor does a statute authorizing the appellate court to reverse for excessive damages; Smith v. Pub. Co., 178 Pa. 481, 36 Atl. 296, 35 L. R. A. 819; nor an act authorizing such court to affirm, reverse, amend or modify a judgment without returning the record to the court below; or to order a verdict and judgment to be set aside and a new trial had; Nugent v. Traction Co., 183 Pa. 142, 38 Atl. 587; where the damages are excessive the appellate court may require the plaintiff to remit the excess as a condition of affirmance without depriving either party of his right to trial by jury; Burdick v. Ry. Co., 123 Mo. 221, 27 S. W. 453, 26 L. R. A. 384, 45 Am. St. Rep. 528; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Syfan, 91 Tex. 562, 44 S. W. 1064; but where the jury finds the charge of negligence not sustained by the facts, the court cannot disturb the verdict, though it be of a different opinion; Gibson v. City of Huntington, 38 W. Va. 177, 18 S. E. 447, 22 L. R. A. 561, 45 Am. St. Rep. 853.

Harmless error is no cause for reversal; Townsend v. Bell, 167 N. Y. 462, 60 N. E. 757; Springer v. Lipsis, 209 Ill. 264, 70 N. E. 641; O'Donnell v. Ins. Co., 73 Mich. 1, 41 N. W. 95; nor intermediate error where the ultimate judgment is right; Orr v. Leathers, 27 Ind. App. 572, 61 N. E. 941; Inhabitants of Winslow v. Troy, 97 Me. 130, 53 Atl. 1008; nor, when the losing party is not entitled to recover in any event, can he be heard to complain of error at the trial; Wood v. Wyeth, 106 App. Div. 21, 94 N. Y. Supp. 360; nor where, if the error did not prejudice the party against whom it was committed; Armour & Co. v. Russell, 144 Fed. 614, 75 C. C. A. 416, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602; Strever v. Ry. Co., 106 Ia. 137, 76 N. W. 513.

Judgments will be reversed where the court below erred in failing to sustain a demurrer to one of several paragraphs of the declaration or complaint, and it cannot be determined on which paragraph or count the verdict was based; Gendron v. St. Pierre, 72 N. H. 400, 56 Atl. 915; Bohler v. Hicks, 120 Ga. 800, 48 S. E. 306; or where evidence was improperly admitted, prejudice being presumed; National Biscuit Co. v. Nolan, 138 Fed. 6, 70 C. C. A. 436; Inhabitants of Wayland v. Inhabitants of Ware, 109 Mass. 248; or on the exclusion of evidence, the same presumption applying; Westall v. Osborne, 115 Fed. 282, 53 C. C. A. 74; Hanlon v. Ehrlich, 178 N. Y. 474, 71 N. E. 12; so also an erroneous instruction on a material point (unless it clearly appears to have been harmless); Podhalsky v. City of Cedar Rapids, 106 Ia. 543, 76 N. W. 847; Ward v. Ward, 47 W. Va. 766, 35 S. E. 873; Neal v. Brandon, 70 Ark. 79, 66 S. W. 200.

A party cannot complain of error in his own favor; Copeland v. Dairy Co., 189 Mass. 342, 75 N. E. 704; Drown v. Hamilton, 68 N. H. 23, 44 Atl. 79; Fredrick Mfg. Co. v. Devlin, 127 Fed. 71, 62 C. C. A. 53; Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 157 N. Y. 236, 51 N. E. 995. Questions not presented by the record cannot be considered on appeal; Inhabitants of New Marlborough v. Brewer, 170 Mass. 162, 48 N. E. 1089; Huff v. Cole's Estate, 127 Mich. 351, 86 N. W. 835; Lewis v. Lewis, 66 N. J. L. 251, 49 Atl. 453; Morgan v. Olvey, 50 Ind. 396; otherwise, sometimes, in criminal cases; Crawford v. U. S., 212 U. S. 183, 29 Sup. Ct. 260, 53 L. Ed. 465, 15 Ann. Cas. 392.

When a cause comes before the court on a second appeal all matters passed on in the former decision are res judicata; Chapman v. Ry. Co., 146 Mo. 481, 48 S. W. 646; a rehearing will be denied; Pretzfelder v. Ins. Co., 123 N. C. 164, 31 S. E. 470, 44 L. R. A. 424; the law as determined in the former decision whether right or wrong binds the court on a subsequent appeal; Hopkins v. Grocery Co., 105 Ky. 357, 49 S. W. 18; Mead v. Tzschuck, 57 Neb. 615, 78 N. W. 262. See LAW OF THE CASE.

Where the supreme court affirms the decree in all respects but one, on subsequent appeal only this one particular point can be reviewed; Illinois v. R. Co., 184 U. S. 77, 22 Sup. Ct. 300, 46 L. Ed. 440. Ordinarily when the court is equally divided on appeal, the decree of the lower court is affirmed. But see 39 Nova Scotia 1, where the appeal was allowed.

It is a general rule of the law that all the judgments, decrees, or orders, however conclusive in their character, are under the control of the court which pronounces them during the term at which they are rendered or entered of record, and may then be set aside, vacated, modified, or annulled by that court; Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 415, 26 L. Ed. 797.

The Supreme Court disapproves the practice in an appellate court of reserving a judgment on one of a number of assigned errors without passing on the others, as likely to involve duplicate appeals; Bierce v. Waterhouse, 219 U. S. 320, 21 Sup. Ct. 241, 55 L. Ed. 237.

As to the practice when the appellant is deprived of his bill of exceptions by the death of the judge, etc., see NEW TRIAL.

See BILL OF EXCEPTIONS; JURISDICTION; WRIT OF ERROR; UNITED STATES COURTS.

In the United States Supreme Court a defendant in error or appellee may file a confession of error, and thereupon the judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded, with proper directions.

APPEARANCE. A coming into court as party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant.

The former proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. Tr. & H. Prac. 226, 271.

Appearance anciently meant an actual coming into court, either in person or by attorney. It is so used both in the civil and the common law. It is indicated by the word "comes," "and the said C. D. comes and defends," and, in modern practice, is accomplished by the entry of the name of the attorney of the party in the proper place on the record, or by filing bail where that is required. It was a formal matter, but necessary to give the court jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

A time is generally fixed within which the defendant must enter his appearance; formerly in England and elsewhere, the quarto die post (q. v.). If the defendant failed to appear within this period, the remedy in ancient practice was by distress infinite when the injuries were committed without force, and by capias or attachment when the injuries were committed against the peace, that is, were technical trespasses. But, until appearance, the courts could go no further than apply this process to secure appearance. See PROCESS.

In modern practice, a failure to appear generally entitles the plaintiff to judgment against the defendant by default, if, of course, the court has jurisdiction of the cause.

It may be of the following kinds:—

Compulsory.—That which takes place in consequence of the service of process.

Conditional.—One which is coupled with conditions as to its becoming general.

De bene esse.—One which is to remain an appearance, except in a certain event. See DE BENE ESSE.

General.—A simple and absolute submission to the jurisdiction of the court. See infra.

Gratis.—One made before the party has been legally notified to appear.

Optional.—One made where the party is not under any obligation to appear, but does so to save his rights. It occurs in chancery practice, especially in England.

Special.—That which is made for certain purposes only, and does not extend to all the purposes of the suit; as to contest the jurisdiction, or the sufficiency of the service. See infra.

Subsequent.—An appearance by the defendant after one has already been entered for him by the plaintiff. See Dan. Ch. Pr.

Voluntary.—That which is made in answer to a subpoena or summons, without process; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 77.

How to be made.—On the part of the plaintiff no formality is required. On the part of the defendant it may be effected by making certain formal entries in the proper office of the court, expressing his appearance; Zion Church v. Church, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 215; Easton v. Altum, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 250; Griffin v. Samuel, 6 Mo. 50; Bennett v. Stickney, 17

Vt. 531; Rose v. Ford, 2 Ark. 26, Scott v. Hull, 14 Ind. 136; or in case of arrest, is effected by giving bail; or by putting in an answer; Livingston v. Gibbons, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 94; Hayes v. Shattuck, 21 Cal. 51; President, etc., of Insurance Co. of North America v. Swineford, 28 Wis. 257; or a demurrer; State v. People, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 323, 8 L. Ed. 414; Kegg v. Welden, 10 Ind. 550; or notice to the other side; Livingston v. Gibbons, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 94; or motion for continuance; Shaffer v. Trimble, 2 Greene (Ia.) 464; or taking an appeal; Weaver v. Stone, 2 Grant (Pa.) 422; appearance and offer to file answer; Tennison v. Tennison, 49 Mo. 110; or motion to have an interlocutory order set aside; Tallman v. McCarty, 11 Wis. 401.

A general appearance waives all question as to the service of process and is equivalent to a personal service; Platt v. Manning, 34 Fed. 817; Continental Casualty Co. v. Spradlin, 170 Fed. 322, 95 C. C. A. 112; Moulton v. Baer, 78 Ga. 215, 2 S. E. 471; Birmingham Flooring Mills v. Wilder, 85 Ala. 593, 5 South. 307; but it does not cure want of jurisdiction of subject matter; Wheelock v. Lee, 74 N. Y. 495; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Loughmiller, 193 Fed. 689; a general appearance in a federal court waives the defence that the defendant was not served in the district of which he was an inhabitant; Foote v. Ben. Ass'n, 39 Fed. 23; Betzoldt v. Ins. Co., 47 Fed. 705. A general appearance may be amended so as to make it special; Hohorst v. Packet Co., 38 Fed. 273.

It is not a general appearance where the question of jurisdiction of the person is raised by motion to quash for want of jurisdiction; McGillin v. Clafin, 52 Fed. 657; or petition to quash the writ; Turner v. Larkin, 12 Pa. Sup. Ct. 284. In general, however, when that objection is raised, the appearances should be specially restricted; Nicholes v. People, 165 Ill. 502, 46 N. E. 237; Reed v. Chilson, 142 N. Y. 152, 36 N. E. 884; if by motion or otherwise he seeks to bring into action the powers of the court, he will be deemed to have appeared generally; Newlove v. Woodward, 9 Neb. 502, 4 N. W. 237. If a special appearance is entered to contest jurisdiction, it becomes general if a defense is made to the merits; Sanderson v. Bishop, 171 Fed. 769.

A special appearance to raise the question of judicial action does not amount to a general appearance; Commercial Mut. Accident Co. v. Davis, 213 U. S. 245, 29 Sup. Ct. 445, 53 L. Ed. 782. A special appearance entered to contest the jurisdiction will not operate to waive objection to illegal or insufficient service; Lathrop-Shea & Henwood Co. v. Const. Co., 150 Fed. 666 (citing many Supreme Court cases where such appearance is recognized); Remington v. Ry. Co., 198 U. S. 95, 25 Sup. Ct. 577, 49 L. Ed. 959; Powers v. Ry. Co., 169 U. S. 92, 18 Sup. Ct. 264, 42

L. Ed. 673; Courtney v. Pradt, 196 U. S. 89, 25 Sup. Ct. 208, 49 L. Ed. 398; and the effect of such appearance is not enlarged by discussion of the merits in connection with the plea; Citizens' Savings & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 205 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 425, 51 L. Ed. 703; nor by the removal of the cause; Goldney v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 39 L. Ed. 517; even if the petition for removal does not specify or restrict the purpose of the appearance and is not accompanied by a plea in abatement; National Accident Society v. Spiro, 164 U. S. 281, 17 Sup. Ct. 996, 41 L. Ed. 435. Filing a petition to remove is not a general appearance; Spreen v. Delsignore, 94 Fed. 71.

Where defendant files a formal appearance and simultaneously an exception to the jurisdiction, the two papers should be considered together and cannot be regarded as consent to the jurisdiction where consent is necessary; Wood v. Lumber Co., 226 U. S. 384, 33 Sup. Ct. 125, 57 L. Ed. —.

It does not amount to a general appearance that a defendant not served is examined as a witness; Nixon v. Downey, 42 Ia. 78; Schroeder v. Lahrman, 26 Minn. 87, 1 N. W. 801; or is present when depositions are taken; Bentz v. Eubanks, 32 Kan. 321, 4 Pac. 269; Anderson v. Anderson, 55 Mo. App. 268; Scott v. Hull, 14 Ind. 136; or in the court room during the trial; Tiffany v. Gilbert, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 320; Newlove v. Woodward, 9 Neb. 502, 4 N. W. 237; Crary v. Barber, 1 Colo. 172.

Actual or formal appearance is now unnecessary; Gardiner v. McDowell's Adm'r, Wright (Ohio) 762; Byrne v. Jeffries, 38 Miss. 533; and a formal entry of one is unknown in Louisiana; Stoker v. Leavenworth, 7 La. 390. It need not be by any formal act or words in court; Harrison v. Morton, 87 Md. 671, 40 Atl. 897; Salina Nat. Bank v. Prescott, 60 Kan. 490, 57 Pac. 121; Rhoades v. Delaney, 50 Ind. 468. It is generally done by entry of the attorney's name on the docket opposite the party's name; Romaine v. Ins. Co., 28 Fed. 625 (where the practice is examined at large); Scott v. Israel, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 145 (where the entry of the attorney's name on the docket opposite the names of two defendants, is good as to both, though one was not served); or the initials merely; Kennedy v. Fairman, 2 N. C. 405; or by endorsement on the declaration; Byrne, Vance & Co. v. Jeffries, 38 Miss. 533; or on the writ waiving service; Harrison v. Morton, 87 Md. 671, 40 Atl. 897; or any action in court in the case except to object to the jurisdiction; Audretsch v. Hurst, 126 Mich. 301, 85 N. W. 746; Warren v. Cook, 116 Ill. 199, 5 N. E. 538; Tippack v. Briant, 63 Mo. 580; People v. Cowan, 146 N. Y. 348, 41 N. E. 26, and see a variety of cases collected in 3 Cyc. 504, n. 28.

By whom to be made.—In civil cases it may in general be made either by the party or his attorney; and in those cases where it is said that the party must appear in person, it is sufficient if it is so entered on the record; although, in fact, the appearance is by attorney; Mockey v. Grey, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 192; Arnold v. Sandford, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 417. The unauthorized appearance of an attorney will not give the court jurisdiction; Great West Min. Co. v. Min. Co., 12 Colo. 46, 20 Pac. 771, 13 Am. St. Rep. 204; McNamara v. Carr, 84 Me. 299, 24 Atl. 856.

An appearance by attorney is, in strictness, improper where a party wishes to plead to the jurisdiction of the court, because the appointment of an attorney of the court admits its jurisdiction; 1 Chit. Pl. 398; 2 Wms. Saund. 209 b; and is insufficient in those cases where the party has not sufficient capacity to appoint an attorney. Thus an idiot can appear only in person, and as a plaintiff he may sue in person or by his next friend.

An infant cannot appoint an attorney; he must, therefore, appear by guardian or prochein ami.

A lunatic, if of full age, may appear by attorney; if under age, by guardian only. 2 Wms. Saund. 335; id. 232 (a), n. (4); but if so insane as to be incapable of knowing his mental state he cannot authorize appearance by an attorney; Chase v. Chase, 163 Ind. 178, 71 N. E. 485. Process should be served on defendant and the appearance for him should be entered by the guardian or committee; Stoner v. Riggs, 128 Mich. 129, 87 N. W. 109; Rutherford's Lessee v. Folger, 20 N. J. L. 115.

A married woman, when sued without her husband, should defend in person; 1 Wms. Saund. 209 b. When sued jointly with him under a statute providing for such suit on their joint contract and that she may defend separately or jointly, an appearance by counsel employed by her husband to defend does not bind her; Taylor v. Welslager, 90 Md. 414, 45 Atl. 478.

The effect of an appearance by the defendant is, that both parties are considered to be in court.

In criminal cases the personal appearance of the accused in court is often necessary. See 2 Burr. 931; id. 1786; 1 W. Bla. 198. The verdict of the jury must, in all cases of treason and felony, be delivered in open court, in the presence of the defendant. In cases of misdemeanor, the presence of the defendant during the trial is not essential; Bacon, Abr. Verdict, B; Arch. Cr. Pl. (14th ed.) 149.

No motion for a new trial is allowed unless the defendant, or, if more than one, the defendants, who have been convicted, are present in court when the motion is made; 3 M. & S. 10, note; 17 Q. B. 503; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 372, note. But this rule does not apply where the offence of which the defendant has been convicted is punishable by a fine only; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 459; or where the defendant is in custody on criminal process; 4 B. & C. 329. On a charge of felony, a party suing out a writ of error must appear in person to assign errors; and it is said that if the party is in custody in the prison of the county or city in which the trial has taken place, he must be brought up by habeas corpus, for the purpose of this formality, which writ must be moved for on affidavit. This course was followed in 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 287; 17 Q. B. 317; 8 E. & B. 54; 1 D. & B. 375.

Where a defendant is not liable to personal punishment, but to a fine, sentence may be pronounced against him in his absence; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 695; 2 Burr. 931; 3 id. 1780.

APPELLANT. He who makes an appeal from one court to another.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION. The jurisdiction which a superior court has to rehear causes which have been tried in inferior courts. See APPEAL AND ERROR.

APPELLATIO. In Civil Law. An appeal.

APPELLEE. In Practice. The party in a cause against whom an appeal has been taken.

APPELLOR. A criminal who accuses his accomplices; one who challenges a jury.

APPENDAGE. Something added as an accessory to or the subordinate part of another thing. State Treasurer v. R. Co., 28 N. J. L. 26; School Dist. No. 29, Bourbon County v. Perkins, 21 Kans. 536, 30 Am. Rep. 447.

APPENDANT. Annexed or belonging to something superior; an incorporeal inheritance belonging to another inheritance. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

Appendant in deeds includes nothing which is substantial corporeal property, capable of passing by feoffment and livery of seisin. Co. Litt. 121; 4 Coke 86; 3 B. & C. 150; 6 Bingh. 150. A matter appendant must arise by prescription; while a matter appurtenant may be created at any time; 2 Viner, Abr. 594; 3 Kent 404.

APPENDITIA (Lat. appendere, to hang to or on). The appendages or pertinances of an estate; the appurtenances to a dwelling, etc.; thus, pent-houses are the appenditid domus.

APPERTAINING. Connected with in use or occupancy. Miller v. Mann, 55 Vt. 475, 479. It does not necessarily import contiguity, as does "adjoining," and is therefore not synonymous with it; id.

Peculiar to. Herndon v. Moore, 18 S. C. 339, where business "appertaining to minors" is defined as meaning peculiar to minors.

APPLICATION. The act of making a request for something. It need not be in writing; State v. Stiles, 12 N. J. L. 296.

A written request to have a certain quantity of land at or near a certain specified place, under a statute for location of public land of the state. Duncan's Lessee v. Curry, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 14; Biddle's Lessee v. Dougal, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 142.

A petition. Scott v. Strobach, 49 Ala. 477, 489.

The use or disposition made of a thing.

In Insurance. The preliminary statement made by a party applying for an insurance on life, or against fire. It usually consists of written answers to interrogatories proposed by the company applied to, respecting the proposed subject. It corresponds to the "representations" preliminary to maritime insurance. It is usually referred to expressly in the policy as being the basis or a part of the contract, and this reference creates in effect a warranty of the truth of the statements. In an action on a policy, the application and policy must be construed as one instrument; Studwell v. Association, 19 N. Y. Supp. 709. If the policy does not make the answers a part of the contract, this will have only the effect of representation; May, Ins. § 159; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Cooper, 50 Pa. 331. To constitute a warranty it must be made a part of the policy; Goddard v. Insurance Co., 67 Tex. 69, 1 S. W. 906, 60 Am. Rep. 1. A mere reference in the policy to the application does not make its answers warranties; it is a question of intention; Jefferson Ins. Co. v. Cotheal, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 72, 22 Am. Dec. 567; Sheldon & Co. v. Insurance Co., 22 Conn. 235, 58 Am. Dec. 420; Commonwealth's Ins. Co. v. Monninger, 18 Ind. 352; the courts tend to consider the answers representations, rather than warranties, except in a clear case; Campbell v. Insurance Co., 98 Mass. 381; Miller v. Insurance Co., 31 Ia. 216, 7 Am. Rep. 122; Wilson v. Insurance Co., 4 R. I. 141. An oral misrepresentation of a material fact will defeat a policy on life or against fire, no less than in maritime insurance, on the ground of fraud: 1 Phill. Ins. § 650. Misrepresentation as to one of several buildings all being in one policy cannot defeat a recovery on another; Rogers v. Insurance Co., 121 Ind. 570, 23 N. E. 498. See REPRESENTATION; MISREPRESENTATION; INSURANCE.

Of Purchase-Money. The disposition made of the funds received by a trustee on a sale of real estate held under the trust.

Where there is a general power to sell for the payment of debts, or debts and legacies, the purchaser need not look to the application of the purchase-money; Bruch v. Lantz, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 392, 21 Am. Dec. 458; Andrews v. Sparhawk, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 393; 1 Beas. 69; Hauser v. Shore, 40 N. C. 357; Gardner v. Gardner, 3 Mas. 178, Fed. Cas. No. 5,227; or so as to legacies where there is a trust for reinvestment; Wormley v. Wormley, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 421, 5 L. Ed. 651; Grosvenor & Co. v. Austin's Adm'rs, 6 Ohio 114, 25 Am. Dec. 743; where the trust is to pay specified debts, the purchaser must see to the application of the purchase-money; Gardner v. Gardner, 3 Mas. 178, Fed. Cas. No. 5,227;

Cadbury v. Duval, 10 Pa. 267; 1 Pars. Eq. 57; Duffy v. Calvert, 6 Gill (Md.) 487. See note to Elliot v. Merryman, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 74; Perry, Trusts; Adams, Eq. *153. The doctrine is abolished in England by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, § 29, and is of little importance in the United States; Bisp. Eq. 278.

Of Payments. See APPROPRIATION.

APPOINT. To designate, ordain, prescribe, nominate; People v. Fitzsimmons, 68 N. Y. 519.

APPOINTEE. A person who is appointed or selected for a particular purpose; as, the appointee under a power is the person who is to receive the benefit of the power.

APPOINTMENT. The designation of a person, by the person or persons having authority therefor, to discharge the duties of some office or trust.

The making out a commission is conclusive evidence of an appointment to an office for holding which a commission is required; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cr. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60; U. S. v. Bradley, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 343, 9 L. Ed. 448. For a discussion of constitutional and statutory limitations of executive and legislative functions in respect to appointments to office, see 30 Amer. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 321, note.

The governor cannot make a valid appointment to an office which at the time is rightfully held by an incumbent whose term has not expired; State v. Peelle, 124 Ind. 515, 24 N. E. 440, 8 L. R. A. 228.

As distinguished from an election, it seems that an appointment is generally made by one person, or a limited number acting with delegated powers, while an election is made by all of a class.

The word is sometimes used in a sense quite akin to this, and apparently derived from it as denoting the right or privilege conferred by an appointment: thus, the act of authorizing a man to print the laws of the United States by authority, and the right thereby conferred, are considered such an appointment, but the right is not an office; Com. v. Binns, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 219, 233. And see Com. v. Sutherland, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 157; Cooper, Justin, 599, 604.

In Chancery Practice. The exercise of a right to designate the person or persons who are to take the use of real estate. 2 Washb. R. P. 302.

By whom to be made.—It must be made by the person authorized; 2 Bouv. Inst. § 1922; who may be any person competent to dispose of an estate of his own in the same manner; 4 Kent 324; including a married woman; 1 Sugd. Pow. 182; 3 C. B. 578; 5 id. 741; Ladd v. Ladd, 8 How. (U. S.) 27, 12 L. Ed. 967; even though her husband be the appointee; Rush v. Lewis, 21 Pa. 72; or an infant, if the power be simply collateral; 2 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) *317. Where two or more are named as donees, all must in general join; Franklin v. Osgood, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 553; but where given to several who act in a trust capacity, as a class, it may be by the survivors; Peter v. Beverly, 10

Pet. (U. S.) 564, 9 L. Ed. 522; Talnter v. Clark, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 220. When such a right is devolved upon two executors and two others are named as successors in case of their death, no others can execute the trust so long as any one of the four is living and has not declined the trust, and an administrator c. t. a. will be liable to suit by the succeeding trustee for trust property with which he intermeddles; Hayes v. Pratt, 147 U. S. 557, 13 Sup. Ct. 503, 37 L. Ed. 279.

How to be made.—A very precise compliance with the directions of the donor is necessary; 1 P. Will. 740; 6 Mann. & G. 386; Ladd v. Ladd, 8 How. (U. S.) 30, 12 L. Ed. 967; having regard to the intention, especially in substantial matters; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 306; 3 Ves. Ch. 421. It may be a partial execution of the power only, and yet be valid; 4 Cruise, Dig. 205; or, if excessive, may be good to the extent of the power; 2 Ves. Sen. 640; 3 Dru. & W. 339. It must come within the spirit of the power; thus, if the appointment is to be to and amongst several, a fair allotment must be made to each; 4 Ves. Ch. 771; 2 Vern. Ch. 513; otherwise, where it is to be made to such as the donee may select; 5 Ves. Ch. 857.

The effect of an appointment is to vest the estate in the appointee, as if conveyed by the original donor; 2 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) *320; 2 Crabb. R. P. 726, 741; 2 Sugd. Pow. 22; Jackson v. Veeder, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 169. Thus where the appointment, after an estate for life, is to a lineal descendant of the testator, but who is a collateral relation of the party exercising the power, the gift is not subject to a collateral inheritance tax; Com. v. Williams' Ex'rs, 13 Pa. 29.

See ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT; POWER. Consult 2 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) *298, 337; Tudor, Lead. Cas.; Chance, Pow.; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig.

APPOINTOR. One authorized by the donor, under the statute of uses, to execute a power. 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1923.

APPORTIONMENT. The division or distribution of a subject-matter in proportionate parts. Co. Litt. 147; 1 Swanst. 37, n.; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (13th ed.) § 475 a.

Of Contracts. The allowance, in case of the partial performance of a contract, of a proportionate part of what the party would have received as a recompense for the entire performance of the contract. See generally Ans. Contr. 291.

Where the contract is to do an entire thing for a certain specified compensation, there can be no apportionment; 9 B. & C. 92; Quigley v. De Haas, 82 Pa. 267; Cox v. R. Co., 44 Cal. 18; Coburn v. Hartford, 38 Conn. 290; Barker v. Reagan, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 590; 1 Washb. R. P. 133, 549, 555; 2 id. 302; but see contra, Hollis v. Chapman, 36 Tex. 1. A contract for the sale of goods is entire; 9 B. & C. 386; Shinn v. Bodine, 60 Pa. 182, 100 Am. Dec. 560; but where there has been a part delivery of the goods, the buyer is liable on a quantum valebant if he retain the part delivered. 9 B. & C. 386; 10 id. 441; Bowker v. Hoyt, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 555 (but contra in New York and Ohio; Champlin v. Rowley, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 258; Witherow v. Witherow, 16 Ohio, 238); though he may return the part delivered and escape liabilities. A contract consisting of several distinct items, and founded on a consideration apportioned to each item, is several; Lucesco Oil Co. v. Brewer, 66 Pa. 351. The question of entirety is one of intention, to be gathered from the contract. 2 Pars. Contr. (8th ed.) *517. Where no compensation is fixed, the contract is usually apportionable; 3 B. & Ad. 404; Cutter v. Powell, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 22, note (q. v. on this whole subject).

Of Annuities. Annuities, at common law, are not apportionable; Wiggin v. Swett, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 194, 39 Am. Dec. 716; 2 P. W. 501; so that if the annuitant died before the day of payment, his representative is entitled to no proportionate share of the annuity for the time which has elapsed since last payment; 16 Q. B. 357; 12 Ves. 484; Heizer v. Heizer, 71 Ind. 526, 36 Am. Rep. 202; Nading v. Elliott, 137 Ind. 261, 36 N. E. 695; 5 U. C. C. P. 364; Mower v. Sanford, 76 Conn. 504, 57 Atl. 119, 63 L. R. A. 625, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1008; Henry v. Henderson, 81 Miss. 743, 33 South. 960, 63 L. R. A. 616; Irving v. Rankine, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 147; Stewart v. Swaim, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 185; but by statute 11 Geo. II. it was enacted that annuities, rents, dividends, etc., and all other payments of every description made payable at fixed periods, should be apportioned; 2 P. Wms. 501; Gheen v. Osborn, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 173; 3 Kent 471. This has been adopted by statute or decision in many of the states. Equity introduced some exceptions to the general rule that annuities are not apportionable, as in the case of those created for maintenance of infants and married women living apart from their husbands; Fisher v. Fisher, 5 Clark (Pa.) 178; Clapp v. Astor, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 379; Kearney v. Cruikshank, 117 N. Y. 95, 22 N. E. 580; Chase v. Darby, 110 Mich. 314, 68 N. W. 159, 64 Am. St. Rep. 347; 2 P. Wms. 501; the reason being that by reason of legal disabilities the annuitants might be unable to get credit for necessities; Tracy v. Strong, 2 Conn. 659; and the exception has been extended to eleemosynary establishments; 16 Beav. 385. Another exception is of an annuity accepted in lieu of dower; Gheen v. Osborn, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 171; In re Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co., 37 N. J. Eq. 26; but not when payable at the termination of the yearly periods commencing with the death of testator; Mower v. Sanford, 76 Conn. 504, 57 Atl. 119, 63 L. R. A. 625, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1008. See 63 L. R. A. 616, note.

Of Wages. Wages are not apportionable where the hiring takes place for a definite period; 5 B. & P. 651; 11 Q. B. 755; Olmstead v. Beale, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 528; Hansell v. Erickson, 28 Ill. 257; Miller v. Goddard, 34 Me. 102, 56 Am. Dec. 638; Sickels v. Pattison, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 257, 28 Am. Dec. 527; Hawkins v. Gilbert, 19 Ala. 54; contra, Britton v. Turner, 6 N. H. 481, 26 Am. Dec. 713.

Of Incumbrances. The ascertainment of the amounts which each of several parties interested in an estate shall pay towards the removal or in support of the burden of an incumbrance.

As between a tenant for life and the remainderman, the tenant's share is limited to keeping down the interest; but not beyond the amount of rent accruing; Doane's Ex'r v. Doane, 46 Vt. 485; 31 E. L. & E. 345; if the principal is paid, the tenant for life must pay a gross sum equivalent to the amount of all the interest he would pay, making a proper estimate of his chances of life; 1 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.) *96; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (13th ed.) § 487. See Jones v. Sherrard, 22 N. C. 179; Swaine v. Perine, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 482, 9 Am. Dec. 318; Houghton v. Hapgood, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 158.

Of Rent. The allotment of their shares in a rent to each of several parties owning it.

The determination of the amount of rent to be paid when the tenancy is terminated at some period other than one of the regular intervals for the payment of rent.

An apportionment of rent follows upon every transfer of a part of the reversion; Montague v. Gay, 17 Mass. 439; Nellis v. Lathrop, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 121, 34 Am. Dec. 285; Reed v. Ward, 22 Pa. 144; see Blair v. Claxton, 18 N. Y. 529; or where there are several assignees, as in case of a descent to several heirs; Bank of Pennsylvania v. Wise, 3 Watts (Pa.) 394; Crosby v. Loop, 13 Ill. 625; Cole v. Patterson, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 456; 10 Coke 128; Comyn, Land. & Ten. 422; where a levy for debt is made on a part of the reversion, or it is set off to a widow for dower; 1 Rolle, Abr. 237; but whoever owns at the time the rent falls due is entitled to the whole; Martin v. Martin, 7 Md. 368, 61 Am. Dec. 364; Burden of Thayer, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 76, 37 Am. Dec. 117. See Williams, Ex. (7th Am. ed.) *730. If a tenancy at will is terminated between two rent days by a conveyance of the premises from the landlord to a third person, the tenant is not liable and the rent cannot be apportioned; Emmes v. Feeley, 132 Mass. 346.

Rent is not, at common law, apportionable as to time; Smith, Land. & T. 134; 3 Kent 470; Menough's Appeal, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 432; Perry v. Aldrich, 13 N. H. 343, 38 Am. Dec. 493; Stilwell v. Doughty, 3 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 359. It is apportionable by statute 11 Geo. II. c. 19, § 15; and similar statutes have been adopted in this country to some extent; 2 Washb. R. P. (5th ed.)

*289; Perry v. Aldrich, 13 N. H. 343, 38 Am. Dec. 493; Codman v. Jenkins, 14 Mass. 94; 1 Hill, Abr. c. 16, § 50. In the absence of express statute or agreement, it is not; Dexter v. Phillips, 121 Mass. 178, 23 Am. Rep. 261. See LANDLORD AND TENANT. As to apportionment of dividends on stock as between life tenant and remainderman, see DIVIDEND.

Of Representatives. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for president and vice-president of the United States, representatives in congress, the executive and judicial officers of a state, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such state, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced to the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such state; Art. 14, § 2, U. S. Const.; Story, Const. 1963.

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of representatives shall not exceed one for every 30,000; but each state shall have at least one representative; U. S. Const. Art. 1, § 2.

The Revised Statutes of the United States provide that from and after March 3, 1893, the house of representatives shall be composed of 356 members, and provide the number to which each state is entitled. Upon the admission of a new state, the representatives to be assigned to it are in addition to the above 356.

The first house of representatives consisted of 65 members, or one for every 30,000 of the representative population. By the census of 1790, it consisted of 106 representatives, or one for every 33,000; by the census of 1800, 142 representatives, or one for every 33,000; by the census of 1810, 183 representatives, or one for every 35,000; by the census of 1820, 213 representatives, one for every 40,000; by the census of 1830, 242 representatives, or one for every 47,700; by the census of 1840, 223 representatives, or one for every 70,680; by the census of 1850, and under the act of May 23, 1850, the number of representatives was increased to 233, or one for every 93,423 of the representative population.

Under the census of 1860, the ratio was ascertained to be for 124,183, upon the basis of 233 members; but by the act of 4th March, 1862, the number of representatives was increased to 241. This, by the act of 1872, Feb. 2, Rev. Stat. U. S. 1878, § 20, 21, was increased to 292 members, and by act of 1891, Feb. 7, the number was increased to 356. By act of Jan. 18, 1901, the number was increased to 386; and by Act of August 8, 1911, to 433.

See REPRESENTATIVE.

APPOSAL OF SHERIFFS. The charging them with money received upon account of the Exchequer. 22 & 23 Car. II.; Cowell.

APPOSER. An officer of the Exchequer, whose duty it was to examine the sheriffs in regard to their accounts handed in to the exchequer. He was also called the foreign apposer. The office is now abolished.

APPOSTILLE. In French Law. An addition, or annotation, made in the margin of a writing. Merlin, Répert.

APPRAISE. To value property at what it is worth. In a statute directing certain officers to "appraise all taxable property at its full and true value in money," the words italicized are superfluous and add no meaning which the statute would not have had without them; Cocheco Mfg. Co. v. Strafford, 51 N. H. 455, 482.

APPRAISEMENT. A just valuation of property.

Appraisements are required to be made of the property of decedents, of insolvents, and others; an inventory (q. v.) of the goods ought to be made, and a just valuation put upon them.

APPRAISER. A person appointed by competent authority to value goods or real estate. An importer is entitled to have a merchant appraiser who is familiar with the character and value of the goods in question, and in a suit brought to recover an excess of duties he may raise the question of want of qualification of the appraiser; Oelbermann v. Merritt, 123 U. S. 356, 8 Sup. Ct. 151, 31 L. Ed. 164. As to Board of General Appraisers, see CUSTOMS DUTIES. As early as Edw. I. the judges were ordered to make provision for appraisers.

APPRECIATE. To estimate justly. The ability of a testator to appreciate his relation to those who had a claim upon his bounty is said to be an element of testamentary capacity; Brace v. Black, 125 Ill. 33, 17 N. E. 66.

APPREHEND. To understand, conceive, believe. Golden v. State, 25 Ga. 527, 531.

APPREHENSION. The capture or arrest of a person on a criminal charge.

The word strictly construed means the seizing or taking hold of a man and detaining him with a view to his ultimate surrender. It may be used when he is already in custody; L. R. 9 Q. B. D. 701, 705.

The term apprehension is more often applied to criminal cases, and arrest to civil cases; as, one having authority may arrest on civil process, and apprehend on a criminal warrant. See ARREST.

APPRENTICE. A person bound in the form of law to a master, to learn from him his art, trade, or business, and to serve him during the time of his apprenticeship. 1

Bla. Com. 426; 2 Kent 211; Altemus v. Ely, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 307.

Formerly the name of apprentice en la ley was given indiscriminately to all students of law. In the reign of Edward IV. they were sometimes called apprenticii ad barras. And in some of the ancient law-writers the terms apprentice and barrister are synonymous; Co. 2d Inst. 214; Euenomus, Dial. 2, § 53, p. 155; 21 L. Q. R. 353. See BARRISTER.

APPRENTICESHIP. A contract by which one person who understands some art, trade, or business, and is called the master, undertakes to teach the same to another person, commonly a minor, and called the apprentice, who, on his part, is bound to serve the master, during a definite period of time, in such art, trade, or business.

The term during which an apprentice is to serve. Pardessus, Droit Comm. n. 34.

A contract of apprenticeship is not invalid because the master to whom the apprentice is bound is a corporation; [1891] 1 Q. B. 75.

At common law, an infant may bind himself apprentice by indenture, because it is for his benefit; 5 M. & S. 257; 5 D. & R. 339. But this contract, both in England and in the United States, on account of its liability to abuse, has been regulated by statute, and is not binding upon the infant unless entered into by him with the consent of the parent or guardian (the father, if both parents be alive, being the proper party to such consent; Com. v. Crommie, 8 W. & S. [Pa.] 339), or by the parent and guardian for him, with his consent, such consent to be made a part of the contract; 2 Kent 261; Matter of M'Dowle, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 328; Whitmore v. Whitcomb, 43 Me. 458; Balch v. State, 12 N. H. 437; Pierce v. Massenburg, 4 Leigh (Va.) 493, 26 Am. Dec. 333; Harney v. Owen, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 337, 30 Am. Dec. 662; or, if the infant be a pauper, by the proper authorities without his consent; Com. v. Jones, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 158; Vinalhaven v. Ames, 32 Me. 299; Baker v. Winfrey, 15 B. Monr. (Ky.) 499; Glidden v. Town of Unity, 30 N. H. 104; Brewer v. Harris, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 285. The contract need not specify the particular trade to be taught, but is sufficient if it be a contract to teach such manual occupation or branch of business as shall be found best suited to the genius or capacity of the apprentice; Fowler v. Hollenbeck, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 309; People v. Pillow, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 672. Where the apprentice is bound to accept employment only from the master, but there is no covenant by the latter to provide employment, and the contract may be terminated only by him, it is invalid as being unreasonable and not for the benefit of the infant; 45 Ch. Div. 430. In a common indenture of apprenticeship the father is bound for the performance of the covenants by the son; 3 B. & Ald. 59. But to an action of covenant against the father for the desertion of the son, it is a sufficient answer that the master has abandoned the trade which the son was apprenticed to learn, or that he has driven the son away by cruel treatment; 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 412; Coffin v. Bassett, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 357.

This contract must generally be entered into by indenture or deed; 4 M. & S. 383; Com. v. Wilbank, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 416; Squire v. Whipple, 1 Vt. 69; and is to continue, if the apprentice be a male, only during minority, and if a female, only until she arrives at the age of eighteen; 2 Kent 264; 5 Term 715. An apprenticeship other than one entered into by indenture in conformity with the statute is not binding; Lally v. Cantwell, 40 Mo. App. 44. The English statute law has been generally adopted in the United States, with some variations; 2 Kent 264.

An infant's deed of apprenticeship under the English Employers and Workmen Act of 1875, will not bind him unless reasonable and for his benefit; but this does not mean as to all its terms, since provision for suspension of wages during a lockout, due solely to the master, is bad; [1893] 1 Q. B. 310; but one confined to stoppage by reason of accident beyond control of master is good; [1899] 2 Q. B. 1.

The duties of the master are to instruct the apprentice by teaching him the knowledge of the art which he has undertaken to teach him, though he will be excused for not making a good workman if the apprentice is incapable of learning the trade, the burden of proving which is on the master; Barger v. Caldwell, 2 Dana (Ky.) 131; Clancy v. Overman, 18 N. C. 402. He ought to watch over the conduct of the apprentice, giving him prudent advice and showing him a good example, and fulfilling towards him the duties of a father, as in his character of master he stands in loco parentis. He is also required to fulfil all the covenants he has entered into by the indenture. He must not abuse his authority, either by bad treatment or by employing his apprentice in menial employments wholly unconnected with the business he has to learn, or in any service which is immoral or contrary to law; 4 Clark & F. 234; Hall v. Gardner, 1 Mass. 172; but may correct him with moderation for negligence and misbehavior; Com. v. Baird, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 267; 4 Keb. 661, pl. 50; People v. Sniffen, 1 Wheel. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 502. He cannot dismiss his apprentice except by consent of all the parties to the indenture; Graham v. Graham, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 330; Nickerson v. Easton, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 110; 2 Burr. 766, 801; or with the sanction of some competent tribunal; Powers v. Ware, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 451; Warner v. Smith, 8 Conn. 14; Carmand v. Wall, 1 Ball. (S. C.) 209; even though the apprentice should steal his master's property, or by reason of incurable illness become incapable of service, the covenants of the master and apprentice being independent; Powers v. Ware, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 451; 2 Dowl. & R. 465; 1 B. & C. 460; 5 Q. B. 447. If the apprentice proves to be an habitual thief, he may be properly dismissed; [1891] 1 Q. B. 431. The master cannot remove the apprentice out of the state under the laws of which he was apprenticed, unless such removal is provided for in the contract or may be implied from its nature; and if he do so remove him, the contract ceases to be obligatory; Com. v. Edwards, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 202; Com. v. Deacon, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 526; Coffin v. Bassett, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 357; Vickere v. Pierce, 12 Me. 315; Walters v. Morrow, 1 Houst. (Del.) 527. An infant apprentice is not capable in law of consenting to his own discharge; 3 B. & C. 484; nor can the justices order money to be returned on the discharge of an apprentice; Stra. 69; contra, Salk. 67, 68, 490; 11 Mod. 110; 12 id. 498, 553. After the apprenticeship is at an end, the master cannot retain the apprentice on the ground that he has not fulfilled his contract, unless specially authorized by statute.

An apprentice is bound to obey his master in all his lawful commands, take care of his property, and promote his interest, endeavor to learn his trade or business, and perform all the covenants in his indenture not contrary to law. He must not leave his master's service during the terms of his apprenticeship; James v. Le Roy, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 274; Coffin v. Bassett, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 357. The apprentice is entitled to payment for extraordinary services when promised by the master; Ex parte Steiner, 1 Penn. L. Jour. Rep. 368; see Bailey v. King, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 113, 29 Am. Dec. 42; and even when no express promise has been made, under peculiar circumstances; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 240, 270, 2 L. Ed. 266; 3 C. Rob. Adm. 237; but see Bailey v. King, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 113, 29 Am. Dec. 42. Upon the death of the master, the apprenticeship, being a personal relation, is dissolved; Strange 284; Eastman v. Chapman, 1 Day (Conn.) 30.

To be binding on the apprentice, the contract must be made as prescribed by statute; Harper v. Gilbert, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 417; but if not so made, it can only be avoided by the apprentice himself; Fowler v. Hollenbeck, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 309; In re McDowle, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 328; Austin v. McCluney, 5 Strobb. (S. C.) 104; and if the apprentice do elect to avoid it, he will not be allowed to recover wages for his services, the relation being sufficient to rebut any promise to pay which might otherwise be implied; Maltby v. Harwood, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 473; Williams v. Finch, 2 id. 208; but see Himes v. Howes, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 80. The master will be bound by his covenants, though additional to those required by statute; Davis v. Bratton, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 179.

Where an apprentice is employed by a third person without the knowledge or consent of the master, the master is entitled to his earnings, whether the person who employed him did or did not know that he was an apprentice; James v. Le Roy, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 274; Bowes v. Tibbets, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 457; but in an action for harboring or enticing away an apprentice, a knowledge of the apprenticeship by the defendant is a prerequisite to recovery; Ferguson v. Tucker, 2 Harr. & G. (Md.) 182; Stuart v. Simpson, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 376; McKay v. Bryson, 27 N. C. 216. A master is not entitled to the extraordinary earnings which do not interfere with his services; an apprentice is therefore entitled to salvage, in opposition to his master's claim; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 270, 2 L. Ed. 266.

The master has a right of action against any one injuring his apprentice causing a loss of his service; Ames v. Ry. Co., 117 Mass. 541, 19 Am. Rep. 426; 11 Ad. & El. 301.

Apprenticeship is a relation which cannot be assigned at common law; Com. v. Barker, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 423; Dougl. 70; Tucker v. Magee, 18 Ala. 99; 1 Ld. Raym. 683; though, if under such an assignment the apprentice continue with his new master, with the consent of all the parties and his own, it will be construed as a continuation of the old apprenticeship; Dougl. 70; Town of Guilderland v. Town of Knox, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 363; Shoppard's Adm'r v. Kelly, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 93. But in some states the assignment of indentures of apprenticeship is authorized by statute; Com. v. Vanlear, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 249; Com. v. Jones, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 161; Phelps v. Culver, 6 Vt. 430. See, generally, 2 Kent 261; Bacon, Abr. Master and Servant; 1 Saund. 313. The law of France is very similar to our own; Pardessus, Droit Comm. nn. 518, 522.

See BINDING OUT.

APPROACH, RIGHT OF. In International Law. The right to draw near to a vessel in order to ascertain the nationality of its flag. In The Marianna Flora, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 43, 44, 6 L. Ed. 405, it was held that the right of approach in time of peace was indispensable for the exercise by public vessels of their authority to arrest pirates and other offenders. Kent understood it to be equivalent to the right of visit (q. v.). 1 Kent 153. At present the right of approach has no existence apart from the right of visit. See VISIT; SEARCH.

APPROBATE AND REPROBATE. In Scotch Law. To approve and reject. To attempt to take advantage of one part of a deed and to reject the rest.

The doctrine of approve and reprobate is the English doctrine of election. A party cannot both approve and reprobate the same deed; 4 Wils. & S. Hou. L. 460; 1 Ross, Lead. Cas. 617; Pat. Comp. 710; 1 Bell, Comm. 146.

APPROPRIATION. The perpetual annexation of an ecclesiastical benefice which is the general property of the church, to the use of some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate. See IMPROPRIATION.

It corresponds with impropropriation, which is setting apart a benefice to the use of a lay corporation. The name came from the custom of monks in England to retain the churches in their gift and all the profits of them in proprio usu to their own immediate benefit. 1 Burns, Eccl. Law 71.

To effect a good appropriation, the king's license and the bishop's consent must first be obtained. When the corporation having the benefice is dissolved, the parsonage becomes disappropriate at common law; Co. Litt. 46; 1 Bla. Com. 385; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 162. There have been no appropriations since the dissolution of monasteries. For the form of an appropriation, see Jacob, Introd. 411.

APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS. The application of a payment made to a creditor by his debtor, to one or more of several debts.

The debtor has the first right of appropriation; 2 B. & C. 72. No precise declaration is required of him, his intention (Terhune v. Colton, 12 N. J. Eq. 233; id. 312), when made known, being sufficient; Bayley v. Wynkoop, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 449; Randall v. Parramore, 1 Fla. 409; 7 Beav. 10; King v. Andrews, 30 Ind. 429; Jones v. Williams, 39 Wis. 300; Hansen v. Rounsavell, 74 Ill. 238; Levystein v. Whitman, 59 Ala. 345; Adams Exp. Co. v. Black, 62 Ind. 128; Bean v. Brown, 54 N. H. 395. Still, such facts must be proved as will lead a jury to infer that the debtor did purpose the specific appropriation claimed; 4 Ad. & E. 840; Selfridge v. Bank, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 320; Pindall's Ex'r v. Bank, 10 Leigh (Va.) 481; Rackley v. Pearce, 1 Ga. 241; Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 575; Runyon v. Latham, 27 N. C. 551; Miller v. Trevilian, 2 Rob. (Va.) 2, 27; Boutell v. Mason, 12 Vt. 608; Franklin Bank v. Cooper, 36 Me. 222; Bosley v. Porter, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 621; Mitchell v. Dall, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 361. An entry made by the debtor in his own book at the time of payment is an appropriation, if made known to the creditor; but otherwise, if not made known to him. The same rule applies to a creditor's entry communicated to his debtor; 2 B. & C. 65; Van Rensselaer's Ex'rs v. Roberts, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 470; Seymour v. Marvin, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 80. The appropriation must be made by the debtor at or before the time of payment; suit fixes the appropriation; Haynes v. Waite, 14 Cal. 446; Frazer v. Miller, 7 Wash. 521, 35 Pac. 427. The intention to appropriate may be referred to the jury on the facts of the transaction;

West Branch Bank v. Moorehead, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 542.

The creditor may apply the payment, as a general rule, if the debtor does not; Jones v. U. S., 7 How. 681, 12 L. Ed. 870; President, etc., of Washington Bank v. Prescott, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 339; Watt v. Hoch, 25 Pa. 411; Forretier v. Guerrineau's Creditors, 1 McCord (N. C.) 308; Blinn v. Chester, 5 Day (Conn.) 166; Brady's Adm'r v. Hill, 1 Mo. 315, 13 Am. Dec. 503; Arnold v. Johnson, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 196; Whitaker v. Groover, 54 Ga. 174; Jones v. Williams, 39 Wis. 300; Bell v. Radcliff, 32 Ark. 645; Burbank v. McCluer, 54 N. H. 345; Frazer v. Miller, 7 Wash. 521, 35 Pac. 427; Farren v. McDonnell, 74 Hun 176, 26 N. Y. Supp. 619; Northern Nat. Bank v. Lewis, 78 Wis. 475, 47 N. W. 834; Green v. Ford, 79 Ga. 130, 3 S. E. 624. In the absence of directions, the creditor may apply credits to the least secure items of his claim; Hildreth v. Davis, 6 Kulp (Pa.) 336. But there are some restrictions upon this right. The debtor must have known and waived his right to appropriate. Hence an agent cannot always apply his principal's payment. He cannot, on receipt of money due his principal, apply the funds to debts due himself as agent, selecting those barred by the statute of limitations; 1 Mann. & G. 54; Colby v. Cressy, 5 N. H. 237. A prior legal debt the creditor must prefer to a posterior equitable debt. Where only one of several debts is valid, all the payments must be applied to this, irrespective of its order in the account; Backman v. Wright, 27 Vt. 187, 65 Am. Dec. 187. Whether, if the equitable be prior, it must first be paid, see Baker v. Stackpoole, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 420, 18 Am. Dec. 508; 1 C. & M. 33.

If the creditor is also trustee for another creditor of his own debtor, he must apply the unappropriated funds pro rata to his own claims and those of his cestui que trust; Scott v. Ray, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 361. But if the debtor, besides the debts in his own right, owe also debts as executor or administrator, the unappropriated funds should first be applied to his personal debt, and not to his debts as executor; Fowke v. Bowie, 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 566; Sawyer v. Toppan, 14 N. H. 352; 2 Dowl. Parl. Cas. 477. A creditor cannot apply unappropriated funds to such of his claims as are illegal and not recoverable at law; 3 B. & C. 165; 4 M. & G. 860; 4 Dowl. & R. 783; 2 Deac. & C. 534; Rohan v. Hanson, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 44; Caldwell v. Wentworth, 14 N. H. 431. But in the case of some debts illegal by statute—namely, those contracted by sales of spirituous liquors—an appropriation to them has been adjudged good; 2 Ad. & E. 41; Treadwell v. Moore, 34 Me. 112. And the debtor may always elect to have his payment applied to an illegal debt.

If some of the debts are barred by the statute of limitations the creditor cannot first apply the unappropriated funds to them, and thus revive them; 2 Cr. M. & R. 723; 2 C. B. 476; Washington v. State, 13 Ark. 754; Pond v. Williams, 1 Gray (Mass.) 630. Still, a debtor may waive the bar of the statute, just as he may apply his funds to an illegal debt; and the creditor may insist, in the silence of the debtor, unless other facts controvert it, that the money was paid on the barred debts; 5 M. & W. 300; Livermore v. Rand, 26 N. H. 85; Watt v. Hoch, 25 Pa. 411. See Beck v. Haas, 31 Mo. App. 180. Proof of such intent on the debtor's part may be deduced from a mutual adjustment of accounts before the money is sent, or from his paying interest on the barred debt. But, in general, the creditor cannot insist that a part-payment revives the rest of the debt. He can only retain such partial payment as has been made; Pond v. Williams, 1 Gray (Mass.) 630. It has been held that the creditor may first apply a general payment to discharging any one of several accounts all barred, and by so doing he will revive the balance of that particular account, but he is not allowed to distribute the funds upon all the barred notes, so as to revive all; Ayer v. Hawkins, 19 Vt. 26.

Wherever the payment is not voluntary, the creditor has not the option in appropriation, but he must apply the funds received ratably to all the notes or accounts. This is the rule wherever proceeds are obtained by judicial proceedings. So, in cases of assignment by an insolvent debtor, the share received by a creditor, a party to the assignment, must be applied pro rata to all his claims, and not to such debts only as are not otherwise secured; Blackstone Bank v. Hill, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 129; 1 M. & G. 54; Stamps v. Brown, Walk. (Miss.) 526; Merri-mack County Bank v. Brown, 12 N. H. 320; Bank of Portland v. Brown, 22 Me. 295; Cowperthwaite v. Sheffield, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 416.

A creditor having several demands may apply the payments to a debt not secured by sureties, where other rules do not prohibit it; Upham v. Lefavour, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 185. Where appropriations are made by a receipt, prima facie the creditor has made them, because the language of the receipt is his; U. S. v. Bradbury, Dav. Dist. Ct. 146, Fed. Cas. No. 14,635.

It is sufficiently evident from the foregoing rules that the principle of the civil law which required the creditor to act for his debtor's interest in appropriation more than for his own, is not a part of the common law; Logan v. Mason, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 9. The nearest approach to the civil-law rule is the doctrine that when the right of appropriation falls to the creditor he must make such an application as his debtor could not reasonably have objected to; Bancroft v. Dumas, 21 Vt. 456; Parchman v. McKinney, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 631. See IMPUTATION OF PAYMENTS.

The law will apply part-payments in accordance with the justice and equity of the case; U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 720, 6 L. Ed. 199; Harker v. Conrad, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 301, 14 Am. Dec. 691; Field v. Holland, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 28, 3 L. Ed. 136; Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 253, 264, 3 L. Ed. 215; U. S. v. Wardwell, 5 Mas. 82, Fed. Cas. No. 16,640; Campbell v. Vedder, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 295; Pickering v. Day, 2 Del. Ch. 333; Leef v. Goodwin, Taney 460, Fed. Cas. No. 8,207.

Unappropriated funds are always applied to a debt due at the time of payment, rather than to one not then due; 2 Esp. 666; Baker v. Stackpoole, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 420, 18 Am. Dec. 508; Harrison & Robinson v. Johnston, 27 Ala. 445; Seymour v. Sexton, 10 Watts (Pa.) 255; Stone v. Talbot, 4 Wisc. 442; Kline v. Ragland, 47 Ark. 111, 14 S. W. 474. But an express agreement with the debtor will make good an appropriation to debts not due; Shaw v. Pratt, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 305. The creditor should refuse a payment on an account not yet due, if he be unwilling to receive it; but if he do receive it he must apply it as the debtor directs; Wetherell v. Joy, 40 Me. 325; Levystein & Simon v. Whitman, 59 Ala. 345. A payment is applied to a certain rather than to a contingent debt, and, therefore, to a debt on which the payer is bound directly, rather than to one which binds him collaterally; President, etc., of Bank of Portland v. Brown, 22 Me. 295. And where the amount paid is precisely equal to one of several debts, a jury is authorized to infer its intended application to that debt; Seymour & Bouck v. Van Slyck, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 403; Moody v. U. S., 1 Woodb. & M. 150, Fed. Cas. No. 1,636. Where one holds two notes, one of which is secured, and he receives further security with express agreement that he may apply proceeds thereof to either note, he may make such application to the unsecured note notwithstanding the objection of second mortgagee; Case v. Fant, 53 Fed. 41, 3 C. C. A. 418. Where a creditor is secured by both chattel and real estate mortgages, he may apply proceeds of sale of chattels first to the chattel mortgage and then to payment of debts otherwise secured; Schloss v. Solomon, 97 Mich. 526, 56 N. W. 753.

The law, as a general rule, will apply a payment in the way most beneficial to the debtor at the time of payment; Neal v. Allison, 50 Miss. 175; Moore v. Kiff, 78 Pa. 96. This rule seems to be similar to the civil-law doctrine. Thus, e. g., courts will apply money to a mortgage debt rather than to a simple contract debt; see 12 Mod. 559; Dorsey v. Gassaway, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 402, 3

Am. Dec. 557; Bussey v. Gant's Adm'r, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 238; Robinson v. Doolittle, 12 Vt. 246; Pattison v. Hull, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 747, 765; McTavish v. Carroll, 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 160; Hamer v. Kirkwood, 25 Miss. 95. In the absence of specific appropriation, the law will apply payments to unsecured indebtedness in preference to the secured; Gardner v. Leck, 52 Minn. 522, 54 N. W. 746. Yet, on the other hand, in the pursuit of equity, courts will sometimes assist the creditor. Hence, of two sets of debts, courts allow the creditor to apply unappropriated funds to the debts least strongly secured; Planters' Bank v. Stockman, 1 Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 502; Baine v. Williams, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 113; Stamford Bank v. Benedict, 15 Conn. 438; Ramsour v. Thomas, 32 N. C. 165; Jones v. Kilgore, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 63; Emery v. Tichout, 13 Vt. 15; Field v. Holland, 6 Cr. (U. S.) 8, 3 L. Ed. 136; Smith v. Loyd, 11 Leigh (Va.) 512, 37 Am. Dec. 621; Byer v. Fowler, 14 Ark. 86; Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 321; Pattison v. Hull, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 747, 765; The D. B. Steelman, 48 Fed. 580.

Interest. Payments made on account are first to be applied to the interest which has accrued thereon. And if the payment exceed the amount of interest, the residue goes to extinguish the principal; Peebles v. Gee, 12 N. C. 341; Jencks v. Alexander, 11 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 619; Bond v. Jones, 8 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 368; Hearn v. Cutberth, 10 Tex. 216; Righter v. Stall, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 608; Miami Exporting Co. v. Bank, 5 Ohio 260; Hart v. Dorman, 2 Fla. 445, 50 Am. Dec. 285; Spires v. Hamot, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 17; Mills v. Saunders, 4 Neb. 190; Jacobs v. Ballenger, 130 Ind. 231, 29 N. E. 782, 15 L. R. A. 169. Funds must be applied by the creditor to a judgment bearing interest, and not to an unliquidated account; Scott v. Fisher, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 389; nor to usurious interest; Duncan v. Helm, 22 La. Ann. 418; Bank of Cadiz v. Slemmons, 34 Ohio St. 142, 32 Am. Rep. 364.

Priority. When no other rules of appropriation intervene, the law applies part-payments to debts in the order of time, discharging the oldest first; Whetmore v. Murdock, 3 Woodb. & M. 390, Fed. Cas. No. 17, 510; Huger's Ex'rs v. Bocquet, 1 Bay (S. C.) 497; Thurlow v. Gilmore, 40 Me. 378; Dows v. Morewood, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 183; Allstan's Adm'r v. Contee's Ex'r, 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 351; Ross's Ex'r v. McLaughlan's Adm'r, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 86; Shedd v. Wilson, 27 Vt. 478; Berghaus v. Alter, 9 Watts (Pa.) 386; Harrison v. Johnston, 27 Ala. 445; Town of St. Albans v. Falley, 46 Vt. 448; Allen v. Brown, 39 Ia. 330; Worthley v. Emerson, 116 Mass. 374; The Barges 2 and 4, 58 Fed. 425. Where the payment is upon an account, the law will apply it to the oldest items; The Tom Lysle, 48 Fed. 690. So strong is this priority rule that it has been said that equity will apply payments to the earliest items, even where the creditor has security for these items and none for later ones; Truscott v. King, 6 N. Y. 147. But this is opposed to the prevailing rule.

Sureties. The general rule is that neither debtor nor creditor can so apply a payment as to affect the liabilities of sureties, without their consent; Merrimack County Bank v. Brown, 12 N. H. 320; Myers v. U. S., 1 McLean 493, Fed. Cas. No. 9,996; Brander v. Phillips, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 121, 10 L. Ed. 909; Postmaster General v. Norvell, Gilp. 106, Fed. Cas. No. 11,310. Where a principal makes general payments, the law presumes them, prima facie, to be made upon debts guaranteed by a surety, rather than upon others; though circumstances and intent will control this rule of surety, as they do other rules of appropriation; 1 C. & P. 600; 8 Ad. & E. 855; 10 J. B. Moore 362; Mitchell v. Dall, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 361; Donally v. Wilson, 5 Leigh (Va.) 329.

Continuous accounts. In these, payments are applied to the earliest items of account, unless a different intent can be inferred; 4 B. & Ad. 766; 4 Q. B. 792; U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 720, 6 L. Ed. 199; Gass v. Stinson, 3 Sumn. 98, Fed. Cas. No. 5,262; Miller v. Miller, 23 Me. 24, 39 Am. Dec. 597; Morgan v. Tarbell, 28 Vt. 498; Dulles v. De Forest, 19 Conn. 191; Harrison v. Johnston, 27 Ala. 445; Horne v. Bank, 32 Ga. 1; Shuford v. Chinski (Tex.) 26 S. W. 141; Winnebago Paper Mills v. Travis, 56 Minn. 480, 58 N. W. 36. Where one is indebted on two different accounts and money is paid without directions, the creditor may apply it to the later account; Henry Bill Pub. Co. v. Utley, 155 Mass. 366, 29 N. E. 635; Perot v. Cooper, 17 Colo. 80, 28 Pac. 391, 31 Am. St. Rep. 258; or he may apply half the amount paid on each of two debts, where neither is barred by the statute of limitations; Beck v. Haas, 111 Mo. 264, 20 S. W. 19, 33 Am. St. Rep. 516.

Partners. Where a creditor of the old firm continues his account with the new firm, payments by the latter will be applied to the old debt, prima facie, the preceding rule of continuous accounts guiding the appropriations. As above, however, a different intent, clearly proved, will prevail; 5 B. & Ad. 925; 2 B. & Ald. 39; Logan v. Mason, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 9. When a creditor of the firm is also the creditor of one partner, a payment by the latter of partnership funds must be applied to the partnership debts. Yet circumstances may allow a different application; 1 Mood. & M. 40; Fairchild v. Holly, 10 Conn. 175; McKee v. Stroup, 1 Rice (S. C.) 291; Sneed v. Wiester, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 277; Codman v. Armstrong, 28 Me. 91; Johnson v.

Boone's Adm'r, 2 Harr. (Del.) 172. See Tootle v. Jenkins, 82 Tex. 29, 17 S. W. 519. And so, unappropriated payments made by a party indebted severally and also jointly with another to the same creditor, for items of book-charges, are to be applied upon the several debts; Livermore v. Claridge, 33 Me. 428.

The rules of appropriation, it has now been seen, apply equally well whether the debts are of the same or of different orders, and though some are specialties while others are simple contracts; Town of Alexandria v. Patten, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 317, 2 L. Ed. 633; Bennett v. Woolfolk, 15 Ga. 221; Pennypacker v. Umberger, 22 Pa. 492; Hamilton v. Benbury, 3 N. C. 385.

As to the time during which the application must be made in order to be valid, there is much discrepancy among the authorities, but perhaps a correct rule is that any time will be good as between debtor and creditor, but a reasonable time only when third parties are affected; 6 Taunt. 597; Combs v. Little, 4 N. J. Eq. 314, 40 Am. Dec. 207; Starrett v. Barber, 20 Me. 457; Heilbron v. Bissell, Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 430; Reynolds v. McFarlane, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 488; Moss v. Adams, 39 N. C. 42; Robinson v. Doolittle, 12 Vt. 249; Fairchild v. Holly, 10 Conn. 184.

When once made, the appropriation cannot be changed but by consent; and rendering an account, or bringing suit and declaring in a particular way, is evidence of an appropriation; Hill v. Southerland's Ex'rs, 1 Wash. (Va.) 128; Hopkins v. Conrad, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 316; Bank of North America v. Meredith, 2 Wash. C. C. 47, Fed. Cas. No. 893; Jackson v. Bailey, 12 Ill. 159; Codman v. Armstrong, 28 Me. 91; Pearce v. Walker, 103 Ala. 250, 15 South. 568. If the debtor receives without objection an account rendered, he cannot afterward question the imputation; Flower v. O'Bannon, 43 La. Ann. 1042, 10 South. 376; Sawyer v. Harrison, 43 Minn. 298, 45 N. W. 434.

Of Government. No money can be drawn from the treasury of the United States but in consequence of appropriations made by law; Const. art. 1, s. 9. Under this clause it is necessary for congress to appropriate money for the support of the federal government; this is done annually by acts of appropriation, some of which are for the general purposes of government, and others special and private in their nature. These general appropriation bills, as they are commonly termed, extend to the 30th of June in the following year, and usually originate in the house of representatives, being prepared by the committee of ways and means; but they are distinct from the bills for raising revenue, which the constitution declares shall originate in the house of representatives. A rule of the house gives appropriation bills precedence over all other business, and requires them to be first discussed in committee of the whole. Where money once appropriated remains unexpended for more than two years after the expiration of the fiscal year in which the act shall have been passed, such appropriations are deemed to have ceased, and the moneys so unexpended are immediately thereafter carried to the "surplus fund," and it is not lawful thereafter to pay them out for any purpose without further and specific appropriations by law. Certain appropriations, however, are excepted from the operation of this law, viz.: moneys appropriated for payment of the interest on the funded debt, or the payment of interest and reimbursement according to contract of any loan or loans made on account of the United States; as likewise moneys appropriated for a purpose in respect to which a longer duration is specially assigned by law. No expenditure is allowed in any department in any year in excess of the appropriation for that year; R. S. §§ 3660-3692, 7 O. A. G. 1.

The term "appropriation" was also used in 13 Stat. at L. 381, to include all taking and use of property by the army and navy in the course of the war not authorized by contract with the government; Filor v. U. S., 9 Wall. (U. S.) 45, 19 L. Ed. 549; U. S. v. Russell, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 623, 20 L. Ed. 474; Waters v. U. S., 4 Ct. Cl. 389.

It is also used in reference to taking property under eminent domain (q. v.) and particularly to taking water in connection with irrigation (q. v.).

APPROVE. To increase the profits upon a thing.

Used of common or waste lands which were enclosed and devoted to husbandry; 3 Kent 406; Old Nat. Brev. 79.

While confessing crime one's self, to accuse another of the same crime.

It is so called because the accuser must prove what he asserts; Staundf. Pl. Cr. 142; Crompton, Jus. Peace 250.

To vouch. To appropriate. To improve. Kelham.

To commend; be satisfied with.

APPROVED ENDORSED NOTES. Notes endorsed by another person than the maker, for additional security, the endorser being satisfactory to the payee.

Public sales are sometimes made on approved endorsed notes. The meaning of the term is that the purchaser shall give his promissory note for the amount of his purchases, endorsed by another, which, if approved of by the seller, shall be received in payment. If the party approve of the notes, he consents to ratify the sale; Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 431.

APPROVER. One confessing himself guilty of felony, and accusing others of the same crime to save himself. Crompton, Inst. 250; Co. 3d Inst. 129; Myers v. People, 26 Ill. 173; Gray v. People, 26 Id. 344; 1 Cowper 331. See ANTITHETABUS.

Such an one was obliged to maintain the truth of his charge, by the old law; Cowell. If he failed to convict those he accused he was at once hung. Lea, Force & Superstition 243. It is said that they usually failed. 1 Pike, Hist. of Cr. 286. The improvement must have taken place before plea pleaded; 4 Bla. Com. 330.

Certain men sent into the several counties to increase the farms (rents) of hundreds and wapentakes, which formerly were let at a certain value to the sheriffs. Cowell.

Sheriffs are called the king's approvers. Termes de la Ley.

Approvers in the Marches were those who had license to sell and purchase beasts there.

APPURTENANCES. Things belonging to another thing as principal, and which pass as incident to the principal thing. Harris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 9 L. Ed. 333; Blaine's Lessee v. Chambers, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 169; Cro. Jac. 121, 526; 1 P. Wms. 603; 2 Coke 32; Co. Litt. 5 b, 56 a, b; 2 Saund. 401, n. 2; 1 B. & P. 371; Grubb v. Grubb, 74 Pa. 25. See 13 Am. Dec. 657, note.

The word has a technical signification, and, when strictly considered, is employed in leases for the purpose of including any easements or servitudes used or enjoyed with the demised premises. When thus used, to constitute an appurtenance there must exist a propriety of relation between the principal or dominant subject and the accessory or adjunct, which is to be ascertained by considering whether they so agree in nature or quality as to be capable of union without incongruity; Riddle v. Littlefield, 53 N. H. 508, 16 Am. Rep. 388; Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 11 Sup. Ct. 779, 35 L. Ed. 473.

Thus, if a house and land be conveyed, everything passes which is necessary to the full enjoyment thereof and which is in use as incident or appurtenant thereto; U. S. v. Appleton, 1 Sumn. 492, Fed. Cas. No. 14,463. Under this term are included the curtilage; 2 Bla. Com. 17; a right of way; 4 Ad. & E. 749; water-courses and secondary easements, under some circumstances; Angell, Wat. C. (7th ed.) § 153 a; a turbary; 3 Salk. 40; and generally, anything necessary to the enjoyment of a thing; 4 Kent 468, n.; Simmons v. Cloonan, 81 N. Y. 557; but it is the general rule that land cannot pass as appurtenant to land; Harris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 9 L. Ed. 333; Helme v. Guy, 6 N. C. 341; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 390; but it may pass, in order to give effect to the intent of a will; Otis v. Smith, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 293; and in Pennsylvania where first purchasers of 5000 acres from William Penn, the Proprietary, obtained city lots as an incident to their purchase, it was held that the lots passed as appurtenant to a grant of 5000 acres; Hill's Lessee v. West, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 142; also flats pass as appurtenant to the fast land on a river front; Risdon v. City of Philadelphia, 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 73; and the land covered by the water used for water power will pass as appurtenant to a saw-mill; Grubb v. Grubb, 74 Pa. 25. See also Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. 126; Ott v. Kreiter, 110 Pa. 370, 1 Atl. 724.

The mere use of the term "appurtenances," without more, will not pass a right of way established over one portion of land merely for convenience of the owner, it not being a way of necessity; Parsons v. Johnson, 68 N. Y. 62, 23 Am. Rep. 149.

An elevator is not a common appurtenance to the railroads of the several companies having the stock of the elevator company; a certificate of stock in an independent corporation cannot be an appurtenance to a railroad; Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 11 Sup. Ct. 779, 35 L. Ed. 473, where, under a mortgage made by a railroad company, the term "appurtenances" was held to mean only such property as is indispensable to the use and enjoyment of the franchises of the company.

If a house is blown down, a new one erected there shall have the old appurtenances; 4 Coke 86. The word appurtenances in a deed will not usually pass any corporeal real property, but only incorporeal easements, or rights and privileges; Co. Litt. 121; 8 B. & C. 150; 2 Washb. R. P. 317, 327; 3 id. 418. See APPENDANT.

Appurtenances of a ship include whatever is on board a ship for the objects of the voyage and adventure in which she is engaged, belonging to her owner. Ballast was held no appurtenance; 1 Leon. 46. Boats and cable are such; Briggs v. Strange, 17 Mass. 405; also, a rudder and cordage; 5 B. & Ald. 942; 1 Dods. Adm. 278; fishing-stores; 1 Hagg. Adm. 109; chronometers; 6 Jur. 910; see Richardson v. Clark, 15 Me. 421. For a full discussion, see 1 Pars. Marit. Law 71. See In re Bailey, 2 Sawy. 201, Fed. Cas. No. 728.

APPURTENANT. Belonging to; pertaining to.

The thing appurtenant must be of an inferior nature to the thing to which it is appurtenant; 2 Bla. Com. 19; U. S. v. Harris, 1 Sumn. 21, Fed. Cas. No. 15,315; Williams v. Baker, 41 Md. 523. A right of common may be appurtenant, as when it is annexed to lands in other lordships, or is of beasts not generally commonable; 2 Bla. Com. 33. Such can be claimed only by immemorial usage and prescription. See APPURTENANCES.

APUD ACTA (Lat.). Among the recorded acts. This was one of the verbal appeals (so called by the French commentators), and was obtained by simply saying, appello.

AQUA (Lat.). Water. It is a rule that water belongs to the land which it covers when it is stationary. Aqua cedit solo (water follows the soil); 2 Bla. Com. 18. But the owner of running water cannot obstruct the flow to the injury of an inheritance below him. Aqua currit et currere debet (water runs, and ought to run); 3 Kent 439;

Kauffman v. Griesemer, 26 Pa. 413, 67 Am. Dec. 437; 2 Washb. R. P. 340. See RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS.

AQUÆ DUCTUS. In Civil Law. A servitude which consists in the right to carry water by means of conduits over or through the estate of another. Dig. 8. 3. 1; Inst. 2. 3; Lalaure, Des Serv. c. 5, p. 23.

AQUÆ HAUSTUS. In Civil Law. A servitude which consists in the right to draw water from the fountain, pool, or spring of another. Inst. 2. 3. 2; Dig. 8. 3. 1. 1.

AQUÆ IMMITTENDÆ. In Civil Law. A servitude which frequently occurs among neighbors.

It was the right which the owner of a house, built in such a manner as to be surrounded with other buildings, so that it has no outlet for its waters, had to cast water out of his windows on his neighbor's roof, court, or soil. Lalaure, Des Serv. 23. It is recognized in the common law as an easement of drip; Wadsworth v. Hydraulic Ass'n, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 95; Gale & Whatley, Easements. See EASEMENTS; DRIP.

AQUAGIUM (Lat.). A water-course. Cowell. Canals or ditches through marshes. Spelman. A signal placed in the aquagium to indicate the height of water therein. Spelman.

AQUATIC RIGHTS. Rights which individuals have in water.

ARALIA. Land fit for the plough. Denoting the character of land, rather than its condition. Spelman. Kindred in meaning arare, to plough; arator, a ploughman; aratrum terræ, as much land as could be cultivated by a single arator; araturia, land fit for cultivation.

ARBITER. A person bound to decide according to the rules of law and equity, as distinguished from an arbitrator, who may proceed wholly at his own discretion, so that it be according to the judgment of a sound man. Cowell.

This distinction between arbiters and arbitrators is not observed in modern law. Russell, Arbitrator 112. See ARBITRATOR.

One appointed by the Roman prætor to decide by the equity of the case, as distinguished from the judez, who followed the law. Calvinus, Lex.

One chosen by the parties to decide the dispute; an arbitrator. Bell, Dict.

ARBITRAGE. Transactions of bankers and mercantile houses by which stocks or bills are bought in one market and sold in another for the sake of the profit arising from a difference in price in the two markets.

ARBITRAMENT AND AWARD. A plea to an action brought for the same cause which had been submitted to arbitration and on which an award had been made. Watson, Arb. 256.

ARBITRARY PUNISHMENT. That punishment which is left to the decision of the judge, in distinction from those defined by statute. See DISCRETION.

ARBITRATION AND AWARD. Arbitration is the investigation and determination of a matter or matters of difference between contending parties, by one or more unofficial persons, chosen by the parties, and called arbitrators, or referees.

1. CHARACTER OF THE PROCEEDING. Arbitration is the hearing and determination of a cause between the parties in controversy by a tribunal selected by them. Duren v. Getchell, 55 Me. 241. At common law it is entirely voluntary, and depends upon the agreement of the parties, to waive the right of trial in court by a jury.

"An arbitration is a domestic tribunal created by the will and consent of the parties litigant, and resorted to to avoid expense, delay and ill feeling consequent upon litigating in courts of justice." Reilly v. Russell, 34 Mo. 524.

"Arbitration is where the parties injuring and injured submit all matters in dispute concerning any personal chattels or personal wrong to the judgment of two or more arbitrators, who are to decide the controversy; and if they do not agree it is usual to add that another person be called in as umpire (imperator or impar) to whose sole judgment it is then referred; or frequently there is only one arbitrator originally appointed. The decision in any of these cases is called an award, and thereby the question is as fully determined and the right transferred or settled as it could have been by the agreement of the parties or a judgment of a court of justice." 3 Bla. Com. 16, adopted in Fargo v. Reighard, 13 Ind. App. 39, 39 N. E. 888, 41 N. E. 74; Germania Fire Ins. Co. of City of New York v. Warner, 13 Ind. App. 466, 41 N. E. 969.

"Arbitration is a substitution by consent of the parties of another tribunal for those provided by the ordinary processes of law; but that such a substitution should be established, the consent of the parties thereto should be proved in the usual way." Boyden v. Lamb, 152 Mass. 416, 25 N. E. 609.

"An arbitration at common law was but a judicial investigation out of court," and as such it required notice of hearing and examination of the witnesses under oath, unless expressly waived. People v. Board of Sup'rs, 15 N. Y. Supp. 748.

"Arbitration is an arrangement for taking and abiding by the judgment of selected persons in some disputed matter, instead of carrying it to the established tribunals of justice, and is intended to avoid the formalities, the delay, the expense and vexation of ordinary litigation. When the submission is made a rule of court, the arbitrators are not officers of the court, but are the appointees of the parties, as in cases where there is no rule of court." In re Curtis-Castle Arbitration, 64 Conn. 501, 30 Atl. 769, 42 Am. St. Rep. 200.

To constitute an arbitration, the matter submitted must be one in dispute between the parties and not some matter which it is expected may arise between them or a matter of accounting or appraisal. Toledo S. S. Co. v. Zenith Transp. Co., 184 Fed. 391, 106 C. C. A. 501.

Compulsory arbitration is when the consent of one of the parties is enforced by statutory provisions. Wood v. City of Seattle, 23 Wash. 1, 62 Pac. 135, 52 L. R. A. 369.

Voluntary arbitration is by mutual and free consent of the parties. It usually takes place in pursuance of an agreement (commonly in writing) between the parties, termed a submission; the person to whom the reference is made is an arbitrator; and the determination of the arbitrators is called an award; Garr v. Gomez, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 649; but a parol submission is good at common law; Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157, 28 N. W. 805, 4 Am. St. Rep. 834.

A submission to arbitration made pending an action thereon, operates as a discontinuance of the suit; Draghicevich v. Vulicevich, 76 Cal. 378, 18 Pac. 406; and it is a bar to any future action thereon; Baltes v. Machine Works, 129 Ind. 185, 28 N. E. 319. If the submission is not made under an order of court, the award cannot be made a judgment of the court unless it be by consent; Long v. Fitzgerald, 97 N. C. 39, 1 S. E. 844.

At common law it was either in pais,—that is, by simple agreement of the parties,—or by the intervention of a court of law or equity. The latter was called arbitration by rule of court; 3 Bla. Com. 16.

Besides arbitration at common law, there exists arbitration, in England as well as the United States, under various statutes.

Most of them are founded on the 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 15, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. ch. 42, § 49, by which it is allowed to refer a matter in dispute, not then in court, to arbitrators, and agree that the submission be made a rule of court. This agreement, being proved on the oath of one of the witnesses thereto, is enforced as if it had been made at first under a rule of court; 3 Bla. Com. 18; Kyd, Aw. 22. Some of the state statutes, however, provide for compulsory arbitration.

This is somewhat similar to the arbitrations of the Romans. There the prætor selected, from a list of citizens made for the purpose, one or more persons, who were authorized to decide all suits submitted to them, and which had been brought before him. The authority which the prætor gave them conferred on them a public character, and their judgments were without appeal. Toullier, Droit Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 3, c. 4, n. 820.

Although at common law arbitrators were unofficial persons selected by the parties, it is in the power of a state legislature to provide for statutory arbitrators to be selected from a class learned in the law, and that, in their proceedings, they shall be governed by certain rules and regulations. Such a commission is not an arbitrary one to which litigants are forced to submit their differences, but can only act by the express consent of the parties, which gives validity and vitality to the statute, and a judgment entered thereon is like other consent judgments; Henderson v. Beaton, 52 Tex. 29.

It is a general rule that in an arbitration as to matters of "public concern" a majority is sufficient to make an award; this rule was laid down by Eyre, C. J., in 1 Bos. & Pul. 229, and applied in Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha, 162 Fed. 225, 89 C. C. A. 205, 15 Ann. Cas. 498, where the appraisal of a water works, preparatory to their being taken over by a city, was held to be a matter of "public concern," and the decision of a majority binding; in Colombia v. Cauca Co., 190 U. S. 524, 23 Sup. Ct. 704, 47 L. Ed. 1159, where there had been an arbitration between the Republic of Colombia and a railroad company, and after the three arbitrators had heard and discussed the case, the Colombia representative withdrew, and there not being time under the treaty for proceedings to supply his place, the remaining arbitrators signed the award and it was held binding, among other reasons, because it was of "public concern"; in People v. Nichols, 52 N. Y. 478, 11 Am. Rep. 734, where an appropriation having been made (of $20,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary) for the purchase of relics of George Washington to be paid only on a certificate of genuineness and value of three named persons, it was held that a matter between a state and an individual is a matter of "public concern" and that a certificate signed by two was sufficient, the third having refused to sign. The rule was also applied in Morgan v. Ins. Ass'n, 52 App. Div. 61, 64 N. Y. Supp. 873.

2. SUBMISSION. The submission is an agreement, parol (oral or written) or sealed, by which parties agree to submit their differences to the decision of a referee or arbitrators. It is sometimes termed a reference; Kyd, Arb. 11; 3 M. & W. 816; McManus v. McCulloch, 6 Watts (Pa.) 357; Stewart v. Cass, 16 Vt. 663, 42 Am. Dec. 534; Howard v. Sexton, 4 N. Y. 157.

It is the authority given by the parties to the arbitrators, empowering them to inquire into and determine the matters in dispute.

It may be in pais, or by rule of court, or under the various statutes; Williams v. Wood, 12 N. C. 82.

It may be oral, but this is inconvenient, because open to disputes; by written agreement not under seal (in some states the submission must be in writing; De Armas v.

City of New Orleans, 5 La. 133; Smith v. Pollock, 2 Cal. 92); by indenture, with mutual covenants to abide by the decision of the arbitrator; by deed-poll, or by bond, each party executing an obligation to the other conditioned to be void respectively upon the performance of the award; Caldew. Arb. 16; McManus v. McCulloch, 6 Watts (Pa.) 357. A parol submission followed by a valid award, though not in writing, may be binding and conclusive upon the parties, if the arbitrators act fairly, but before a party is so bound, the agreement to arbitrate must be duly established; Childs v. State, 97 Ala. 52, 12 South. 441.

An offer to arbitrate not accepted by the other party cannot affect his right to sue; Funsten v. Commission Co., 67 Mo. App. 559; where a submission was provided for in a lease, and by failure of the parties to agree upon arbitrators, nothing had been done and suit was brought, the action could be defeated by an offer at the trial to proceed with the arbitration; Van Beuren v. Wotherspoon, 12 App. Div. 421, 42 N. Y. Supp. 404. A statutory provision for arbitration has been held not to be exclusive of the common-law right to arbitrate; Burkland v. Johnson, 50 Neb. 858, 70 N. W. 388. See also, as to the effect of statutory provisions upon common-law arbitration, New York Lumber & Wood Working Co. v. Schneider, 119 N. Y. 475, 24 N. E. 4; Ehrman v. Stanfield, 80 Ala. 118.

When to be made. A submission may be made at any time of causes not in court, and at common law, where a cause was depending, submission might be made by rule of court before the trial, or by order of nisi prius after it had commenced, which was afterwards made a rule of court; 2 B. & Ald. 395; Craig v. Craig, 9 N. J. L. 198.

Who may make. Any one capable of making a disposition of his property or release of his right, or capable of suing or being sued, or of making a valid and binding contract with regard to the subject, may, in general, be a party to a reference or arbitration; but one under civil or natural incapacity cannot be bound by his submission; 2 P. Wms. 45; Furbish v. Hall, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 315; Eastman v. Burleigh, 2 N. H. 484; Schoff v. Bloomfield, 8 Vt. 472; Inhabitants of Buckland v. Inhabitants, 16 Mass. 396; Inhabitants of Griswold v. North-Stonington, 5 Conn. 367; Brady v. Brooklyn, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 584; Street v. St. Clair, 6 Munf. (Va.) 458; Alexandria Canal Co. v. Swann, 5 How. (U. S.) 83, 12 L. Ed. 60; Lathers v. Fish, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 213. Every one is so far, and only so far, bound by the award as he would be by an agreement of the same kind made directly by him. For example, the submission of a minor is not void, but voidable; Millsaps v. Estes, 137 N. C. 535, 50 S. E. 227, 70 L. R. A. 170, 107 Am. St. Rep. 496, where on motion for rehearing (after holding it void; id., 134 N. C. 486, 46 S. E. 988) the court said that there was a conflict of authority, in which they were "inclined to concur with those courts and the text-writers who maintain the proposition that such contracts are voidable only" and that there is no reason to take it out of the general rule as to contracts of infants. See INFANT.

In general, in cases of incapacity of the real owner of property, as well as in many cases of agency, the person who has the legal control of the property may make submission, including a husband for his wife; 5 Ves. 846 (before the Married Women's Acts); a parent or guardian for an infant; Weston v. Stuart, 11 Me. 326; Hutchins v. Johnson, 12 Conn. 376, 30 Am. Dec. 622; Weed v. Ellis, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 253 (but not a guardian ad litem; Hannum's Heirs v. Wallace, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 129); a trustee for his cestui que trust; 3 Esp. 101; an attorney for his client; 1 Ld. Raym. 246; Scarborough v. Reynolds, 12 Ala. 252; Wilson v. Young, 9 Pa. 101; Diedrick v. Richley, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 271; Talbot v. McGee, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 375; Holker v. Parker, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 436, 3 L. Ed. 396 (but see 6 Weekl. Rep. 10); an agent duly authorized for his principal; 8 B. & C. 16; Schoff v. Bloomfield, 8 Vt. 472; Inhabitants of Boston v. Brazer, 11 Mass. 449; Furber v. Chamberlain, 29 N. H. 405; Wood v. R. Co., 8 N. Y. 160; an executor or administrator at his own peril, but not thereby necessarily admitting assets; Wheatley v. Martin's Adm'r, 6 Leigh (Va.) 62; Lea v. Colston, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 240; Ireland v. Smith, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 419; McKeen v. Oliphant, 18 N. J. L. 442; assignees under bankruptcy and insolvency laws, under the statutory restrictions, stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, and state statutes; the right being limited in all cases to that which the person acting can control and legally dispose of; Baker v. Lovett, 6 Mass. 78, 4 Am. Dec. 88; Britton v. Williams's Devises, 6 Munf. (Va.) 453; Milner v. Turner's Heirs, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 240; Fort v. Battle, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 133; but not including a partner, for a partnership; 1 Cr. M. & R. 681; Karthaus v. Ferrer, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 222, 7 L. Ed. 121; Buchanan v. Curry, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 137, 10 Am. Dec. 200; Pillsbury v. Cammett, 2 N. H. 284; Armstrong v. Robinson, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 412; Taylor v. Coryell, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 243; Lind. Partn. 129, 272; 3 Kent 49; the administratrix of a public contractor may join in a submission to arbitration of a controversy arising out of the contract; Bailey v. District of Columbia, 9 App. (D. C.) 360.

What may be included in a submission. Generally, any matter which the parties might adjust by agreement, or which may be the subject of an action or suit at law, except perhaps actions (qui tam) on penal statutes by common informers; for crimes cannot be made the subject of adjustment and composition by arbitration, this being against the most obvious policy of the law; McMullen v. Mayo, 8 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 298; Akely v. Akely, 16 Vt. 450; Caton v. MacTavish, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 192; Ligon v. Ford, 5 Munf. (Va.) 10; Partridge v. Hood, 120 Mass. 403, 21 Am. Rep. 524; Stanwood v. Mitchell, 59 Me. 121; Davenport v. Fulkerson, 70 Mo. 417; including a debt certain on a specialty, any question of law, the construction of a will or other instrument, any personal injury on which a suit will lie for damages, although it may be also indictable; 9 Ves. 307; Smith v. Thorndike, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 119; Walker v. Sanborn, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 288; Jones v. Mill Corp., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 148. All controversies of a civil nature, including disputes concerning real estate, may be the subject of a submission for arbitration; Finley v. Funk, 35 Kan. 668, 12 Pac. 15; "and in all cases of injury, either to the person or property, where damages would be recoverable by action, the arrangement of the matter may be left to arbitration;" Miller v. Brumbaugh, 7 Kan. 343, 349.

An agreement to refer future disputes will not be enforced by a decree of specific performance, nor will an action lie for refusing to appoint an arbitrator in accordance with such an agreement; 2 B. & P. 135; Tobey v. County of Bristol, 3 Sto. 800, Fed. Cas. No. 14,065; Leonard v. House, 15 Ga. 473. It is considered against public policy to exclude from the tribunals of the state disputes the nature of which cannot be foreseen; 4 Bro. C. C. 312, 315. See Lauman v. Young, 31 Pa. 306.

An agreement to arbitrate any dispute which may arise is ineffectual, under the settled rules of law, to oust the jurisdiction of the courts or debar either party from resorting thereto; The Excelsior, 123 U. S. 40, 8 Sup. Ct. 33, 31 L. Ed. 75; Seward v. City of Rochester, 109 N. Y. 164, 16 N. E. 348; Mentz v. Ins. Co., 79 Pa. 478, 21 Am. Rep. 80; Supreme Council of Order of Chosen Friends v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 25 N. E. 129, 9 L. R. A. 501, 21 Am. St. Rep. 196; Randel v. Canal Co., 1 Harr. (Del.) 233; Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116, 41 N. W. 1055; Hager v. Shuck, 120 Ky. 574, 87 S. W. 300, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 957; 5 H. L. Cas. 811; 8 Term 139; Straits of Dover S. S. Co. v. Munson, 100 Fed. 1005, 41 C. C. A. 156, affirming id., 99 Fed. 787, where it is said that "such agreements ever since Lord Coke's time, and even before, have been held to be no defense to an action in the courts." Such an agreement does not oust the courts of jurisdiction, and if such is its intent, it is invalid; White v. R. Co., 135 Mass. 216; Chamberlain v. R. Co., 54 Conn. 472, 9 Atl. 244; Dugan v. Thomas, 79 Me. 221, 9 Atl. 354; Hurst v. Litchfield, 39 N. Y. 377. Agreements to submit questions of fact to arbitration have been sustained; 5 H. L. Cas. 811; President, etc., Delaware & Hudson Canal

Co. v. Coal Co., 50 N. Y. 250, where it was held that the general rule stated should be applied to contracts only when coming strictly within the letter and spirit of decisions already made, and that it is contrary to the spirit of later times and not to be extended. Where, however, the agreement covers a case of mixed law and fact and its effect is to oust the jurisdiction of a court, it falls within the general rule and is void; Ison v. Wright, 55 S. W. 202, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1368; Vass v. Wales, 129 Mass. 38; 1 Exch. Div. 257. A provision in articles of an association, that any dispute between it and any member should be decided by arbitration in lieu of legal proceedings, was held not to oust the primary jurisdiction of the courts; McMahon v. Ben. Ass'n, 17 Phila. (Pa.) 216; nor did a provision providing for submission of disputes, not to a particular person or tribunal, but to one or more persons to be mutually chosen; Home Fire Ins. Co. of Omaha v. Kennedy, 47 Neb. 138, 66 N. W. 278, 53 Am. St. Rep. 521.

Revocation. The general principle with respect to voluntary arbitrations is that a submission is subject to revocation by either party; Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116, 44 N. W. 1055; People v. Nash, 13 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 301; before the making and publication of the award; Paulsen v. Manske, 126 Ill. 72, 18 N. E. 275, 9 Am. St. Rep. 532; Oregon & W. M. Sav. Bank v. Mtg. Co., 35 Fed. 22; Williams v. Mfg. Co., 153 N. C. 7, 68 S. E. 902, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 679, 138 Am. St. Rep. 637, 21 Ann. Cas. 954; Mead's Adm'x v. Owen, 83 Vt. 132, 74 Atl. 1058; Memphis Trust Co. v. Iron Works, 166 Fed. 398, 93 C. C. A. 162; Boston & L. R. Co. v. R. Corp., 139 Mass. 463, 31 N. E. 751; Sidlinger v. Kerkow, 82 Cal. 42, 22 Pac. 932; Levy v. Ins. Co., 58 W. Va. 546, 52 S. E. 449; but not under a clause in a lease; Atterbury v. Trustees, 66 Misc. 273, 123 N. Y. Supp. 25; nor (under a statute) after final submission to the arbitrators; id.; People v. Nash, 111 N. Y. 310, 18 N. E. 630, 2 L. R. A. 180, 7 Am. St. Rep. 747; Thomas W. Finucane Co. v. Board of Education, 190 N. Y. 76, 82 N. E. 737; but the "final submission" is held to be when the allegations and proofs of both parties are closed and the matter finally submitted to the arbitrators for their decision; In re Gitt, 140 App. Div. 382, 125 N. Y. Supp. 369; Atterbury v. Trustees of Columbia College, 66 Misc. 273, 123 N. Y. Supp. 25.

Revocation of a submission may take place at any time previous to the award, though it be expressed in the agreement to be irrevocable. See infra. The remedy of the injured party is by an action for breach of the agreement; Morse, Arb. & Aw. 230; 4 B. & C. 103; Rowley v. Young, 3 Day (Conn.) 118; Oregon & W. Mortg. Sav. Bank v. Mortgage Co., 35 Fed. 22.

A submission under rule of court or a statutory submission in a pending suit is generally irrevocable, both in England and the United States; 5 Burr. 497; Ilaskell v. Whitney, 12 Mass. 47; Inhabitants of Cumberland v. North Yarmouth, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 459; Hunt v. Wilson, 6 N. H. 36; Bloomer v. Sherman, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 573; Tyson v. Robinson, 25 N. C. 333; Carey v. County Com'rs, 19 Ohio, 245; Poppers v. Knight, 69 Ill. App. 578; Zehner v. Nav. Co., 187 Pa. 487, 41 Atl. 464, 67 Am. St. Rep. 586; without leave of the court. But "the mere fact that the controversies agreed to be submitted were the subject of a pending action would not make it a submission by rule of court"; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Cooper, 59 Minn. 290, 61 N. W. 143.

There are cases, apparently only in Pennsylvania, which hold that where the submission assumes the form of a contract, upon a sufficient consideration, it becomes irrevocable; McCune v. Lytle, 197 Pa. 404, 412, 47 Atl. 190, where Brown, J., says of this statement, "So well is it settled * * * that reference is hardly necessary to the * * * authorities," and then quotes from several cases, all of that state.

A right of revocation must be exercised before the publication of the award; Butler v. Greene, 49 Neb. 280, 68 N. W. 496; and before the party seeking to revoke has notice that the award is made; Coon v. Allen, 156 Mass. 113, 30 N. E. 83; but where the submission provides for a written award, it may be revoked after the arbitrators have communicated to strangers their views, but before they have signed an award; Butler v. Greene, 49 Neb. 280, 68 N. W. 496; but not after the award is made and published; Levy v. Ins. Co., 58 W. Va. 546, 52 S. E. 449.

A submission is revocable even if it provides that it shall be irrevocable; 8 Coke, 81 b, where the reason is given that "a man cannot by his act make such authority, power or warrant not countermandable, which is by the law and of its own nature countermandable"; 5 B. & Ald. 507; People v. Nash, 111 N. Y. 310, 18 N. E. 630, 2 L. R. A. 180, 7 Am. St. Rep. 747; Power v. Power, 7 Watts (Pa.) 205; Sartwell v. Sowles, 72 Vt. 270, 48 Atl. 11, 82 Am. St. Rep. 943; Tobey v. Bristol County, 3 Sto. 800, Fed. Cas. No. 14,065; Heritage v. State, 43 Ind. App. 595, 88 N. E. 114.

The formality of the revocation must follow and conform to that of the submission, so a submission under seal can only be revoked by writing under seal; Horne v. Welsh, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 569; Mullins v. Arnold, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 262; Van Antwerp v. Stewart, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 125; Jacoby v. Johnston, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 242; Wallis v. Carpenter, 13 Allen (Mass.) 19; McFarlane v. Cushman, 21 Wis. 401; Brown v. Leavitt, 26 Me. 251; one in writing only by writing; New York Lumber & Wood-Working Co. v. Schneider, 1 N. Y. Supp. 441 (so, by statute, of any revocation); Shisler v. Keavy, 75 Pa. 79; Keyes v. Fulton, 42 Vt. 159; Mand v. Patterson, 19 Ind. App. 619, 49 N. E. 974; so if it be oral it may be in like manner revoked; Sutton v. Tyrrell, 10 Vt. 91; Dexter v. Young, 40 N. H. 130.

The question whether a revocation was made before the award is for the jury; Hunt's Lessee v. Guilford, 4 Ohio 310. The institution of a suit by one party, before award, generally revokes by implication the submission; State v. Jenkins, 40 N. J. L. 288, 29 Am. Rep. 237; Commercial Union Assurance Co. of London v. Hocking, 115 Pa. 407, 8 Atl. 589, 2 Am. St. Rep. 562; Peters' Adm'r v. Craig, 6 Dana (Ky.) 307; Kimball v. Gilman, 60 N. H. 54; Paulsen v. Manske, 126 Ill. 72, 18 N. E. 275, 9 Am. St. Rep. 532.

A submission is, however, not revoked by the commencement of an action unless the suit covers the whole subject matter submitted, and until a complaint is filed by a party to the submission the adverse party has no legal notice of the cause of action, and the arbitrators may proceed with the arbitration and render an award though a summons has been issued; Williams v. Mfg. Co., 153 N. C. 7, 68 S. E. 902, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 679, 138 Am. St. Rep. 637, 21 Ann. Cas. 954.

Though counsel may submit his client's cause to arbitration, the latter may revoke it before action upon it; Coleman v. Grubb, 23 Pa. 393.

As to arbitration as a condition precedent, see 11 Harv. L. Rev. 234.

A submission on common law is generally revoked by the death of either party (unless it be stipulated otherwise), or of the arbitrator, or his refusal to act; 2 B. & Ald. 394; Dexter v. Young, 40 N. H. 130; Gregory v. Pike, 94 Me. 27, 46 Atl. 793; but see Bacon v. Crandon, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 79; Freeborn v. Denman, 8 N. J. L. 116; Price's Adm'r v. Tyson's Adm'rs, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 479; Leonard v. House, 15 Ga. 473; by the death of the umpire, or the setting aside of the award by a decree of a court; Parsons v. Ambros, 121 Ga. 98, 48 S. E. 696; so also by marriage of a feme sole, and the husband and wife may then be sued on her arbitration bond; 5 East 266. It is not revoked by the bankruptcy of the party or by the death of the arbitrator after publication of the award; 4 B. & Ald. 250; Cartledge v. Cutliff, 21 Ga. 1. A submission in a pending action at law falls where the award fails for misconduct of the arbitrators; Rand v. Peel, 74 Miss. 305, 21 South. 10.

Where the submission makes no provision for filling a vacancy, if one occurs by the death of an arbitrator or refusal to act, it is a revocation; Wolf v. Augustine, 181 Pa. 576, 37 Atl. 574.

A revocation may be good at law but bad in equity, and revocation of a submission which has been made a rule of court is a contempt; 1 Jac. & W. 485.

Effect of. A submission of a case in court works a discontinuance and a waiver of defects in the process; Camp v. Root, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 22; Bigelow v. Goss, 5 Wis. 421; Crooker v. Buck, 41 Me. 355; and the bail or sureties on a replevin bond are discharged; Hill v. Hunnewell, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 192; Cunningham v. Howell, 23 N. C. 9; 2 B. & Ad. 774. But see 6 Taunt. 379; 10 Bingh. 118. But this rule has been modified in England by stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 11; 8 Exch. 327.

The submission which defines and limits, as well as confers and imposes, the duty of the arbitrator must be followed by him in his conduct and award; but a fair and liberal construction is allowed in its interpretation; 1 Wms. Saund. 65; Hume v. Hume, 3 Pa. 144; Cheshire Bank v. Robinson, 2 N. H. 126; Karthaus v. Ferrer, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 222, 7 L. Ed. 121. If general, it submits both law and fact; Indiana Cent. R. Co. v. Bradley, 7 Ind. 49; if limited, the arbitrator cannot exceed his authority; Barrows v. Copen, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 37.

The statutes of many of the states of the United States provide for submissions by the parties before a justice of the peace, in which case the award will be enforced as if it had been made under rule of court; and statutes also regulate submissions made under rule of court.

3. THE ARBITRATORS. A private extraordinary judge chosen by the parties who have a matter in dispute, invested with power to decide the same. Adopted from Bouv. L. Dict. in Gordon v. U. S., 7 Wall. 188, 194, 19 L. Ed. 35; also in Miller v. Canal Co., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 590, 595, with this additional sentence from the same work: "Arbitrators are so called because they have generally an arbitrary power, there being, in common, no appeal from their sentences, which are called awards."

A private extraordinary judge, to whose decision matters in controversy are referred by consent of the parties.

"Referee" is of frequent modern use as a synonym of "arbitrator," but it is in its origin of broader significance and it is less accurate than arbitrator.

An arbitrator at common law "is to be considered as a judge or tribunal of the parties' own choosing, and his decision or judgment cannot be set aside unless for partiality or corruption, which will not be presumed on slight grounds, but must be clearly shown;" McManus v. McCulloch, 6 Watts (Pa.) 357.

Arbitrators are judges chosen by the parties to decide matters submitted to them, finally and without appeal; Burchell v. Marsh, 17 How. (U. S.) 344, 15 L. Ed. 96; Miller v. Canal Co., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 590; and they must be taken as they are with their weaknesses and frailties, and their action if honest and fair, is binding; Silver v. Lumber Co., 40 Fed. 192; but the power to appoint them is not judicial, but executive; Kean v. Ridgway, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 65.

They are sometimes considered as the substitutes and sometimes as the judges of the parties; they can do what the parties can and more than the courts, and their power is revocable as a power of attorney; Dixon v. Morehead, Add. (Pa.) 216.

Arbitrators have the powers of a court and jury; Kennedy v. Luhman, 13 Montg. Co. L. Rep. (Pa.) 131. They are judges, not agents of the parties appointing them; 1 Ves. 226; 9 Ves. 69; and their duties are more judicial than fiduciary; Collins v. Oliver, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 439; quasi-judicial officers; Hoosac Tunnel, Dock & Elevator Co. v. O'Brien, 137 Mass. 424, 50 Am. Rep. 323; per contra, it is said that they are the agents of both parties and their acts are to be considered as the acts of the parties themselves; Hays v. Hays, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 363; Strong v. Strong, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 560.

An arbitrator must be a disinterested person to whom a matter in dispute is submitted for decision; Garr v. Gomez, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 649; Miller v. Canal Co., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 590; State v. Appleby, 25 S. C. 100, 104; Perry v. Cobb, 88 Me. 435, 34 Atl. 278, 49 L. R. A. 389. "In order to clothe a person with the authority of an arbitrator, the parties must mutually agree to be bound by the decision of the person chosen to determine the matter in controversy;" Gordon v. U. S., 7 Wall. 188, 194, 19 L. Ed. 35. Like jurors impanelled for the trial of a cause, arbitrators are invested pro hac vice with judicial functions, the rightful discharge of which calls for and presupposes the most absolute impartiality;" Strong v. Strong, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 560; Grosvenor v. Flint, 20 R. I. 21, 37 Atl. 304; where an appraiser under an insurance policy was not disinterested, and that fact was concealed, a suit was held maintainable to set aside the appraisal; Bradshaw v. Ins. Co., 137 N. Y. 137, 32 N. E. 1055, where it was held unnecessary to decide whether it was an arbitration.

Appointment and Qualifications. Usually a single arbitrator is agreed upon, or the parties each appoint one, with a stipulation that, if they do not agree, another person, called an umpire, named, or to be selected by the arbitrators, shall be called in, to whom the matter is to be referred; Cald. Arb. ch. IV; Smith v. Morse, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 76, 19 L. Ed. 597.

In general, any objection to the appointment of an arbitrator; Estice v. Cockerell, 26 Miss. 127; Indiana Ins. Co. v. Brehm, 89 Ind. 578; Robb v. Brachman, 38 Ohio St. 423; or umpire will be waived by attending before him; 9 Ad. & E. 679; Anderson v.

Burchett & Farley, 48 Kan. 153, 29 Pac. 315; and an objection should be made at the trial; Cones v. Vanosdol, 4 Ind. 248; Madison Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 3 Ind. 277; Graham v. Graham, 9 Pa. 254, 49 Am. Dec. 557; Christman v. Moran, 9 Pa. 487; one who goes to trial before a referee without requiring an oath waives the oath; Newcomb v. Wood, 97 U. S. 581, 24 L. Ed. 1085; Maynard v. Frederick, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 247. It is said that any person may be chosen as an arbitrator; Morse, Arb. & Aw. 99; and it is no objection that one has been formerly counsel for the party in whose favor he found, that fact not being known to the other party; Goodrich v. Hulbert, 123 Mass. 190, 25 Am. Rep. 60; or that one had been intimate with the party and had heard his version of the dispute before; Morville v. Tract Soc., 123 Mass. 129; an employé of one party; Howard v. R. Co., 24 Fla. 560, 5 South. 356; a stockholder of a corporation party; Williams v. Ry. Co., 112 Mo. 463, 20 S. W. 631, 34 Am. St. Rep. 403; Inhabitants of Leominster v. R. Co., 7 Allen (Mass.) 38; a woman, married or single; Evans v. Ives, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 635; or a judge, if named by the parties; Hopkins v. Soudouskie, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 148; Galloway's Heirs v. Webb, Hard. (Ky.) 318 (but not under the civil law; Dom. Civ. L. sec. 1113); or one who has acted as an arbitrator before in the same capacity; Stemmer v. Ins. Co., 33 Ore. 65, 49 Pac. 588, 53 Pac. 498; Van Winkle v. Ins. Co., 55 W. Va. 286, 47 S. E. 82. The relation of landlord and tenant subsisting between an arbitrator and one of the parties does not disqualify him; Fisher v. Towner, 14 Conn. 26; nor does the fact that the referee and the attorney for one of the parties had an office together and were in daily and friendly intercourse; Perry v. Moore, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 32.

Whether natural or legal disabilities are a disqualification appears not to be authoritatively settled. It is said that they do not so operate; Viner, Abr. Arbitrement (A. 2); Russ. Arb. & Aw. (9th Ed.) 92 (citing only Viner); Morse, Arb. & Aw. 99 (citing only Russell); contra, Com. Dig. Arbitrament (C), who says that persons of nonsane memory, lunatics, infants, persons not sui juris as a villein, persons dead in law, as a monk, one attainted of treason or felony, cannot be arbitrators (citing no case but only West, Symb. 163 b.). There appears to be no decided case on the subject and no definite or modern authority to indicate that a person who is not sui juris for any other purpose would be qualified to act in this capacity. The rule of the civil law seems to be definite to the effect that all persons may be arbitrators except such as are under some incapacity or infirmity which renders them unfit for that function; Dom. Civ. L. sec. 1112. The only case cited to support the right of parties to appoint any one without qualification is simply a decision that it is immaterial whether the arbitrator be a professional man or not; 8 Dowl. 879.

There are certain facts which, as in the case of judges or jurors, will render a person incapable of being an arbitrator, if they are unknown to the party objecting, as, for example, interest in the subject matter; Connor v. Simpson, 4 Sadler (Pa.) 105, 7 Atl. 161; Pearson v. Barringer, 109 N. C. 398, 13 S. E. 942; Strong v. Strong, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 135 (where the question of the arbitrator's impartiality was submitted to the jury in an action on a bond to abide the award); kinship to either party; Brown v. Leavitt, 26 Me. 251 (but not equal relationship to both parties; McGregor v. Sprott, 59 Hun, 617, 13 N. Y. 191); a transfer to an arbitrator's son pending arbitration; Spearman v. Wilson, 44 Ga. 473; free judgment of the case; Beatlie v. Hilliard, 55 N. H. 428 (but not an opinion expressed five years before; Brush v. Fisher, 70 Mich. 469, 38 N. W. 446, 14 Am. St. Rep. 510); previous conviction of perjury; Colles, P. C. 257; strong bias and prejudice; Bash v. Christian, 77 Ind. 290.

Proceedings. Arbitrators should give notice of the time and place of hearing to the parties interested; Lutz v. Linthicum, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 165, 178, 8 L. Ed. 904; Elmendorf v. Harris, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 628, 35 Am. Dec. 587; Bushey v. Culler, 26 Md. 534; Crowell v. Davis, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 293; Vessel Owners' Towing Co. v. Taylor, 126 Ill. 250, 18 N. E. 663; Curtis v. City of Sacramento, 64 Cal. 102, 28 Pac. 108; an award made without such notice of the hearing is a nullity; Peters v. Newkirk, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 103; it is not binding on the party having no notice; Cobb v. Wood, 32 Me. 455; McKinney v. Page, 32 Me. 513; Dormoy v. Knower, 55 Ia. 722, 8 N. W. 670; but where the submission is by written agreement a surety in the agreement need not be notified of the hearing; Farmer v. Stewart, 2 N. H. 97; and where the respective attorneys of the parties were arbitrators and notice was unnecessary; Hill v. Hill, 11 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 616; and where notice was given and the party sought to set aside the award on the ground that he was unavoidably prevented from attending by the obstruction of roads caused by high water, it was not error to refuse the motion; Shroyer v. Barkley, 24 Mo. 346. Where one party had ineffectually attempted to revoke his submission and refused to attend, the arbitrator may proceed ex parte, without giving him notice; 1 Jac. & W. 485, 492; and the refusal of a party to attend or concern himself with the matter is a waiver of notice; Vincent v. Ins. Co., 120 Ia. 272, 94 N. W. 458. In England the practice seems to be that the arbitrators are not required to give notice, but that the party obtaining an appointment of the time for hearing should serve it on the solicitors of the other party;

Russ. Arb. & Aw. 132; Morse Arb. & Aw. 117; and in one case Lord Hardwicke held that no notice from the arbitrators was required; 3 P. Wms. 529. The power of the arbitrators is not determined by their neglect to attend at the time designated and they may appoint another session within any reasonable time; Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 666.

They should all conduct the investigation together, and should sign the award in each other's presence; Smith v. Smith, 28 Ill. 56; Thompson v. Mitchell, 35 Me. 281; Hills v. Ins. Co., 129 Mass. 345; but a majority is held sufficient; Parker v. Ins. Co., 3 R. I. 192; Robinson v. Bickley, 30 Pa. 384; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 26 N. J. L. 175; Kile v. Chapin, 9 Ind. 150; Henderson v. Buckley, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 292; Cartledge v. Cutliff, 21 Ga. 1; Doherty v. Doherty, 148 Mass. 367, 19 N. E. 352. An award by two of three arbitrators is binding; Doyle v. Patterson, 84 Va. 800, 6 S. E. 138; Hewitt v. Craig, 86 Ky. 23, 5 S. W. 280; contra, Kent v. French, 76 Ia. 187, 40 N. W. 713. See supra as to matters of "public concern."

In investigating matters in dispute, they are allowed the greatest latitude; 1 B. & P. 91; Langley v. Hickman, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 681; Hollingsworth v. Leiper, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 161, 1 L. Ed. 82; Jones v. Boston Mill Corp., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 148; Mulder v. Cravat, 2 Bay (S. C.) 370; Askew v. Kennedy, 1 Bail (S. C.) 46. But see Fennimore v. Childs, 6 N. J. L. 386; McAlister v. McAlister, 1 Wash. (Va.) 193; Fowler v. Thayer, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 111; Forbes v. Frary, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 224; Latimer v. Ridge, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 458. They are judges both of law and of fact, and are not bound by the rules of practice adopted by the courts; 1 Ves. Ch. 369; Burchell v. Marsh, 17 How. (U. S.) 344, 15 L. Ed. 96; Skeels v. Chickering, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 316; Ward v. Bank, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 486; Kendall v. Power Co., 36 Me. 19; Long v. Rhodes, 36 Me. 108; Ebert v. Ebert, 5 Md. 353; In re Riddle's Estate, 19 Pa. 431; Sargeant v. Butts, 21 Vt. 99; White v. White, 21 Vt. 250; Bennett v. Bennett, 25 Conn. 66; Smith v. Douglass, 16 Ill. 34; Ross v. Watt, 16 Ill. 99; Lunsford v. Smith, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 554; Indiana Cent. Ry. Co. v. Bradley, 7 Ind. 49; Hotaling v. Cronise, 2 Cal. 64; Tyson v. Wells, id. 122; Sessions v. Bacon, 23 Miss. 272; Price v. Brown, 98 N. Y. 388; King v. Mfg. Co., 79 N. C. 360; Adams' Adm'r v. Ringo, 79 Ky. 211. Thus, the witnesses were not sworn in Bergh v. Pfeiffer, Lalor's Supp. (N. Y.) 110; Woodrow v. O'Conner, 28 Vt. 778. They may decide ex aequo et bono, and need not follow the law; the award will be set aside only when it appears that they meant to be governed by the law but have mistaken it; 2 C. B. 705; Kleine v. Catara, 2 Gall. 61, Fed. Cas. No. 7,869; Pringle v. McClenachan, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 486, 1 L. Ed. 235; Jones v. Corp., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 148;

White v. White, 21 Vt. 250; Greenough v. Rolfe, 4 N. H. 357; but if they decide a matter honestly and fairly according to their judgment, the award will not be set aside because they decide the facts erroneously, or were mistaken in the law they applied to them, or decide on an erroneous theory; Goddard v. King, 40 Minn. 164, 41 N. W. 659; Hall v. Ins. Co., 57 Conn. 105, 17 Atl. 356; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Canton Co., 70 Md. 405, 17 Atl. 394; Thornton v. McCormick, 75 Ia. 285, 39 N. W. 502; Burchell v. Marsh, 17 How. (U. S.) 344, 15 L. Ed. 96.

Under submissions in pais, the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers was entirely voluntary at common law; 2 Sim. & S. 418; 2 C. & P. 550. It was otherwise when made under a rule of court.

Duties and powers of. Arbitrators cannot delegate their authority; Cro. Eliz. 726; 6 C. B. 258; Sutton v. Horn, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 228; Kingston v. Kincaid, 1 Wash. C. C. 448, Fed. Cas. No. 7,821; Shipman v. Fletcher, 82 Va. 601; Hicks v. McDonnell, 99 Mass. 459. The power ceases with the publication of the award; Newman v. Labeaume, 9 Mo. 30; and death after publication and before delivery does not vitiate it; Cartledge v. Cutliff, 21 Ga. 1. They cannot be compelled to make an award; in which respect the common law differs from the Roman; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1457; or to disclose the grounds of their judgment; 3 Atk. 644; Ebert v. Ebert, 5 Md. 353; State v. Peticrew's Ex'r, 19 Mo. 373.

An arbitrator may retain the award till paid for his services, but cannot maintain assumpsit in England without an express promise; 2 M. & G. 847, 870; 3 Q. B. 466, 928. But see 1 Gow. 7; 1 B. & P. 93. In the United States he may; Hinman v. Hapgood, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 188, 43 Am. Dec. 663; Goodall v. Cooley, 29 N. H. 48.

A submission to arbitration by one of several parties without the consent of the others, whether by rule of court or otherwise, is void; Gregory v. Trust Co., 36 Fed. 408.

4. THE UMPIRE. Sometimes a submission provides for the appointment of one arbitrator by each party with authority, if they disagree, to call in a third person, usually designated as the umpire. This term "denotes one who is to decide the controversy in case the others cannot agree;" Keans v. Rankin, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 88. The jurisdiction of the umpire and arbitrators cannot be concurrent; Morse, Arb. & Aw. 241; if the arbitrators make an award, it is binding; if not, the award of the umpire is binding; T. Jones 167. If the umpire sign the award of the arbitrators, it is still their award, and vice versa; Rigden v. Martin, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 403. He determines the issue submitted to the arbitrators on which they have failed to agree, which is his sole award; and neither of the original arbitrators is required to join in the award; Haven v. Winnishumet Co., 11 Allen (Mass.) 384, 87 Am. Dec. 723; Ingraham v. Whitmore, 75 Ill. 30. Sometimes the third person called in so to decide is called a "special arbitrator." The distinction is that, when the special or third arbitrator is called in, the authority to make an award is vested in the three jointly, and even if an award by two is good, it must be the result of deliberations, but when, upon a disagreement between arbitrators, an umpire is called in, the powers of the former are functus officio, and the latter has exclusive authority to make a decision; Day v. Hammond, 57 N. Y. 479, 15 Am. Rep. 522, quoting Lyon v. Blossom, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 318; Chandos v. Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 184, 54 N. W. 390, 19 L. R. A. 321; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Mercantile Co., 56 Fed. 378, 5 C. C. A. 524.

The power to appoint an umpire "must be given in express words" and is not to be implied even from "power given to two arbitrators in the event of their disagreement to select a third person," as in such case the latter "is a joint arbitrator and not an umpire"; Gaffy v. Bridge Co., 42 Conn. 143, quoting Lyon v. Blossom, 4 Duer. (N. Y.) 328.

A third or special arbitrator must be appointed before the hearing unless the appointment of one is waived either expressly or tacitly by appearance of the parties before the two; Badders v. Davis, 88 Ala. 387, 6 South. 834; Phipps v. Tompkins, 50 Ga. 641; 14 U. C. Q. B. 495; but an umpire may be appointed either before; Peck v. Wakely, 2 McCord (S. C.) 279; Van Cortlandt v. Underhill, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 405; Rigden v. Martin, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 403; or after a disagreement between the arbitrators; Rogers v. Corrothers, 26 W. Va. 238; Chandos v. Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 184, 54 N. W. 390, 19 L. R. A. 321; unless otherwise provided by statute; In re Grening, 74 Hun 62, 26 N. Y. S. 117.

Arbitrators may appoint an umpire after their term of service has expired, if the time is not gone within which the umpire was to make his award; McKinstry v. Solomons, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 57. Subsequent dissent of the parties, without just cause, will have no effect upon the appointment; but they should have notice; Crowell v. Davis, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 293. If an umpire refuses to act, another may be appointed toties quoties; 11 East 367. If the arbitrators and umpire act together and make a joint award, it will be good; Rison v. Berry, 4 Rand. (Va.) 275; Bulstr. 184.

Under an agreement to arbitrate, the subsequent proceeding of one arbitrator and the umpire to make an award without the presence of the other arbitrator is unauthorized and illegal; Cravens v. Estes, 144 Ky. 511, 139 S. W. 761; and so is the choice of an umpire by lot, and the award will be set aside; 9 B. & C. 624; 9 Ad. & El. 699.

The umpire is called into the arbitration to act only after a disagreement between the arbitrators, and his opinion and judgment must control the award; Mullins v. Arnold, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 262; but he cannot, in the absence of one of the parties and one of the arbitrators, act on information from the other party and arbitrator; Cravens v. Estes, 144 Ky. 511, 139 S. W. 761.

Where the agreement permits a majority decision, the withdrawal of one arbitrator and his refusal to act, after one party has attempted to withdraw, will not affect an award made the same day by the other arbitrators; Atterbury v. Trustees of Columbia College, 66 Misc. Rep. 273, 123 N. Y. S. 25.

At common law all the arbitrators must agree unless the submission provides to the contrary; Washburn v. White, 197 Mass. 540, 84 N. E. 106; Tennessee Lumber Mfg. Co. v. Clark Bros. Co., 182 Fed. 618, 105 C. C. A. 156; even where by statute or under a contract a majority may make a report, all the proceedings must be participated in by all the members; Heritage v. State, 43 Ind. App. 595, 88 N. E. 114; but where the agreement provided for an award by two of three, the fact that one refused to sign the award, or to participate in a further ascertainment of damages which the settlement required, did not invalidate a subsequent proceeding for ascertaining damages; Toledo S. S. Co. v. Transp. Co., 184 Fed. 391, 106 C. C. A. 501. And where the contract provided that one arbitrator should be selected by each party and they two have power to select a third, it was held that by clear implication two were authorized to make a binding and final award; Clark Bros. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 176 Fed. 929; but this case was reversed in Tennessee Lumber Mfg. Co. v. Clark Bros. Co., 182 Fed. 618, 105 C. C. A. 156, where the distinction is well put between cases where the power given to two to appoint a third is conditioned upon their disagreement or no; in the former case, the third is an umpire, and a majority award would be valid, but in the latter case, "the three constituted the board, * * * (and) their award, to be valid, must be unanimous;" and to the same effect is Weaver v. Powel, 148 Pa. 372, 23 Atl. 1070. Both courts cite Hobson v. McArthur, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 182, 10 L. Ed. 930, where the agreement was that "if the two could not agree on the value of the land or any part thereof, they should choose a third person, who should agree on the value of the land," and it was held "a more reasonable construction to consider the third man in the character of an umpire, to decide between the two that should disagree," and the award of two was held good. This case is contrary to the apparently well settled rule that, when there is an umpire, he alone decides and the arbitrators do not participate. But there are other cases "on all fours" with that in Hobson v. McArthur, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 182, 10 L. Ed. 930, as Quay v. Westcott, 60 Pa. 163. See supra.

5. THE AWARD. The award is the judgment or decision of arbitrators or referees on a matter submitted to them. It is also the writing containing such judgment. Cowell; Termes de la Ley; Jenk. 137; Watson, Arb. 174; Russell, Arb. 234.

The word is derived from the Latin, awarda, awardum, Old French, agarda from à garder, to keep, preserve, to be guarded, or kept: so called because it is imposed on the parties to be observed or kept by them. Spelman, Gloss.

Requisites of. To be conclusive, the award should be consonant with and follow the submission, and affect only the parties to the submission; otherwise, it is an assumption of power, and not binding; Lutw. 530 (Onyons v. Cheese); 24 E. L. & Eq. 346; 8 Beav. 361; Martin v. Williams, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 268; Howard v. Edgell, 17 Vt. 9; Barrows v. Capen, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 37; McNear v. Bailey, 18 Me. 251; Gates v. Treat, 25 Conn. 71; Fountain v. Harrington, 3 Harr. (Del.) 22; State v. Stewart, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 456; Jessee v. Cater, 25 Ala. 351; Thornton v. Carson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 599, 3 L. Ed. 451. See Humphreys v. Gardner, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 61; Scott v. Barnes, 7 Pa. 134; Leslie v. Leslie, 50 N. J. Eq. 103, 24 Atl. 319; Buntain v. Curtis, 27 Ill. 374. Where it exceeds the terms of the submission, it is not void, where the judge on confirmation excludes as much as is incompetent; McCall v. McCall, 36 S. C. 80, 15 S. E. 348; but it is so where damages are allowed in a lump sum, in which are included matters not submitted to them; Dodds v. Hakes, 114 N. Y. 260, 21 N. E. 398.

It must be final and certain; Morse, Arb. 383; 5 Ad. & E. 147; Barnet v. Gilson, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 340; Nichols v. Ins. Co., 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 125; Whitcomb v. Preston, 13 Vt. 53; Hanson v. Webber, 40 Me. 194; Hazen v. Addis, 14 N. J. L. 333; Carter v. Calvert, 4 Md. Ch. Dec. 199; Bannister v. Read, 1 Gilm. (Ill.) 92; Thomas v. Molier, 3 Ohio 266; *Parker v. S.) 419, 18 L. Ed. 700; Frison v. De Pelffer, 83 Me. 71, 21 Atl. 746; and stating the decision in such language as to leave no doubt of the arbitrator's intention, or the nature and extent of the duties imposed by it on the parties; Pierson v. Norman, 2 Cal. 599, and cases above. An award reserving the determination of future disputes; Calvert v. Carter, 6 Md. 135; an award directing a bond without naming a penalty; 5 Co. 77; Rolle, Abr. Arbitration 2, 4; an award that one shall give security for the performance of some act or payment of money, without specifying the kind of security, is invalid; Viner, Abr. Arbit. 2, 12; Bacon, Abr. Arbit. E. 11, and cases above. So is one that finds that a party is entitled to receive his final payment and fails to ascertain the amount; Flannery v. Sahagian, 134 N. Y. 85, 31 N. E. 319.

It must be possible to be performed, and must not direct anything to be done which is contrary to law; 2 B. & Ald. 528; Yeamans v. Yeamans, 99 Mass. 585. It will be void if it direct a party to pay a sum of money at a day past, or direct him to commit a trespass, felony, or an act which would subject him to an action; 1 M. & W. 572; or if it be of things nugatory and offering no advantage to either of the parties; 6 J. B. Moore 713.

It must be without palpable or apparent mistake; Kleine v. Catara, 2 Gall. 61, Fed. Cas. No. 7,869; 3 B. & P. 371; Pringle v. McClenachan, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 487, 1 L. Ed. 235; Boston Water Power Co. v. Gray, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 131. For if the arbitrator acknowledges that he made a mistake, or if an error (in computation, for instance) is apparent on the face of the award, it will not be good; Taylor v. Sayre, 24 N. J. L. 647; Goodell v. Raymond, 27 Vt. 241; Roloson v. Carson, 8 Md. 208; Goodrich v. City of Marysville, 5 Cal. 430; Spoor v. Tyzzer, 115 Mass. 40; Eisenmeyer v. Sauter, 77 Ill. 515; American Screw Co. v. Sheldon, 12 R. I. 324; for, although an arbitrator may decide contrary to law, yet if the award attempts to follow the law, but fails to do so from the mistake of the arbitrator, it will be void; Kendrick v. Tarbell, 26 Vt. 416; Ennos v. Pratt, id. 630; Burchell v. Marsh, 17 How. (U. S.) 344, 15 L. Ed. 96.

A parol award is sufficient notwithstanding the submission is in writing, if the submission does not in terms require an award in writing; Marsh v. Packer, 20 Vt. 198; an award determined by lot is vitiated thereby; Luther v. Medbury, 18 R. I. 141, 26 Atl. 37, 49 Am. St. Rep. 753; and where the umpire was chosen by lot a rule to set it aside was made absolute; 9 B. & Cr. 624; 9 Ad. & El. 699.

An award may be in part good and in part void, in which case it will be enforced so far as valid, if the good part is separable from the bad: 10 Mod. 204; Cro. Jac. 664; Martin v. Williams, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 264; Orcutt v. Butler, 42 Me. 83; Barrows v. Capen, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 37; Richards v. Brockembrough's Adm'r, 1 Rand. (Va.) 449; Taylor v. Nicolson, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 67; Brown v. Warnock, 5 Dana (Ky.) 492; Dalrymple v. Whitingham, 26 Vt. 345; Cones v. Vanosdol, 4 Ind. 248; Cromwell v. Owings, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 10; Lyle v. Rodgers, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 394, 5 L. Ed. 117.

As to form, the award should, in general, follow the terms of the submission, which frequently provides the time and manner of making and publishing the award. It may be by parol (oral or written), or by deed; 3 Bulstr. 311; Marsh v. Packer, 20 Vt. 198. It should be signed by all the arbitrators in the presence of each other; Leavitt v. Inv. Co., 54 Fed. 439, 4 C. C. A. 425; Kent v. French, 76 Ia. 187, 40 N. W. 713. See Godfrey v. Knodle, 44 Ill. App. 638; Barr v. Chandler, 47 N. J. Eq. 532, 20 Atl. 733; contra, Doyle v. Patterson, 84 Va. 800, 6 S. E. 138; Hewitt v. Craig, 86 Ky. 23, 5 S. W. 280. Where the submission requires the concurrence of the three arbitrators, recovery cannot be had where but two sign, though the third says it is right, but refuses to sign; Weaver v. Powel, 148 Pa. 372, 23 Atl. 1070. See ARBITRATOR.

An award will be sustained by a liberal construction, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; Dolph v. Clemens, 4 Wis. 181; Rolson v. Carson, 8 Md. 208; Allen v. Hiller, 8 Ind. 310; Haywood v. Harmon, 17 Ill. 477; Bemus v. Clark, 29 Pa. 251; Reed Aw. 170.

Effect of. An award is a final and conclusive judgment between the parties on all the matters referred by the submission; Reizenstein v. Hahn, 107 N. C. 156, 12 S. E. 43; Leonard v. Reservoir Co., 113 Mass. 235; Spencer v. Curtis, 57 Ind. 221; Ford v. Burleigh, 60 N. H. 278; Evars v. Kamphaus, 59 Pa. 379. It transfers property as much as the verdict of a jury, and will prevent the operation of the statute of limitations; 3 Bla. Com. 16; Hunt's Lessee v. Guilford, 4 Ohio 310; Jackson v. Gager, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 383; Davis v. Havard, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 166, 16 Am. Dec. 537. See Gray v. Reed, 65 Vt. 178, 26 Atl. 526. A parol award following a parol submission will have the same effect as an agreement of the same form directly between the parties; Houghton v. Houghton, 37 Me. 72; Wells v. Lain, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 99; Goodell v. Raymond, 27 Vt. 241; Smith v. Douglass, 16 Ill. 34; Smith v. Stewart, 5 Ind. 220; Martin v. Chapman, 1 Ala. 278; 2 Cox 369; Davy v. Faw, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 171, 3 L. Ed. 305.

The right of real property cannot thus pass by mere award; but no doubt an arbitrator may award a conveyance or release of land and require deeds, and it will be a breach of agreement and arbitration bond to refuse compliance; and a court of equity will sometimes enforce this specifically; 3 East 15; Jones v. Mill Corp., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 148; Calhoun's Lessee v. Dunning, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 120, 1 L. Ed. 767; Akely v. Akely, 16 Vt. 450; Smith v. Bullock, id. 592; Sellick v. Addams, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 197; Gratz v. Gratz, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 411, 430; Shelton v. Alcox, 11 Conn. 240; McNear v. Bailey, 18 Me. 251; Jesse v. Cater, 28 Ala. 475; Murray v. Blackledge, 71 N. C. 492; Girdler v. Carter, 47 N. H. 305. Where there is a controversy as to the claims embraced within a mortgage, and the award merely fixes the amount due, it does not vest the legal title to the mortgaged property in the mortgagor; Collier v. White, 97 Ala. 615, 12 South. 385.

Arbitrament and award may be regularly pleaded at common law or equity to an action concerning the same subject-matter, and will bar the action; Brazill v. Isham, 12 N. Y. 9; Crooker v. Buck, 41 Me. 355. To an action on the award at common law, in general, nothing can be pleaded dehors the award; not even fraud; Owen v. Boerum, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 187; Shepherd v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 81; Woodrow v. O'Conner, id. 776; contra, Strong v. Strong, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 560. Where an action has been referred under rule of court and the reference fails, the action proceeds.

Enforcement of. An award may be enforced by an action at law, which is the only remedy for disobedience when the submission is not made a rule of court, and no statute provides a special mode of enforcement; 5 B. & Ald. 507; 4 B. & C. 103; 3 C. B. 745. Assumpsit lies when the submission is not under seal; Piersons v. Hobbes, 33 N. H. 27; and debt on an award of money and on an arbitration bond; Nolte v. Lowe, 18 Ill. 437; covenant where the submission is by deed for breach of any part of the award, and case for the non-performance of the duty awarded. Equity will enforce specific performance when all remedy fails at common law; Com. Dig. Chancery. 2 K; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1458; 2 Hare 198; Bouck v. Wilber, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 405; Ballance v. Underhill, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 453; 3 P. Wms. 137. But see 1 T. & R. 187; 5 Ves. 846. An award must be sued upon only because the arbitrator is not vested with power to enforce his decrees by execution, which is the end of the law; Collins v. Oliver, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 439.

An award under a rule of court may be enforced by the court issuing execution upon it as if it were a verdict of a jury, or by attachment for contempt; 7 East 607. By the various state statutes regulating arbitrations, awards, where submission is made before a magistrate, may be enforced and judgment rendered thereon.

Amendment and setting aside. A court has no power to alter or amend an award; Jackson v. Todd, 25 N. J. L. 130; Jarvis v.

Water Co., 5 Cal. 179; Brazill v. Isham, 12 N. Y. 9; Crooker v. Buck, 41 Me. 355; Smith v. Kron, 109 N. C. 103, 13 S. E. 839; but may recommit to the referee in some cases; Swift v. Faris, 11 Tex. 18; 18 Can. S. C. R. 338. The court has no general supervisory power over an award and, if arbitrators keep within their jurisdiction, it will not be set aside for error of judgment either of law or facts, but it may for palpable error of fact or miscalculation of figures or of law when it appears on its face; Fudickar v. Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 392.

"An arbitration partakes of judicial proceedings," and the award is regarded with great respect by the courts as the decision of persons chosen by the parties to settle their differences; but it can hardly be considered of equal dignity with the judgment of a court, which speaks by force and power of the law; while an award speaks by consent and contract of the parties; Shively v. Knoblock, 8 Ind. App. 433, 35 N. E. 1028. A court will not revise an award for mere errors of judgment; Offut v. Proctor, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 252; Vaughn v. Graham, 11 Mo. 576; Chesley v. Chesley, 10 N. H. 327; and misconduct or misbehavior of arbitrators in a statutory arbitration must be to do an intentional wrong; Smith v. Cutler, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 589, 25 Am. Dec. 580; Vaughn v. Graham, 11 Mo. 576.

It is not essential to an arbitration that it should adjust all matters in controversy; an award determining a single one of several may be conclusive so far; Pearce v. McIntyre, 29 Mo. 423.

An award will not be disturbed except for very cogent reasons. It will be set aside for misconduct, corruption, or irregularity of the arbitrator, which has or may have injured one of the parties; 5 B. & Ad. 488; Jenkins v. Liston, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 535; Payne v. Metz, 14 Tex. 56; Walls v. Wilson, 28 Pa. 514; Cutting v. Carter, 29 Vt. 72; it will not be set aside because one of the arbitrators was a relative; McGregor v. Sprott, 59 Hun 617, 13 N. Y. Supp. 191; so where one, after publishing his award, admits that it had been improperly obtained from him; [1891] 1 Ch. 558; it will be set aside for error in fact, or in attempting to follow the law, apparent on the face of the award; see supra; ARBITRATOR; for uncertainty or inconsistency; for an exceeding of his authority by the arbitrator; Shearer v. Handy, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 417; Stewart v. Ahrenfeldt, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 191; where it is made solely at the direction of one of the parties and not upon the arbitrator's own judgment; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Mercantile Co., 44 Fed. 151, 11 L. R. A. 623; when it is not final and conclusive, without reserve; when it is a nullity; when a party or witness has been at fault, or has made a mistake; or when the arbitrator acknowledges that he has made a mistake or error in his decision.

Where arbitrators have once made an award they are functus officio and cannot afterwards make a second award, though the first was void because of defects; Flannery v. Sahagian, 134 N. Y. 85, 31 N. E. 319; Herbst v. Hagenauers, 137 N. Y. 290, 33 N. E. 315.

Equity has jurisdiction to set aside an award, on any of the enumerated grounds, when the submission cannot be made a rule of a common-law court. As to the circumstances under which awards may be examined in equity, see 1 Raithby's Vernon 158, note (1), where many English cases are collected.

In general, in awards under statutory provisions, as well as in those under rules of court, questions of law may be reserved for the opinion of the court, and facts and evidence reported for their opinion and decision.

ARBITRIUM (Lat.). Decision; award; judgment.

For some cases the law does not prescribe an exact rule, but leaves them to the judgment of sound men; or in the language of Grotius, lex non exacte definit, sed arbitrio boni viri permittit; 1 Bla. Com. 61. The decision of an arbiter is arbitrium, as the etymology indicates; and the word denotes, in the passage cited, the decision of a man of good judgment who is not controlled by technical rules of law, but is at liberty to adapt the general principles of justice to the peculiar circumstances of the case.

ARBOR (Lat.). A tree; a plant; something larger than an herb; a general term including vines, osiers, and even reeds. The mast of a ship. Brissonius. Timber. Ainsworth; Calvinus, Lex.

Arbor civilis. A genealogical tree. Coke, Inst.

A common form of showing genealogies is by means of a tree representing the different branches of the family. Many of the terms in the law of descent are figurative, and derived hence. Such a tree is called, also, arbor consanguinitatis.

ARCARIUS (Lat. arca). A treasurer; one who keeps the public money. Spelman, Gloss.

ARCHAIONOMIA. The name of a collection of Saxon laws published during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in the Saxon language, with a Latin version by Lambard. Dr. Wilkins enlarged this collection in his work entitled Leges Anglo-Saxonicae, containing all the Saxon laws extant, together with those ascribed to Edward the Confessor, in Latin; those of William the Conqueror, in Norman and Latin, and of Henry I., Stephen, and Henry II., in Latin.

ARCHBISHOP. The chief of the clergy of a whole province.

He has the inspection of the bishops of that province, as well as of the inferior clergy, and may deprive them on notorious cause. The archbishop has also his own diocese, in which he exercises episcopal jurisdiction, as in his province he exercises archiepiscopal authority; 1 Bla. Com. 380; 1 Ld. Raym. 641. In England he is addressed as Most Reverend.

ARCHDEACON. A ministerial officer subordinate to the bishop.

In the primitive church, the archdeacons were employed by the bishop in the more servile duties of collecting and distributing alms and offerings. Afterwards they became, in effect, "eyes to the overseers of the Church;" Cowell.

His jurisdiction is ecclesiastical, and immediately subordinate to that of the bishop throughout the whole or a part of the diocese. He is a ministerial officer; 1 Bla. Com. 383. He is addressed as Venerable.

ARCHDEACON'S COURT. The lowest court of ecclesiastical jurisdiction in England. Originally the archdeacon held a court as deputy of the bishop. Early in the 12th century the archdeacons possessed themselves of a customary jurisdiction. An appeal lay to the Consistory Court. Rept. Eccl. Com. (1883) 25.

ARCHES COURT. See COURT OF ARCHES.

ARCHIVES. The Rolls; any place where ancient records, charters, and evidences are kept. In libraries, the private depository. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

The records need not be ancient to constitute the place of keeping them the Archives.

ARCHIVIST. One to whose care the archives have been confided.

ARCTA ET SALVA CUSTODIA (Lat.). In safe and close custody or keeping.

When a defendant is arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum (ca. sa.), he is to be kept in arcta et salva custodia; 3 Bla. Com. 416.

AREA. An enclosed yard or opening in a house; an open place adjoining to a house. 1 Chit. Pr. 176.

ARENTARE (Lat.). To rent; to let out at a certain rent. Cowell.

Arentatio. A renting.

ARGENTARII (Lat. argentum). Money-lenders.

Called, also, nummularii (from nummus, coin) mensarii (lenders by the month). They were so called whether living in Rome or in the country towns, and had their shops or tables in the forum. Argentarius is the singular. Argentarium denotes the instrument of the loan, approaching in sense to our note or bond.

Argentarius miles was the porter who carried the money from the lower to the upper treasury to be tested. Spelman, Gloss.

ARGENTUM ALBUM (Lat.). Unstamped silver; bullion. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

ARGENTUM DEI (Lat.). God's money; God's penny; money given as earnest in making a bargain. Cowell.

ARGUMENT. An effort to establish belief by a course of reasoning.

See 33 Amer. L. Rev. 476; State v. Burns, 119 Iowa, 663, 94 N. W. 239; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 132 N. C. 25, 43 S. E. 506.

ARGUMENTATIVE. By way of reasoning.

A plea must be (among other things) direct and positive, and not argumentative; 3 Bla. Com. 308; Steph. Pl. Andrew's ed. § 201.

ARGUMENTUM AB INCONVENIENTI.

An argument arising from the inconvenience which the opposite construction of the law would create.

It is to have effect only in a case where the law is doubtful: where the law is certain, such an argument is of no force. Bacon, Abr. Baron and feme H.

ARIBANNUM. A fine for not setting out to join the army in obedience to the summons of the king.

ARIMANNI (Lat.). The possessors of lands holden or derived from their lords. Clients joined to some lord for protection. By some, said to be soldiers holding lands from a lord; but the term is also applied to women and slaves. Spelman, Gloss.

ARISE. To come into existence or action. A case arising in the land or naval forces is a case proceeding, issuing or springing from acts, in violation of the laws and regulations, committed while in the forces or service. In re Bogart, 2 Sawy. 396, Fed. Cas. No. 1,596.

ARISTOCRACY. A government in which a class of men rules supreme.

Aristotle classified governments according to the person or persons in whom the supreme power is vested: in monarchies or kingdoms, in which one rules supreme; in aristocracies, in which a class of men rules supreme; and in democracies, in which the people at large, the multitude, rule. The term aristocracy is derived from the Greek word ἀριστος, which, although finally treated as the superlative of ἀγαθός, good, originally meant the strongest, the most powerful; and in the compound term aristocracy it meant those who wielded the greatest power and had the greatest influence,—the privileged ones. The aristocracies in ancient Greece were, in many cases, governments arrogated by violence. If the number of ruling aristocrats was very small, the government was called an oligarchy. Aristotle says that in democracies the "demagogues lead the people to place themselves above the laws, and divide the people, by constantly speaking against the rich; and in oligarchies the rulers always speak in the interest of the rich. At present," he says, "the rulers, in some oligarchies, take an oath, 'And I will be hostile to the people, and advise, as much as is in my power, what may be injurious to them.'" (Politics, v. ch. 9.) There are circumstances which may make an aristocracy unavoidable; but it has always this inherent deficiency, that the body of aristocrats, being set apart from the people indeed, yet not sufficiently so, as the monarch is (who, besides, being but one, must needs rely on the classes beneath him), shows itself severe and harsh so soon as the people become a substantial portion of the community. The struggle between the aristocratic and the democratic element is a prominent feature of the middle ages; and at a later period it is equally remarkable that the crown, in almost every country of the European continent, waged war, generally with the assistance of the commonalty, with the privileged class, or aristocracy. The real aristocracy is that type of government which has nearly entirely vanished from our cis-Caucasian race; although the aristocratic element is found, like the democratic element, in various degrees, in most of the existing governments. The term aristocracy is at present frequently used for the body of privileged persons in the government of any institution,—for instance, in the church. In the first French Revolution, Aristocrat came to mean any person not belonging to the levellers, and whom the latter desired to pull down. The modern French communists use the slang term Aristo for aristocrat. The most complete and consistently developed aristocracy in history was the Republic of Venice.—a government considered by many early publicists as a model: it illustrated, however, in an eminent degree, the fear and consequent severity inherent in aristocracies. See GOVERNMENT; ABSOLUTISM; MONARCHY.

ARISTO-DEMOCRACY. A form of government where the power is divided between the more powerful men of the nation and the people.

ARIZONA. One of the states of the American Union.

This region was first visited by the Spanish in 1526, and was afterwards explored under the direction of the viceroy of Mexico in 1540; nothing was done, however, towards settling the country until the year 1580, when a military post was established by the Spanish on the site of the present city of Tucson. Under the untiring efforts of the Jesuits, an unbroken line of settlements sprung up from Tucson to the Sonora line, the northern boundary of Mexico, a distance of about one hundred miles; but owing to the frequent attacks of the Indians, and the Mexican revolution of 1821, these settlements were abandoned. The first United States settlers were persons on their way to California in 1849. The United States acquired, by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, Feb. 2, 1848, a large extent of country from Mexico, including California and the adjacent territories, and by the Gadsden purchase, Dec. 30, 1853, another large tract south of the former. Until 1863, the territory of New Mexico included Arizona and also about 12,225 acres, which were detached and included in Nevada. Arizona was organized as a separate territory by the act of congress of Feb. 24, 1863, U. S. Stat. at Large, 664. By this act, the territory embraced "all that part of the territory of New Mexico situated west of a line running due south, from the point where the southwest corner of the territory of Colorado joins the northern boundary of the territory of New Mexico, to the southern boundary of the territory of New Mexico." The frame of government was substantially the same as that of New Mexico, and the laws of New Mexico were substantially extended to Arizona.

The Enabling Act for its admission to the Union was passed by Congress June 20, 1910. On August 21, 1911, the joint resolution of Congress for its admission was passed, to take effect upon Proclamation by the President that certain conditions had been complied with. The Proclamation was made February 14, 1912. Arizona became a state and adopted the constitution proposed for it by the constitutional convention held in the fall of 1910. The constitution was amended in 1912 by providing for the recall of public officers and granting to each municipal corporation within the state the right to engage in industrial pursuits, and providing for woman suffrage.

ARKANSAS. One of the United States of America; being the twelfth admitted to the Union.

It was formed of a part of the Louisiana Territory, purchased of France by the United States, by treaty of April 30, 1803, and from that time until 1812 it formed part of the Louisiana Territory; from 1812 to 1819 it was part of the Missouri Territory. By act of congress of March 2, 1819, a separate territorial government was established for Arkansas; 3 Stat. L. 493. It was admitted to the Union by act of congress of June, 1836, and the first constitution of the state was adopted on the 30th January, 1836. Section 16, article 5, amended February 10, 1913, which provides for a sixty day session of Legislature; section 1, article 5, amended, providing for the initiative and referendum, February 19, 1909.

ARLES. Earnest.

Used in Yorkshire in the phrase Arles-penny. Cowell. In Scotland it has the same signification. Bell, Dict. See EARNEST.

ARM OF THE SEA. A portion of the sea projecting inland, in which the tide ebbs and flows.

It includes bays, roads, creeks, coves, ports, and rivers where the water flows and reflows. An arm of the sea is considered as extending as far into the interior of a country as the water of fresh rivers is propelled backward by the tide; Ang. Tide Wat. (2d ed.) 73; Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324, 8 L. Ed. 700; 2 Dougl. 441; 6 Cl. & F. 628; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Cart, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597; Olc. Adm. 18. Arms of the sea, so closely embraced by land that a man standing on one shore can reasonably discern with the naked eye objects and what is done on the opposite shore, are within county limits; Bish. Cr. L. § 146; 2 East, P. C. 805; Russ. & R. 243. Lord Coke said (Owen 122) that the admiral has no jurisdiction when a man may see from one side to another. This was followed by Cockburn, C. J., in L. R. 2 Ex. 164, 168. See CREEK; NAVIGABLE WATERS; RIVER; SEA; FAUCES TERREÆ; TERRITORIAL WATERS; ADMIRALTY.

ARMED. Furnished with weapons of offence or defence; furnished with the means of security or protection. Webster's Dict.

The fact that there was on board a vessel but one musket, a few ounces of powder, and a few balls, would not make her an armed vessel; Murray v. The Charming Betty, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 121, 2 L. Ed. 208.

ARMED NEUTRALITY. An attitude of neutrality between belligerents which the neutral state is prepared to maintain by armed force if necessary.

ARMED PEACE. A situation in which two or more nations, while actually at peace with each other, are armed for possible or probable hostilities.

ARMIGER (Lat.). An armor-bearer; an esquire. A title of dignity belonging to gentlemen authorized to bear arms. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq.; Cowell.

In its earlier meaning, a servant who carried the arms of a knight. Spelman, Gloss.

A tenant by scutage; a servant or valet; applied, also to the higher servants in convents. Spelman, Gloss; Wishaw.

ARMISTICE. An agreement between belligerent forces for a temporary cessation of hostilities. The condition of war between the parties continues in all other respects and produces its usual legal effects.

An armistice differs from a mere "suspension of arms" (q. v.) in that the latter is concluded for very brief periods and for local military purposes only, whereas an armistice not only covers a longer period, but is agreed upon for political purposes. It is said to be general if it relates to the whole area of the war, and partial if it relates to only a portion of that area. Partial armistices are sometimes called truces (q. v.) but there is no hard and fast distinction between armistices and truces. Arts. 36-41 of IV Hague Conf. 1907 lay down certain international rules on the subject of armistices, their duration, their general or local character, the necessary notification, and the consequences of a violation of the armistice. As these rules do not cover the whole field, they need to be supplemented by customary law. 2 Opp. 290-299.

ARMS. Anything that a man wears for his defence, or takes in his hands, or uses in his anger, to cast at or strike at another. Co. Litt. 161b, 162a; Crompt. Just. P. 65; Cunning, Dict.

The constitution of the United States, Amend. art. 2, declares that, "a well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." This is said to be not a right granted by the constitution, and not dependent upon that instrument for its existence. The amendment means no more than that this right shall not be infringed by congress; it restricts the powers of the national government, leaving all matters of police regulations, for the protection of the people, to the states; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 553, 23 L. Ed. 588.

An act forbidding the carrying of pistols, dirks, etc., is not repugnant to this article; the "arms" referred to are the arms of a soldier, etc.; English v. State, 35 Tex. 473, 14 Am. Rep. 374. A statute prohibiting the wearing of concealed deadly weapons is constitutional; Wright v. Com., 77 Pa. 470; Andrews v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 165, 8 Am. Rep. 8; Hill v. State, 53 Ga. 472; Fife v. State, 31 Ark. 455, 25 Am. Rep. 556; Walls v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 572; Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 387; contra, Bliss v. Com., 2 Litt. (Ky.) 90, 13 Am. Dec. 251. See Story, Const. 5th ed. § 1895; Rawle, Const. 125.

A provision in a state bill of rights that "the people have a right to bear arms for their defense and security" is a limitation on legislative power to enact laws prohibiting the bearing of arms in the militia, or any other military organization provided for by law, but it is not a limitation on legislative power to prohibit and punish the promiscuous carrying of arms or other deadly weapons; City of Salina v. Blaksley, 72 Kan. 230, 83 Pac. 619, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168, 115 Am. St. Rep. 196. This right is not violated by a statute prohibiting unauthorized bodies of men to associate together as a military organization, or to drill and parade with arms in cities and towns; Com. v. Murphy, 166 Mass. 171, 44 N. E. 138, 32 L. R. A. 606.

One who carries a pistol concealed in a satchel supported and carried by a strap over his shoulder, is guilty of carrying a concealed weapon about his person, although the satchel is locked and the key is in his pocket; Warren v. State, 94 Ala. 79, 10 South. 838; Boles v. State, 86 Ga. 255, 12 S. E. 361. The fact that one carries a concealed weapon for the purpose of selling it does not excuse his act; State v. Dixon, 114 N. C. 850, 19 S. E. 364; nor does the fact that he has repaired it and is returning it in his pocket; Strahan v. State, 68 Miss. 347, 8 South. 844; contra, State v. Roberts, 39 Mo. App. 47. The carrying of a pistol in the pocket for target practice does not constitute the offence of carrying a concealed weapon; State v. Murray, 39 Mo. App. 127. See DANGEROUS WEAPON; WEAPON.

Signs of arms, or drawings, painted on shields, banners, and the like. Heraldic bearings.

The arms of the United States are described in the resolution of congress of June 20, 1782.

ARMY. A large force of armed men designed and organized for military service on land.

The term "army" or "armies" has never been used by congress to include the navy or marines; In re Bailey, 2 Sawy. 205, Fed. Cas. No. 728.

See ARTICLES OF WAR; MILITARY LAW; MARTIAL LAW; COURTS-MARTIAL; RANK; REGULATIONS.

ARPENNUS. A measure of land of uncertain amount. It was called arpent also. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

In French Law. A measure of different amount in each of the sixty-four provinces. Guyot, Répert. Arpenteur.

The measure was adopted in Louisiana; Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 763, 8 L. Ed. 573.

ARPENT. A quantity of land containing a French acre. 4 Hall, L. J. 518.

ARPENTATOR. A measurer or surveyor of land.

ARRA. See ARRHÆ.

ARRAIGN. To call a prisoner to the bar of the court to answer the matter charged in the indictment. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 216. To set in order. An assize may be arraigned. Littleton, § 242; 3 Mod. 273; Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

ARRAIGNMENT. Calling the defendant to the bar of the court, to answer the accusation contained in the indictment.

The first step in the proceeding consists in calling the defendant to the bar by his name, and commanding him to hold up his hand.

This is done for the purpose of completely identifying the prisoner as the person named in the indictment. The holding up his hand is not, however, indispensable; for if the prisoner should refuse to do so, he may be identified by any admission that he is the person intended; 1 W. Bla. 33. See Archb. Cr. Pl. 128.

The second step is the reading the indictment to the accused person.

This is done to enable him fully to understand the charge to be produced against him. The mode in which it is read is, after saying, "A B, hold up your hand," to proceed, "you stand indicted by the name of A B, late of, etc., for that you, on, etc.," and then go through the whole of the indictment.

The third step is to ask the prisoner, "How say you (A B), are you guilty, or not guilty?"

Upon this, if the prisoner confesses the charge, and it appears to the satisfaction of the judge that he rightly comprehends the effect of his plea, the confession is recorded, and nothing further is done till judgment. If, on the contrary, he answers, "Not guilty," that plea is entered for him, and the clerk or attorney-general replies that he is guilty; when an issue is formed; Com. v. Battis, 1 Mass. 95; see 4 Bla. Com. c. xxv. The holding up of the hand is no longer obligatory in England, though still maintained in some of the United States with the qualification that if the defendant refuses to hold up his hand, but confesses that he is the person named, it is enough; Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. (9th ed.) § 699. In cases where arraignment of the defendant is required, a failure to arraign is fatal; Graeter v. State, 54 Ind. 159; Grigg v. People, 31 Mich. 471; Anderson v. State, 3 Pinn. (Wis.) 367; Smith v. State, 1 Tex. App. 408; People v. Gaines, 52 Cal. 480. See, contra, State v. Cassidy, 12 Kan. 350. In cases of a mistrial (Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 35), or removal to another court (Davis v. State, 39 Md. 355), there need not be a fresh arraignment.

If the defendant, when called upon, makes no answer, and it is a matter of doubt whether or not he is mute of malice, the court may direct a jury to be forthwith impanelled and sworn, to try whether the prisoner is mute of malice or ex visitatione Dei; and such jury may consist of any twelve men who may happen to be present. If a person is found to be mute ex visitatione Dei, the court in its discretion will use such means as may be sufficient to enable the defendant to understand the charge and make his answer; and if this is found impracticable, a plea of not guilty will be entered, and the trial proceed. But if the jury return a verdict that he is mute fraudulently and willfully, the court will pass sentence as upon a conviction; Ellenwood v. Com., 10 Metc. (Mass.) 222; Archb. Cr. Pl. 129; 3 C. & K. 121; Rosc. Cr. Ev. (8th ed.) 199. See the case of a deaf person who could not be induced to plead; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 451; of a person deaf and dumb; id. 102; Com. v. Hill, 14 Mass. 207; 7 C. & P. 503; 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 386; 3 C. & K. 328; State v. Draper, 1 Houst. Del. Cr. Cas. 291. See DEAF AND DUMB; GUILTY; GOD AND MY COUNTRY; MUTE; PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

ARRAMEUR. An ancient officer of a port, whose business was to load and unload vessels.

There were formerly, in several ports of Guyenne, certain officers, called arrameurs, or stowers, who were master-carpenters and were paid by the merchants, who loaded the ship. Their business was to dispose properly, and stow closely, all goods in casks, bales, boxes, bundles, or otherwise; to balance both sides, to fill up the vacant spaces, and arrange everything to the best advantage. It was not but that the greatest part of the ship's crew understood this as well as these stowers, but they would not meddle with it, nor undertake it, to avoid falling under the merchant's displeasure, or being accountable for any ill accident that might happen by that means. There were also sacquiens, who were very ancient officers, as may be seen in the Theodosian code, Unica de Scaccariis Portus Romæ, lib. 14. Their business was to load and unload vessels loaded with salt, corn, or fish, to prevent the ship's crew defrauding the merchant by false tale, or cheating him of his merchandise otherwise; Laws of Oleron, in 1 Pet. Adm. App. xxv. See STEVEDORE.

ARRANGEMENT. The natural meaning of the word is "setting in order." 1 El. & Bl. 540.

ARRANGEMENT, DEED OF. A term used in England to express an assignment for the benefit of creditors.

ARRAS. In Spanish Law. The donation which the husband makes to his wife, by reason or on account of marriage, and in consideration of the dote, or portion, which he receives from her. Aso & Man. Inst. b. 1, t. 7, c. 3.

The property contributed by the husband ad sustinenda onera matrimonii (for bearing the expenses).

The husband is under no obligation to give arras; but it is a donation purely voluntary. He is not permitted to give in arras more than a tenth of his property. The arras is the exclusive property of the wife, subject to the husband's usufruct during his life; Burge, Conf. Laws 417.

ARRAY. The whole body of jurors summoned to attend a court, as they are arrayed or arranged on the panel. See CHALLENGES; Dane, Abr. Index; 1 Chit. Cr. Law 536; Comyns, Dig. Challenge, B.

ARRAYER. An English military officer in the early part of the fifteenth century. His duties were similar to those of the modern Lord Lieutenant of a county.

ARREARAGES. Arrears.

ARREARS. The remainder of an account or sum of money in the hands of an accountant. Any money due and unpaid at a given time. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

"In arrear" means overdue and unpaid. Hollingsworth v. Willis, 64 Miss. 157, 8 South. 170.

ARREST. To deprive a person of his liberty by legal authority.

The taking, seizing or detaining the person of another, touching or putting hands upon him in the execution of process, or any act indicating an intention to arrest. U. S. v. Benner, Bald. 234, 239, Fed. Cas. No. 14,568.

"A restraint of the person, a restriction of the right of locomotion which cannot be implied in the mere notification, or summons on petition, or any other service of such process, by which no bail is required nor restraint of personal liberty." Hart v. Flynn's Ex'r, 8 Dana (Ky.) 190. "An arrest is an imprisonment." Blight v. Meeker, 7 N. J. L. 97. The term implies restraint of liberty by an officer of the law, but touching the person is not necessary unless required to acquire control of the person of the one arrested. State v. Buxton, 102 N. C. 129, 8 S. E. 774; McAleer v. Good, 216 Pa. 473, 65 Atl. 934, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303, 116 Am. St. Rep. 782; Butler v. Washburn, 25 N. H. 251; Bissell v. Gold, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 210, 19 Am. Dec. 480; 5 U. C. Q. B. 341; Strout v. Gooch, 8 Me. 126; 4 C. B. N. S. 180, 205, where the subject is examined by Willes, J., who expressly dissents from Sir James.

Mansfield in 2 B. & P. N. R. 211, the authority usually relied upon contra. What is actually required is more tersely expressed in Lawson v. Buzines, 3 Harr. (Del.) 416, when he says that the officer "must make him his prisoner in an unequivocal form."

As ordinarily used, the terms arrest and attachment coincide in meaning to some extent; though in strictness, as a distinction, an arrest may be said to be the act resulting from the service of an attachment. And in the more extended sense which is sometimes given to attachment, including the act of taking, it would seem to differ from arrest in that it is more peculiarly applicable to a taking of property, while arrest is more commonly used in speaking of persons.

The terms are, however, often interchanged when speaking of the taking of a man by virtue of legal authority. Arrest is also applied in some instances to a seizure and detention of personal chattels, especially of ships and vessels; but this use of the term is not common in modern law.

In Civil Practice. The apprehension of a person by virtue of a lawful authority to answer the demand against him in a civil action. Gentry v. Griffith, 27 Tex. 462.

One of the means which the law gives the creditor to secure the person of his debtor while the suit is pending, or to compel him to give security for his appearance after judgment. La. Civ. Code art. 211.

Acts which amount to a taking into custody are necessary to constitute an arrest; but there need be no actual force or manual touching the body: it is enough if the party be within the power of the officer and submit to the arrest; Cas. temp. Hardw. 301; 5 B. & P. 211; Huntington v. Blaisdell, 2 N. H. 318; Hart v. Flynn's Ex'r, 8 Dana (Ky.) 190; Strout v. Gooch, 8 Me. 127; Bissel v. Gold, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 215, 19 Am. Dec. 480; Field v. Ireland, 21 Ala. 240; Courtoy v. Dozier, 20 Ga. 369; Cooper v. Adams, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 294; but mere words without submission are not sufficient; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 129; Jones v. Jones, 35 N. C. 448; State v. Buxton, 102 N. C. 129, 8 S. E. 774.

Whom to be made by. It must be made by an officer having proper authority. This is, in the United States, the sheriff, or one of his deputies, general or special, or by a mere assistant of the officer, if he be so near as to be considered as acting, though he do not actually make the arrest; Cowp. 65.

The process of the United States courts is executed by a marshal. As to the power of the sergeant-at-arms of a legislative body to arrest for contempt or other cause, see 1 Kent 236. An order of the United States House of Representatives declaring a witness before one of its committees in contempt for not answering certain questions, and ordering his arrest and imprisonment is void and affords no defence to the sergeant-at-arms in an action for false imprisonment against him; Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. Ed. 377, where there is a full review of the cases.

Who is liable to. All persons found within the jurisdiction are liable to arrest, excepting certain specified classes, including ambassadors and their servants; 1 B. & C. 554; 3 D. & R. 25, 833; Holbrook, Nelson & Co. v. Henderson, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 619; attorneys at law; barristers attending court or on circuit; 1 H. Bla. 636; see Elam v. Lewis, 19 Ga. 608; 8 Sim. 377; 16 Ves. 412; Secor v. Bell, 18 Johns. Chamberlain*, 3 Conn. 537; executors sued on the testator's liability; heirs sued as such; hundredors sued as such; insolvent debtors lawfully discharged; 3 Maule & S. 595; and see 4 Taunt. 631; Duncan v. Klinefelter, 5 Watts (Pa.) 141, 30 Am. Dec. 295; Wilmarth v. Burt, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 257; not when sued on subsequent liabilities or promises, 6 Taunt. 563; see Glazier v. Stafford, 4 Harr. L. 97; and perhaps other classes, under local statutes; married women, on suits arising from contracts; 1 Term 486; 6 id. 451; 7 Taunt. 55; but the privilege may be forfeited by her conduct; 1 B. & P. 8; 5 id. 380; and the grounds of these early decisions are necessarily affected by the modern statutes permitting married women to contract and sue and be sued as if sole, but although the Pennsylvania act of 1887 in section 2 authorizes her so to be sued on her contract and for all torts, it has been held that a married woman is notwithstanding that section privileged from arrest under a capias; Lorenz v. Betz, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 274. Reference must be had in many of the above cases to statutes for modifications of the privilege. In all cases where the privilege attaches in consideration of an attendance at a specified place in a certain character, it includes the stay and a reasonable time for going and returning; 2 W. Bla. 1113; Smythe v. Banks, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 329, 1 L. Ed. 854; Lewis v. Elmendorf, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 222; Crocker v. Duncan, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 278; In re Dickenson, 3 Harr. (Del.) 517; but not including delays in the way; 3 B. & Ald. 252; Smythe v. Banks, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 329, 1 L. Ed. 854; or deviations; Chaffee v. Jones, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 260. A person brought from one state into another under federal process in an extradition proceeding, and discharged therefrom, cannot be arrested under civil process until he has reasonable time to return to the state from which he came; In re Baruch, 41 Fed. 472.

Where and when it may be made. An arrest may be made in any place, except in the actual or constructive presence of a court, where the defendant is necessarily in attendance on business, the privilege extending to going thereto and returning; 3 Bla. Com. 289; but this privilege does not avail one brought into court on criminal process and discharged on bail; Moore v. Green, 73 N. C. 394, 21 Am. Rep. 470. An officer may not break open an outer door to arrest one whose domicile is there; Oystead v. Shed, 13 Mass. 520, 7 Am. Dec. 172; Gordon v. Clifford, 28 N. H. 402; aliter, under statute; Hawkins v. Com., 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 395, 61 Am. Dec. 147; Phillips v. Ronald, 3 Bush (Ky.) 244, 96 Am. Dec. 216; but he may break inner doors to find the defendant when the outer door is open; Williams v. Spencer, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 352; 8 Taunt. 250; Cowp. 1; and this includes the door of the room of a lodger; id.; but not the inner door of the house of a stranger upon suspicion that the defendant is there; 6 Taunt. 246. He may break the outer door of the house of defendant, who has escaped after arrest and taken refuge there; Allen v. Martin, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 300, 25 Am. Dec. 564. It could not be made on Sunday or any public holiday; Stat. 29 Car. II. c. 7; contra (under a statute), King v. Strain, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 417.

An officer with a proper writ may stop a train to arrest the railroad engineer running it; 20 Ohio L. J. 464; St. Johnsbury & L. C. R. Co. v. Hunt, 60 Vt. 588, 15 Atl. 186, 1 L. R. A. 189, 6 Am. Rep. 138.

Discharge from arrest on mesne process may be obtained by giving sufficient bail, which the officer is bound to take; 3 Maule & S. 283; 6 Term 355; 15 East 320; but when the arrest is on final process, giving bail does not authorize a discharge.

If the defendant otherwise withdraw himself from arrest, or if the officer discharge him, without authority, it is an escape; and the sheriff is liable to the plaintiff. See ESCAPE. If the party is withdrawn forcibly from the custody of the officer by third persons, it is a rescue. See RESCUE.

Extended facilities are offered to poor debtors to obtain a discharge under the statutes of most if not all of the states of the United States. In consequence, except in cases of apprehended fraud, as in the concealment of property or an intention to abscond, arrests are infrequently made. See, as to excepted cases, Armstrong v. Ayres, 19 Conn. 540; Bramhall v. Seavey, 28 Me. 45.

Generally. An unauthorized arrest, as under process materially irregular or informal; Russell v. Hubbard, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 654; Welch v. Scott, 27 N. C. 72; Somervell v. Hunt, 3 H. & McH. No. 5-764; is void; but if the failure of jurisdiction be as to person, place, or process, it must appear on the warrant, to have this effect; Bull. N. P. 83; Savacool v. Boughton, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 175, 21 Am. Dec. 181; Churchill v. Churchill, 12 Vt. 661; Barnes v. Barber, 1 Gilman (Ill.) 401; Miller v. Grice, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 147; Reed v. Rice, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 44, 19 Am. S. 86; 1 M. & G. 775; Melvin v. Fisher, 8 N. H. 406; Scott v. Ely, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 555; Gurnsey v. Lovell, 9 id. 319; renders the officer liable for a trespass to the party arrested. See 1 Bennett & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 180-184.

In Criminal Cases. The apprehending or detaining of the person in order to be forthcoming to answer an alleged or suspected crime. Quoted and adopted, as is also the distinction which follows, in County of Montgomery v. Robinson, 85 Ill. 174; Hogan v. Stophlet, 179 Ill. 150, 53 N. E. 604, 44 L. R. A. 809; Ex parte Sherwood, 29 Tex. App. 334, 15 S. W. 812.

The word arrest is said to be more properly used in civil cases, and apprehension in criminal. Thus, a man is arrested under a capias ad respondendum, and apprehended under a warrant charging him with larceny.

Who may make. The person to whom the warrant is addressed is the proper person in case a warrant has been issued, whether he be described by name; Salk. 176; Frost v. Thomas, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 418; State v. Kirby, 24 N. C. 201; or by his office; 1 B. & C. 288; Russell v. Hubbard, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 654. But, if the authority of the warrant is insufficient, he may be liable as a trespasser. See supra. A known officer need not show a warrant in making an arrest, but a special officer must if demanded; State v. Dula, 100 N. C. 423, 6 S. E. 89.

Any peace officer, as a justice of the peace; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 86; sheriff; 1 Saund. 77; 1 Taunt. 46; coroner; 4 Bla. Com. 292; constable; 32 Eng. L. & Eq. 783; Danovan v. Jones, 36 N. H. 246; or watchman; 3 Taunt. 14; 3 Campb. 420; may without a warrant arrest any person committing a felony in his presence; Wakely v. Hart, 6 Binn. (Pa.)

318; 3 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 164; Shanley v. Wells, 71 Ill. 78; State v. Underwood, 75 Mo. 231; Boyd v. State, 17 Ga. 194; or committing a breach of the peace, during its continuance or immediately afterwards; 1 C. & P. 40; Taylor v. Strong, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 384; Knot v. Gay, 1 Root (Conn.) 66; City Council v. Payne, 2 Nott. & M'C. (S. C.) 475; U. S. v. Hart, Pet. C. C. 390, Fed. Cas. No. 15,316; or if he is sufficiently near to hear what is said and the sound of the blows, although he cannot see for the darkness; State v. McAfee, 107 N. C. 812, 12 S. E. 435, 10 L. R. A. 607; Johnson v. State, 30 Ga. 430; White v. Kent, 11 Ohio St. 550; Brooks v. Com., 61 Pa. 352, 100 Am. Dec. 645; or even to prevent the commission; and such officer may arrest any one whom he reasonably suspects of having committed a felony, whether a felony has actually been committed or not; 3 Campb. 420; Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 281; Eanes v. State, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 53, 44 Am. Dec. 289; Wakely v. Hart, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 316; Holley v. Mix, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 350, 20 Am. Dec. 702; whether acting on his own knowledge or facts communicated by others; 6 B. & C. 635; but not unless the offence amount to a felony; 5 Exch. 378; Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 281; Com. v. Carey, 12 id. 246; Com. v. McLaughlin, 12 id. 615. See Russ. & R. 329; Wright v. Com., 85 Ky. 123, 2 S. W. 904. But a constable cannot arrest for an ordinary misdemeanor without a warrant, unless present at the time of the offence; Winn v. Hobson, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 330; North v. People, 139 Ill. 81, 28 N. E. 966; Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 445, 28 N. W. 695, 1 Am. St. Rep. 608; Scott v. Eldridge, 154 Mass. 25, 27 N. E. 677, 12 L. R. A. 379; State v. Davidson, 44 Mo. App. 513.

A police constable may arrest for a breach of the peace committed in his sight; 4 H. & N. 265. If upon probable suspicion or a reasonable charge made by a third person, he believes that a felony (but not a misdemeanor; 5 Exch. 378) has been committed he may arrest the person whom he believes to have committed the felony; 3 H. & N. 417. To do this he may break open doors. Blackstone (4 Com. 492) says he may kill the felon if necessary.

Mere impudence or abusive language to an officer does not justify arrest without a warrant; Pinkerton v. Verberg, 78 Mich. 573, 44 N. W. 579, 7 L. R. A. 507, 18 Am. St. Rep. 473; Jenkins v. State, 3 Ga. App. 146, 59 S. E. 435; or threats of injury to another officer; Giroux v. State, 40 Tex. 98; otherwise if there is interference with the performance of his duty; Montgomery v. Sutton, 67 Ia. 497, 25 N. W. 748; Myers v. Dunn, 126 Ky. 548, 104 S. W. 352, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881, and note; or if the language amounts to a breach of the peace on a public street; State v. Appleton, 70 Kan. 217, 78 Pac. 445; Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 514, 20 N. W. 540, 52 Am.

Rep. 828. Threats alone, unaccompanied by any effort or apparent intention to execute them, do not constitute the offence of resisting an officer in the execution of lawful process; Statham v. State, 41 Ga. 507; nor do mere derogatory remarks addressed by a bystander to a policeman; City of Chicago v. Brod, 141 Ill. App. 500; nor is it resistance to step in front of a policeman making an arrest, demand his number and remonstrate with him for ill treating the prisoner; Com. v. Sheriff, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 343. A mere statement by one about to be arrested that he will die first is not within a statute making it a crime to oppose arrest; State v. Scott, 123 La. 1085, 49 South. 715, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 199, 17 Ann. Cas. 400.

An officer may arrest without warrant for the violation of a municipal ordinance committed in his presence; Village of Oran v. Bles, 52 Mo. App. 509; but in such case the offender must have a speedy trial or hearing; State v. Freeman, 86 N. C. 683; Judson v. Reardon, 16 Minn. 431 (Gil. 387); and the right exists whether such arrest is authorized by ordinance or not; Scircle v. Neeves, 47 Ind. 289; or if the charter confers on the officer the powers of a constable; State v. Castieny, 34 Minn. 1, 24 N. W. 458; and a municipal ordinance authorizing such arrests is valid; White v. Kent, 11 Ohio St. 550; as is also a charter or general statute; Mayo v. Wilson, 1 N. H. 53; Burroughs v. Eastman, 101 Mich. 419, 59 N. W. 817, 24 L. R. A. 859, 45 Am. St. Rep. 419; Jones v. Root, 6 Gray (Mass.) 435; but such arrest is not authorized if the offense is not committed in the presence of the officer; Pesterfield v. Vickers, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 205; State v. Belk, 76 N. C. 10, where it was also said that the right to arrest in such cases does not necessarily exist. But an ordinance authorizing arrest at the will of the officer without providing an opportunity for trial or preliminary examination is void and will not protect the officer even if acting in good faith; State v. Hunter, 106 N. C. 796, 11 S. E. 366, 8 L. R. A. 529.

As to the power to make arrest without a warrant, see Porter v. State, 124 Ga. 297, 52 S. E. 283, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730 and note.

O'Neill*, 36 Fed. 168; may and should arrest the felon, and may upon reasonable suspicion that the person arrested is the felon, if a felony has been committed; 1 Price, Exch. 525; United States v. Boyd, 45 Fed. 851; but in defence to an action he must allege and prove the offence to have been committed; 6 C. & P. 684, 723; Holley v. Mix, 3 Wend. (N. Y.)

353; Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 281; and also that he had reasonable grounds for suspecting the person arrested; 3 Campb. 35; 2 Q. B. 169; Hall v. Suydam, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 84; Winebiddle v. Porterfield, 9 Pa. 137; Wasson v. Canfield, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 406; Hall v. Hawkins, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 357; Wills v. Noyes, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 324; Wilmarth v. Mountford, 4 Wash. C. C. 82, Fed. Cas. No. 17,774. If a felony has been committed and there is reasonable cause to believe that A. committed it, a private person is justified in arresting A., though it turns out that B. was guilty; 8 C. & P. 522. See Russel v. Shuster, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 308; 2 C. & P. 361, 565; 1 Benn. & H. L. As to arrest to prevent the commission of crimes, see 2 B. & P. 260; 9 C. P. 262.

Where a private party attempts to make an arrest for riot on the order of a justice after offenders have dispersed, he becomes a trespasser and may be resisted; State v. Campbell, 107 N. C. 948, 12 S. E. 441. Any person may arrest an affrayer and detain him till his passion has cooled and then deliver him to an officer; 1 Cr. M. & R. 762; but not after the affray has ceased; 2 Q. B. 375.

A private detective, in pursuit of a fugitive from justice in another state, cannot arrest without a warrant by merely procuring a policeman to make the arrest; Harris v. R. Co., 35 Fed. 116; nor can such detective forcibly detain the defendant to await a legal order of arrest; Harland v. Howard, 57 Hun 113, 587, 10 N. Y. Supp. 449. As to arrest by hue and cry, see HUE AND CRY. As to arrest by military officers, see Luther v. Borden, 7 How. (U. S.) 1, 12 L. Ed. 581.

Atwood*, 13 Mass. 347; Wright v. Keith, 24 Me. 158. And the officer may break open doors even of the criminal's own house; Barnard v. Bartlett, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 501, 57 Am. Dec. 123; Hawkins v. Com., 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 395, 61 Am. Dec. 147 (even to arrest a person therein, not the owner; Com. v. Reynolds, 120 Mass. 190, 21 Am. giving notice of his business; Russ. Cr. 840; McLennon v. Richardson, 15 Gray (Mass.) 74, 77 Am. Dec. 353; State v. Shaw, 1 Root (Conn.) 134; as may a private person in fresh pursuit, under circumstances which authorize him to make an arrest; 4 Bla. Com. 293.

In making an arrest for misdemeanor, an officer can kill or inflict bodily harm upon the person only when he is placed in like danger; Dilger v. Com., 88 Ky. 550, 11 S. W. 651, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 67; Thomas v. Kinkad, 55 Ark. 502, 18 S. W. 854, 15 L. R. A. 558, 29 Am. St. Rep. 68.

When an offender is not resisting but feeling, an officer in making an arrest for a misdemeanor has no right to kill or shoot, although he may do so in case of felony; Head v. Martin, 85 Ky. 480, 3 S. W. 622. He cannot kill a fleeing misdemeanant to prevent escape; Thomas v. Kinkad, 55 Ark. 502, 18 S. W. 854, 15 L. R. A. 558, 29 Am. St. Rep. 68; Brown v. Weaver, 76 Miss. 7, 23 South. 388, 42 L. R. A. 423, 71 Am. St. Rep. 512 (where the sheriff's official bondsmen were held liable for the shooting by his deputy); contra, 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 161, which is criticised by the Arkansas court (which in its turn is reviewed in a later edition of the same work) and also by the Mississippi court. See also 12 Harv. L. Rev. 211, which approves the cases cited supra and strongly criticises Mr. Bishop. If the officer kill his prisoner in such case he is guilty of manslaughter; Reneau v. State, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 720, 31 Am. Rep. 626. If a person kill an officer in resisting an illegal arrest, without warrant, it is reduced from murder, which it would have been if the officer had a right to arrest, to manslaughter, or it may be no offence, if the person arrested had the right to use such force as was necessary in resisting; John Bad Elk v. U. S., 177 U. S. 529, 20 Sup. Ct. 729, 44 L. Ed. 874; Jenkins v. State, 3 Ga. App. 146, 59 S. E. 435. Reading a warrant and directing defendant to appear, is not an arrest; Baldwin v. Murphy, 82 Ill. 485; but see Shannon v. Jones, 76 Tex. 141, 13 S. W. 477. Arresting the body and exhibiting the process is enough; McNeice v. Weed, 50 Vt. 728.

See JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE; HOMICIDE; REWARD; note in 19 Am. Dec. 485; 61 id. 151.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT. The act of a court by which the judges refuse to give judgment for the plaintiff, because upon the face of the record it appears that the plaintiff is not entitled to it.

A motion for arrest of judgment must be grounded on some objection arising on the face of the record itself; State v. Casey, 44 La. Ann. 969, 11 South. 583; McGill v. Rothgeb, 45 Ill. App. 511; and no defect in the evidence or irregularity at the trial can be urged in this stage of the proceedings. But any want of sufficient certainty in the indictment, as in the statement of time or place (where material), of the person against whom the offence was committed, or of the facts and circumstances constituting the offence, or otherwise, which is not aided by the verdict, is a ground for arresting the judgment. In criminal cases, an arrest of judgment is founded on exceptions to the indictment. In civil cases whatever is alleged in arrest of judgment must be such matter as would on demurrer have been sufficient to overturn the action or plea. In the applicability of the rule there is no difference between civil and criminal cases; Dela-ware Division Canal Co. v. Com., 60 Pa. 367, 100 Am. Dec. 570. Although the defendant himself omits to make any motion in arrest of judgment, the court, if, on a review of the case, it is satisfied that the defendant has not been found guilty of any offence in law, will of itself arrest the judgment; 1 East 146. Where a statute upon which an indictment is founded was repealed after the finding of the indictment, but before plea pleaded, the court arrested the judgment; 18 Q. B. 761; Dearsl. 3. See also 8 Ad. & E. 496; 1 Russ. & R. 429; Com. v. Marshall, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 350, 22 Am. Dec. 377; Com. v. Pattee, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 501. If the judgment is arrested, all the proceedings are set aside, and judgment of acquittal is given; but this will be no bar to a new indictment; Comyns. Dig. Indictment, N.; 1 Bish. Cr. Law 998.

Where a judgment rendered has been reversed, and a new trial granted, which is had upon the same indictment in the same court, a motion in arrest of judgment on the ground of a former acquittal of a higher offence charged in the indictment, is good where such facts appear in the record; Golding v. State, 31 Fla. 262, 12 South. 525.

ARRESTANDIS BONIS NE DISSIPENTUR. A writ for him whose cattle or goods, being taken during a controversy, are likely to be wasted and consumed.

ARRESTEE. In Scotch Law. He in whose hands a debt, or property in his possession, has been arrested by a regular arrestment.

If, in contempt of the arrestment, he make payment of the sum or deliver the goods arrested to the common debtor, he is not only liable criminally for breach of the arrestment, but he must pay the debt again to the arrester; Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 6.

ARRESTER. In Scotch Law. One who sues out and obtains an arrestment of his debtor's goods or movable obligations. Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 1.

ARRESTMENT. In Scotch Law. Securing a criminal's person till trial, or that of a debtor till he give security judicio sisti. The order of a judge, by which he who is debtor in a movable obligation to the arrester's debtor is prohibited to make payment or delivery till the debt due to the arrester be paid or secured. Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 1; 1. 2. 12.

This word is used interchangeably with attachment in the act for the protection of seaman's wages; U. S. R. S. § 4536; which it is said must be liberally construed; Wilder v. Navigation Co., 211 U. S. 239, 29 Sup. Ct. 58, 53 L. Ed. 164, 15 Ann. Cas. 127. The court, after quoting the above definition, held that, though not literally so, the prohibition against "attachment or arrestment" must apply to execution after judgment as well as attachment before it.

ARRÊT (Fr.). A judgment, sentence, or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The term is derived from the French law, and is used in Canada and Louisiana.

ARRHÆ. Money or other valuable things given by the buyer to the seller, for the purpose of evidencing the contract; earnest.

There are two kinds of arrhæ: one kind given when a contract has only been proposed; the other when a sale has actually taken place. Those which are given when a bargain has been merely proposed, before it has been concluded, form the matter of the contract, by which he who gives the arrhæ consents and agrees to lose them, and to transfer the title to them in the opposite party, in case he should refuse to complete the proposed bargain; and the receiver of arrhæ is obliged on his part to return double the amount to the giver of them in case he should fail to complete his part of the contract; Pothier, Contr. de Vente, n. 498. After the contract of sale has been completed, the purchaser usually gives arrhæ as evidence that the contract has been perfected. Arrhæ are therefore defined quod ante pretium datur, et fidem fecit contractus, facti totiusque pecuniæ solvendæ. Id. n. 506; Cod. 4. 45. 2. 3 Sand. Just. xxiii. See EARNEST.

Arrhæ sponsalitiæ were the earnest or present given by one betrothed to the other at the betrothal.

ARRIER BAN. A second summons to join the lord, addressed to those who had neglected the first. A summons of the inferiors or vassals of the lord. Spelman, Gloss.

In some states by statute there are degrees of arson. The house, or some part of it, however small, must be consumed by fire; 9 C. & P. 45; Com. v. Van Schanck, 16 Mass. 105; State v. Mitchell, 27 N. C. 350. Where the house is simply scorched or smoked and the fire is not communicated to the building; Woolsey v. State, 30 Tex. App. 346, 17 S. W. 546; or where parts of a house already detached are burned; Mulligan v. State, 25 Tex. App. 199, 7 S. W. 664, 8 Am. St. Rep. 435; it is not arson; nor where a house was blown up by dynamite and splinters were torn from the roof and fired by the explosion; Landers v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 671, 47 S. W. 1008; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 433. The question of burning is one of fact for the jury; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 398; Com. v. Betton, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 427.

It must be another's house; 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 389; but aliter under the N. H. statute; State v. Hurd, 51 N. H. 176; but if a man set fire to his own house with a view to burn his neighbor's, and does so, it is, at least, a great misdemeanor; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 568; W. Jones 351; Bloss v. Tobey, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 325; Erskine v. Com., 8 Gratt. (Va.) 624. See People v. Henderson, 1 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 500; People v. Van Blarncum, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 105; Ritchey v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 168; and under statutes in some states a tenant who sets fire to a house occupied by himself is guilty of the crime; State v. Moore, 61 Mo. 276; People v. Simpson, 50 Cal. 304. If one sets fire to a school-house with the intention of burning an adjoining dwelling, which actually happens, he is guilty of arson; Combs v. Com., 93 Ky. 313, 20 S. W. 221.

The house of another must be burned, to constitute arson at common law; but the term "house" comprehends not only the very mansion-house, but all out-houses which are parcel thereof, though not contiguous to it, nor under the same roof, such as the barn, stable, cow-house, sheep-house, dairy-house, mill-house, and the like, being within the curtilage, or same common fence, as the mansion itself; 4 C. & P. 245; State v. And it has also been said that the burning of a barn, though no part of the mansion, if it has corn or hay in it, is felony at common law; 1 Hale, P. C. 567; 4 C. & P. 245; Sampson v. Com., 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 385; contra, Creed v. State, 49 Ala. 30, 20 Am. Rep. 269; Willis v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 534, 25 S. W. 123. The burning must have been both malicious and wilful; 1 Bishop, Cr. L. § 259; Maxwell v. State, 68 Miss. 339, 8 South. 546. And generally, if the act is proved to have been done wilfully, it may be inferred to have been done maliciously, unless the contrary is proved; 1 Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 26. 'On a charge of arson for setting fire to a mill, an intent to injure or defraud the mill-owners will be conclusively inferred from the wilful act of firing; 2 B. & C. 264. But this doctrine can only arise where the act is wilful, and therefore, if the fire appears to be the result of accident, the party who is the cause of it will not be liable; Jenkins v. State, 53 Ga. 33, 31 Am. Rep. 255; McDonald v. People, 47 Ill. 533.

ARSURA. The trial of money by heating it after it was coined. Now obsolete.

ART. In Patent Law. A principle put in practice and applied to some art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter. Earle v. Sawyer, 4 Mas. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 4,247. See COPYRIGHT; PATENT.

Under the tariff laws an artist's copies of antique masterpieces are works of art of as high a grade as those executed by the same hand from original models of modern sculptors; Tutton v. Viti, 108 U. S. 312, 2 Sup. Ct. 687, 27 L. Ed. 737.

The word statuary as used in the import laws includes professional productions of statuary or of a sculptor only; U. S. R. S. 478. This definition is held to embrace such works of art as are the result of the artist's own creation or are copies of them made under his supervision, as distinguished from the productions of the manufacturer or mechanic.

For most practical purposes works of art may be divided into four classes: 1. The fine arts properly so called, intended solely for ornamental purposes and including paintings in oil and water, upon canvas, plaster or other material, and original statuary of marble, bronze, or stone. 2. Minor objects of art intended also for ornamental purposes, such as statuettes, vases, drawings, etchings and articles which pass under the general name of bric-a-brac, and are susceptible of an indefinite number of reproductions from the original. 3. Objects of art which serve primarily an ornamental, and incidentally a useful purpose, such as painted or stained glass windows, tapestry, paper hangings, etc. 4. Objects primarily designed for a useful purpose, but made ornamental to gratify the taste, such as ornamented clocks, the higher grade of carpets, curtains, gas fixtures and household and table furniture; U. S. v. Perry, 146 U. S. 74, 13 Sup. Ct. 26, 36 L. Ed. 890. No special favor is extended by congress to any of these classes except the first, which is alone recognized as belonging to the domain of high art; id., where stained glass windows were held not to be exempt from duty as paintings imported for the use of a religious society and not intended for sale.

Under the tariff act of 1897, plaster casts of clay models, though gilded and painted and produced in unlimited quantities, are "casts of sculpture" and entitled to free entry when specially imported in good faith for the use and by the order of any society established solely for religious, philosophical, scientific, educational or literary purposes; Benziger v. U. S., 192 U. S. 38, 24 Sup. Ct. 189, 48 L. Ed. 331.

ARTICLED CLERK. A person bound by indenture to a solicitor that he may acquire a knowledge pertaining to that business.

ARTICLES (Lat. articulus, a joint). Divisions of a written or printed document or agreement.

A specification of distinct matters agreed upon or established by authority or requiring judicial action.

The fundamental idea of an article is that of an object comprising some integral part of a complex whole. See Worcester, Dict. The term may be applied, for example, to a single complete question in a series of interrogatories; the statement of the undertakings and liabilities of the various parties to an agreement in any given event, where several contingencies are provided for in the same agreement; a statement of a variety of powers secured to a branch of government by a constitution; a statement of particular regulations in reference to one general subject of legislation in a system of laws; and in many other instances resembling these in principle. It is also used in the plural of the subject made up of these separate and related articles as articles of agreement, articles of war, the different divisions generally having, however, some relation to each other, though not necessarily a dependence upon each other.

In Chancery Practice. A formal written statement of objections to the credibility of witnesses in a cause in chancery, filed by a party to the proceedings after the depositions have been taken and published.

The object of articles is to enable the party filing them to introduce evidence to discredit the witnesses to whom the objections apply, where it is too late to do so in any other manner; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. (6th Am. ed.) *957; and to apprise the party whose witnesses are objected to of the nature of the objections, that he may be prepared to meet them; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. (6th Am. ed.) *958.

Upon filing the articles, a special order is obtained to take evidence; 2 Dick. Ch. 532; which is sparingly granted; 1 Beam. Ord. 187.

The interrogatories must be so shaped as not to call for evidence which applies directly to facts in issue; Wood v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 316, Fed. Cas. No. 17,953; Gass v. Stinson, 2 Sumn. 605, Fed. Cas. No. 5,261; Troup v. Sherwood, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 558; 10 Ves. Ch. 49. The objections can be taken only to the credit and not to the competency of the witnesses; 3 Atk. 643; Troup v. Sherwood, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 558; and the court are to hear all the evidence read and judge of its value; 2 Ves. Ch. 219. See, generally, 10 Ves. Ch. 49; 2 Ves. & B. 267; 1 Sim. & S. 467.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A complaint in the form of a libel exhibited to an ecclesiastical court.

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT. A written memorandum of the terms of an agreement.

They may relate either to real or personal estate, or both, and if in proper form will create an equitable estate or trust such that a specific performance may be had in equity.

The instrument should contain a clear and explicit statement of the names of the parties, with their additions for purposes of distinction, as well as a designation as parties of the first, second, etc., part; the subject-matter of the contract, including the time, place, and more important details of the manner of performance; the promises to be performed by each party; the date, which should be truly stated. It should be signed by the parties or their agents. When signed by an agent, the proper form is, A B, by his agent [or attorney in fact], C D.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION, OR OF INCORPORATION. The certificate filed in conformity with a general law, by persons who desire to become a corporation, setting forth the rules and conditions upon which the association or corporation is founded. Cent. Dict.

ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION. The title of the compact which was made by the thirteen original states of the United States of America. Story, Const. 215, 223.

The full title was "Articles of Confederation and perpetual union between the states of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia." It was adopted and went into force on the first day of March, 1781, and remained as the supreme law until the first Wednesday of March, 1789; Owings v. Speed, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 420, 5 L. Ed. 124.

The accompanying analysis of this important instrument is from Judge Story's Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States.

The style of the confederacy was, by the first article, declared to be, "The United States of America." The second article declared that each state retained its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right which was not by this confederation expressly delegated to the United States, in congress assembled. The third article declared that the states severally entered into a firm league of friendship with each other, for their common defence, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare; binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attacks made upon them, or any of them, on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, or any other pretence whatever. The fourth article declared that the free inhabitants of each of the states (vagrants and fugitives from justice excepted) should be entitled to all the privileges of free citizens in the several states; that the people of each state should have free ingress and regress to and from any other state, and should enjoy all the privileges of trade and commerce, subject to the same duties and restrictions as the inhabitants; that fugitives from justice should, upon the demand of the executive of the state from which they fled, be delivered up; and that full faith and credit should be given, in each of the states, to the records, acts, and judicial proceedings of the courts and magistrates of every other state.

Having thus provided for the security and intercourse of the states, the next article (5th) provided for the organization of a general congress, declaring that delegates should be chosen in such manner as the legislature of each state should direct; to meet in congress on the first Monday in every year, with a power, reserved to each state, to recall any or all of the delegates, and to send others in their stead. No state was to be represented in congress by less than two nor more than seven members. No delegate was eligible for more than three in any term of six years; and no delegate was capable of holding office of emolument under the United States. Each state was to maintain its own delegates, and, in determining questions in congress, was to have one vote. Freedom of speech and debate in congress was not to be impeached or questioned in any other place; and the members were to be protected from arrest and imprisonment during the time of their going to and from and attendance on congress, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace.

By subsequent articles, congress was invested with the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war, unless in case of an invasion of a state by enemies, or an imminent danger of an invasion by Indians; of sending and receiving ambassadors; entering into treaties and alliances, under certain limitations as to treaties of commerce; of establishing rules for deciding all cases of capture on land and water, and for the division and appropriation of prizes taken by the land or naval forces, in the service of the United States; of granting letters of marque and reprisal in times of peace; of appointing courts for the trial of pirates and felonies committed on the high seas; and of establishing courts for receiving and finally determining appeals in all cases of captures.

Congress was also invested with power to decide in the last resort, on appeal, all disputes and differences between two or more states concerning boundary, jurisdiction, or any other cause whatsoever; and the mode of exercising that authority was specially prescribed. And all controversies concerning the private right of soil, claimed under different grants of two or more states before the settlement of their jurisdiction, were to be finally determined in the same manner, upon the petition of either of the grantees. But no state was to be deprived of territory for the benefit of the United States.

Congress was also invested with the sole and exclusive right and power of regulating the alloy and value of coin struck by their own authority, or that of the United States; of fixing the standard of weights and measures throughout the United States; of regulating the trade and managing all affairs with the Indians, not members of any of the states, provided that the legislative right of any state within its own limits should not be infringed or violated; of establishing and regulating post-offices from one state to another, and exacting postage to defray the expenses; of appointing all officers of the land forces in the service of the United States, except regimental officers; of appointing all officers of the naval forces, and commissioning all officers whatsoever in the service of the United States; and of making rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, and directing their operations.

Congress was also invested with authority to appoint a committee of the states to sit in the recess of congress, and to consist of one delegate from each state, and other committees and civil officers, to manage the general affairs under their direction; to appoint one of their number to preside, but no person was to serve in the office of president more than one year in the term of three years; to ascertain the necessary sums for the public service, and to appropriate the same for defraying the public expenses; to borrow money and emit bills on credit of the United States; to build and equip a navy; to agree upon the number of land forces, and make requisitions upon each state for its quota, in proportion to the number of white inhabitants in such state. The legislatures of each state were to appoint the regimental officers, raise the men, and clothe, arm, and equip them at the expense of the United States.

Congress was also invested with power to adjourn for any time not exceeding six months, and to any place within the United States; and provision was made for the publication of its journal, and for entering the yeas and nays thereon when desired by any delegate.

Such were the powers confided in congress. But even these were greatly restricted in their exercise; for it was expressly provided that congress should never engage in a war; nor grant letters of marque or reprisal in time of peace; nor enter into any treaties or alliances; nor coin money or regulate the value thereof; nor ascertain the sums or expenses necessary for the defence and welfare of the United States; nor emit bills; nor borrow money on the credit of the United States; nor appropriate money; nor agree upon the number of vessels of war to be built, or purchased, or the number of land or sea forces to be raised; nor appoint a commander-in-chief of the army or navy; unless nine states should assent to the same. And no question on any other point, except for adjourning from day to day, was to be determined, except by vote of the majority of the states.

The committee of the states, or any nine of them, were authorized in the recess of congress to exercise such powers as congress, with the assent of nine states, should think it expedient to vest them with, except powers for the exercise of which, by the articles of confederation, the assent of nine states was required, which could not be thus delegated.

It was further provided that all bills of credit, moneys borrowed, and debts contracted by or under the authority of congress before the confederation, should be a charge against the United States; that when land forces were raised by any state for the common defence, all officers of or under the rank of colonel should be appointed by the legislature of the state, or in such manner as the state should direct; and all vacancies should be filled up in the same manner; that all charges of war, and all other expenses for the common defence or general welfare, should be defrayed out of a common treasury, which should be supplied by the several states, in proportion to the value of the land within each state granted or surveyed, and the buildings and improvements thereon, to be estimated according to the mode prescribed by congress; and the taxes for that proportion were to be laid and levied by the legislatures of the states within the time agreed upon by congress.

Certain prohibitions were laid upon the exercise of powers by the respective states. No state, without the consent of the United States, could send an embassy to, or receive an embassy from, or enter into any treaty with any king, prince, or state; nor could any person holding any office under the United States, or any of them, accept any present, emolument, office, or title from any foreign king, prince, or state; nor could congress itself grant any title of nobility. No two states could enter into any treaty, confederation, or alliance with each other, without the consent of congress. No state could lay any imposts or duties which might interfere with any proposed treaties. No vessels of war were to be kept up by any state in time of peace, except deemed necessary by congress for its defence or trade; nor any body of forces, except as should be deemed requisite by congress to garrison its forts and necessary for its defence. But every state was required always to keep up a well-regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred, and to be provided with suitable field-pieces, and tents, and arms, and ammunition, and camp equipage. No state could engage in war without the consent of congress, unless actually invaded by enemies or in danger of invasion by the Indians. Nor could any state grant commissions to any ships of war, nor letters of marque and reprisal except after a declaration of war by congress, unless such state were infested by pirates, and then subject to the determination of congress. No state could prevent the removal of any property imported into any state to any other state, of which the owner was an inhabitant. And no imposition, duties, or restriction could be laid by any state on the property of the United States or of either of them.

There was also provision made for the admission of Canada into the Union, and of other colonies, with the assent of nine states. And it was finally declared that every state should abide by the determinations of congress on all questions submitted to it by the confederation; that the articles should be inviolably observed by every state; that the union should be perpetual; and that no alterations should be made in any of the articles, unless agreed to by congress and confirmed by the legislatures of every state.

ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT. Accusations in writing which form the basis of a trial by impeachment.

They are called by Blackstone a kind of bills of indictment, and perform the same office which an indictment does in a common criminal case. They do not usually pursue the strict form and accuracy of an indictment, but are sometimes quite general in the form of the allegations. Woodd. Lect. 605; Sto. Const. 5th ed. § 807; Com. Dig. Parliament, L. 21; Foster, Cr. L. 389. They should, however, contain so much certainty as to enable a party to put himself on the proper defence, and in case of an acquittal to avail himself of it as a bar to another impeachment. Additional articles may perhaps be exhibited at any stage of the proceedings; Rawle Const. 216.

The answer to articles of impeachment need not observe great strictness of form; and it may contain arguments as well as facts. It is usual to give a full and particular answer to each article of the accusation; Story, Const. 5th ed. § 810; Jeff. Man. § 53. See IMPEACHMENT.

ARTICLES OF PARTNERSHIP. A written agreement by which the parties enter into a partnership upon the conditions therein mentioned.

These are to be distinguished from agreements to enter into a partnership at a future time. By articles of partnership a partnership is actually established; while an agreement for a partnership is merely a contract, which may be taken advantage of in a manner similar to other contracts. Where an agreement to enter into a partnership is broken, an action lies at law to recover damages; and equity, in some cases, to prevent frauds or manifestly mischievous consequences, will enforce specific performance; Story, Partn. § 109; 3 Atk. 382; 1 Swanst. 513, n.; Lindl. Partn. *475; 17 Beav. 294; but not when the partnership may be immediately dissolved; 9 Ves. Ch. 360. Specific performance was decreed in Whitworth v. Harris, 40 Miss. 483; Birchett v. Bolling, 5 Munf. (Va.) 442; and refused in Wadsworth v. Manning, 4 Md. 60. See 8 Beav. 129; 30 id. 376.

The instrument should contain the names of the contracting parties severally set out; the agreement that the parties do by the instrument enter into a partnership, expressed in such terms as to distinguish it from a covenant to enter into partnership at a subsequent time; the date, and necessary stipulations, some of the more common of which follow.

The commencement of the partnership should be expressly provided for. The date of the articles is the time, when no other time is fixed by them; 5 B. & C. 108; Lindl. Part. (2d Am. Ed.) *201, *412; Ingraham v. Foster, 31 Ala. 123; Beaman v. Whitney, 20 Me. 413; Everit v. Watts, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 82; if not dated, parol evidence is admissible to show that they were not intended to take effect at the time of their execution; 17 C. B. 625.

The duration of the partnership should be stated. It may be for life, for a limited period of time, or for a limited number of adventures. When a term is fixed, it endures until that period has elapsed; when no term or limitation is fixed, the partnership may be dissolved at the will of either partner; 17 Ves. 298; Carlton v. Cummins, 51 Ind. 478; McElvey v. Lewis, 76 N. Y. 373; Lindl. Partn. *121, *413; see Williams v. Ins. Co., 150 Pa. 20, 24 Atl. 346. Dissolution follows immediately and inevitably on the death of a partner; Hoard v. Clum, 31 Minn. 186, 17 N. W. 275; but provision may be made for the succession of the executors or administrators or a child or children of a deceased partner to his place and rights; Burwell v. Cawood, 2 How. (U. S.) 560, 11 L. Ed. 378; Powell v. Hopson, 13 La. Ann. 626; 9 Ves. Ch. 500. Where a provision is made for a succession by appointment, and the partner dies without appointing, his executors or administrators may continue the partnership or not, at their option; 1 McClell. & Y. 579; Coll. Ch. 157. A continuance of the partnership beyond the period fixed for its termination will, in the absence of circumstances showing intent, be implied to be upon the basis of the old articles; U. S. Bank v. Binney, 5 Mas. 176, 185, Fed. Cas. No. 16,791; 15 Ves. Ch. 218; 1 Moll. Ch. 466; but it will be considered as at will, and not as renewed for a further definite period; 17 Ves. 307.

Persons dealing with a partnership are not bound by any stipulation as to its dissolution or continuance, unless they have actual notice before making contracts with the firm; St. Louis Electric Lamp Co. v. Marshall, 78 Ga. 168, 1 S. E. 430; Central Nat. Bank v. Frye, 148 Mass. 498, 20 N. E. 325.

The nature of the business and the place of carrying it on should be very carefully and exactly specified. Courts of equity will grant an injunction when one or more of the partners attempt, against the wishes of one or more of them, to extend such business beyond the provision contained in the articles; Story, Partn. § 193; Abbot v. Johnson, 32 N. H. 9; Livingston v. Lynch, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 573.

The name of the firm should be expressed. The members of the partnership are required to use the name thus agreed upon, and a departure from it will make them individually liable to third persons or to their partners, in particular cases; Lindl. Partn. *413; 2 Jac. & W. 266; 9 Ad. & E. 314; Story, Partn. §§ 102, 136, 142, 202; Crawford v. Collins, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 269.

The management of the business, or of some particular branch of it, is frequently intrusted by stipulation to one partner, and such partner will be protected in his rights by equity; Story, Partn. §§ 172, 182, 193, 202; and see La. Civ. Code art. 2838; Pothier, Société, n. 71; Dig. 14, 1, 1, 13; Pothier, Pand. 14, 1, 4; or it may be to a majority of the partners, and should be where they are numerous. See PARTNERS.

The manner of furnishing capital and stock should be provided for. When a partner is required to furnish his proportion of the stock at stated periods, or pay by instalments, he will, where there are no stipulations to the contrary, be considered a debtor to the firm; Story, Partn. § 203; 1 Swanst. 89. As to the fulfillment of some conditions precedent by a partner, such as the payment of so much capital, etc., see Lindl. Partn. *416; 1 Wms. Saund. 320 a. Sometimes a provision is inserted that real estate and fixtures belonging to the firm shall be considered, as between the partners, not as partnership but as several property; 1 App. Cas. 181; Rushing v. People, 42 Ark. 390; Stumph v. Bauer, 76 Ind. 157; Clements v. Jessup, 36 N. J. Eq. 569. In cases of bankruptcy, this property will be treated as the separate property of the partners; Collyer, Partn. §§ 905, 909; 5 Ves. 189; 3 Madd. 63.

The apportionment of profits and losses should be provided for. The law distributes these equally, in the absence of controlling circumstances, without regard to the capital furnished by each; Story, Partn. 24; 3 Kent 28; Gould v. Gould, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 263. But see 7 Bligh 432; 5 Wils. & S. 16; 20 Beav. 98; Hyatt v. Robinson, 15 Ohio, 399.

Very frequently the articles provide for the division of profits and determine the proportion in which each partner takes his share. There is nothing to prevent their making any bargain on this subject that they see fit to make; Pars. Partn. § 172.

Periodical accounts of the property of the partnership may be stipulated for. These, when settled, are at least prima facie evidence of the facts they contain; 7 Sim. 239. It is proper to stipulate that an account settled shall be conclusive; Lindl. Partn. *420.

The expulsion of a partner for gross misconduct, bankruptcy, or other specified causes may be provided for; and the provision will govern, when the case occurs. See 10 Hare 493; L. R. 9 Ex. 190; Pars. Partn. 169, n; Patterson v. Silliman, 28 Pa. 304.

A settlement of the affairs of the partnership should always be provided for. It is generally accomplished in one of the three following ways: first, by turning all the assets into cash, and, after paying all the liabilities of the partnership, dividing such money in proportion to the several interests of the parties; or, second, by providing that one or more of the partners shall be entitled to purchase the shares of the others at a valuation; 20 Beav. 442; or, third, that all the property of the partnership shall be appraised, and that after paying the partnership debts it shall be divided in the proper proportions. The first of these modes is adopted by courts of equity in the absence of express stipulations; Lindl. Partn. 2d Am. ed. (Ewell) *429; Story, Partn. § 207; 8 Sim. 529; but see 6 Madd. 146; 3 Hare 581. Where partnership accounts have been fully settled, an express promise by one to pay the balance due to another is not necessary; Sears v. Starbird, 78 Cal. 225, 20 Pac. 547.

Submission of disputes to arbitration is provided for frequently, but such a clause is nugatory, as no action will lie for a breach; Story, Partn. § 215; and, (except in England, under Com. L. Proc. Act, 1854) it is no defence to an action relative to the matter to be referred; Pars. Partn. 170; see Lindl. Partn. 2d Am. ed. (Ewell) *451. Where the settlement of partnership accounts is made by arbitrators without fraud, it will not be disturbed; Abell's Adm'r v. Phillips (Ky.) 13 S. W. 109.

The articles should be executed by the parties, but need not be under seal. See PARTIES; PARTNERS; PARTNERSHIP.

ARTICLES OF THE PEACE. A complaint made before a court of competent jurisdiction by one who has just cause to fear that an injury to his person or property is about to be committed or caused by the party complained of, alleging the causes of his belief, and asking the protection of the court.

The object of articles is to compel the party complained of to find sureties of the peace. This will be granted when the articles are on oath; 12 Mod. 243; 12 Ad. & E. 599; unless the articles on their face are false; 2 Burr. 806; 3 id. 1922; or are offered under suspicious circumstances; 2 Str. 835; 1 W. Bla. 233. Their truth cannot be controverted by affidavit or otherwise; but exception may be taken to their sufficiency, or affidavits for reduction of the amount of bail tendered; 2 Str. 1202; 13 East 171. See GOOD BEHAVIOR; PEACE.

ARTICLES OF SEPARATION. See SEPARATION.

ARTICLES OF WAR. The code of laws established for the government of the army.

The term is used in this sense both in England and the United States. The term also includes the code established for the government of the navy. See R. S. U. S. § 1342, as to the army, and § 1624, as to the navy.

The constitution, art. 1, § 8, provides that Congress shall have power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces."

See MILITARY LAW; MARTIAL LAW; COURTS-MARTIAL; REGULATIONS OF THE ARMY; RANK.

ARTICULI CLERI. These articles (Edw. II.) were an attempt to delimit accurately the spheres of the lay and ecclesiastical jurisdictions, and were the basis of all subsequent legislation upon this subject during the mediæval period. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 253. See CIRCUMSPECTE AGATIS.

ARTIFICER. One who buys goods in order to reduce them by his own art, or industry, into other forms, and then to sell them. Lansdale v. Brashear, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 335.

The term applies to those who are actually and personally engaged or employed to do mechanical work or the like, and not to those taking contracts for labor to be done by others; 7 El. & Bl. 135.

ARTIFICIAL. Having its existence in the given manner by virtue of or in consideration only of the law.

Artificial person. A subject of duties and rights which is represented by one or more natural persons (generally, not necessarily, by more than one) but does not coincide with them. It has a continuous legal existence not necessarily depending on any natural life; this legal continuity answers to some real continuity of public functions or of special purpose recognized as having public utility or of some lawful common interest of the natural persons concerned. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 112. See CORPORATION.

A body, company, or corporation considered in law as an individual. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629.

AS (Lat.). A pound.

It was composed of twelve ounces. The parts were reckoned (as may be seen in the law, Servum de hereditibus, Inst. lib. xiii. Pandect) as follows: uncia, 1 ounce; sextans, 2 ounces; triens, 3 ounces; quadrans, 4 ounces; quincunx, 5 ounces; semis, 6 ounces; sextunx, 7 ounces; bes, 8 ounces; dodrans, 9 ounces; dextans, 10 ounces; deunx, 11 ounces.

The whole of a thing; solidum quid.

Thus, as signified the whole of an inheritance: so that an heir ex asse was an heir of the whole inheritance. An heir ex triente, ex semisse, ex besse, ex deunce, was an heir of one-third, one-half, two-thirds, or eleven-twelfths.

ASCENDANTS. Those from whom a person is descended, or from whom he derives his birth, however remote they may be. See CONSANGUINITY.

Every one has two ascendants at the first degree, his father and mother; four at the second degree, his paternal grandfather and grandmother, and his maternal grandfather and grandmother; eight at the third. Thus, in going up we ascend by various lines, which fork at every generation. By this progress sixteen ascendants are found at the fourth degree; thirty-two, at the fifth, sixty-four, at the sixth; one hundred and twenty-eighth, at the seventh, and so on. By this progressive increase, a person has at the twenty-fifth generation thirty-three million five hundred and fifty-four thousand four hundred and thirty-two ascendants. But, as many of the ascendants of a person have descended from the same ancestor the lines which were forked reunite to the first common ancestor, from whom the other descends; and this multiplication, thus frequently interrupted by the common ancestors, may be reduced to a less number.

ASCERTAIN. To make certain by examination; to find out. The word ascertained is held to have two meanings: (1) known; (2) made certain. L. R. 2 P. & D. 365.

ASCRIPTICIUS. One enrolled; foreigners who have been enrolled. Among the Romans, ascripticii were foreigners who had been naturalized, and who had in general the same rights as natives. Nov. 22, c. 17; Cod. 11, 47.

A man bound to the soil but not a slave. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 217. See ADSRIPTICII.

ASEXUALIZATION. See VASECTOMY.

ASIDE. On one side; apart. To set aside. To annul; to make void. State v. Primm, 61 Mo. 171.

ASPHYXIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. Suspended animation and death produced by non-conversion of the venous blood of the lungs into arterial.

This term applies to the situation of persons who have been asphyxiated by submersion or drowning; by breathing mephitic gas; by suspension or strangulation. In a legal point of view, it is always proper to ascertain whether the person who has thus been deprived of his senses is the victim of another, whether the injury has been caused by accident, or whether it is the act of the sufferer himself. See 1 Hamilton, Leg. Med. 113, 120; 1 Wh. & St. Med. Jur. 534; DEATH.

ASPORTATION (Lat. asportatio). The act of carrying a thing away; the removing a thing from one place to another.

The carrying away of a chattel which one is accused of stealing. See LARCENY.

ASSART, ESSART. A piece of forest land converted into arable land by grubbing up the trees and brushwood. New Dict.

ASSART RENTS. Rents paid to the Crown for assarted lands. New Dict.

ASSASSINATION. Murder committed for hire, without provocation or cause of resentment given to the murderer by the person upon whom the crime is committed. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, t. 4, n. 45.

A murder committed treacherously, with advantage of time, place, or other circumstances.

ASSAULT. An unlawful offer or attempt with force or violence to do a corporeal hurt to another.

Force unlawfully directed or applied to the person of another under such circumstances as to cause a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril. Bish. Cr. Law 548.

Aggravated assault is one committed with the intention of committing some additional crime. Simple assault is one committed with no intention to do any other injury.

Assault is generally coupled with battery, and for the excellent practical reason that they generally go together; but the result is rather the initiation or offer to commit the act of which the battery is the consummation. An assault is included in every battery; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 62, § 1.

Where a person is only assaulted, still the form of the declaration is the same as where there has been a battery, "that the defendant assaulted, and beat, bruised, and wounded the plaintiff;" 1 Saund. 6th ed. 14a. The word "ill-treated" is frequently inserted; and if the assaulting and ill-treating are justified in the plea, although the beating, bruising, and wounding are not, yet it is held that the plea amounts to a justification of the battery; 7 Taunt. 689; 1 J. B. Moore 420. So where the plaintiff declared, in trespass, for assaulting him, seizing and laying hold of him, and imprisoning him, and the defendant pleaded a justification under a writ of capias, it was held, that the plea admitted a battery; 3 M. & W. 28. But where in trespass for assaulting the plaintiff, and throwing water upon him, and also wetting and damaging his clothes, the defendant pleaded a justification as to assaulting the plaintiff and wetting and damaging his clothes, it was held, that, though the declaration alleged a battery, yet the matter justified by the plea did not amount to a battery; 3 Ad. & E. 602.

Any act causing a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril from a force already partially or fully put in motion is an assault; 4 C. & P. 349; 9 id. 483, 626; Com. v. White, 110 Mass. 407; State v. Davis, 23 N. C. 125, 35 Am. Dec. 735; State v. Crow, 23 N. C.

375; Com. v. Eyre, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 347; State v. Sims, 3 Strobb. (S. C.) 137; State v. Blackwell, 9 Ala. 79; United States v. Hand, 2 Wash. C. C. 435, Fed. Cas. No. 15,297; unless justifiable. But if justifiable, then it is not necessarily either a battery or an assault. Whether the act, therefore, in any particular case is an assault and battery, or a gentle imposition of hands, or application of force, depends upon the question whether there was justifiable cause. If, therefore, the evidence fails to show the act to have been unjustifiable, or leaves that question in doubt, the criminal act is not proved; Com. v. McKie, 1 Gray (Mass.) 63, 64, 61 Am. Dec. 410. Any threatening gesture, showing in itself, or by words accompanying it, an immediate intention coupled with ability to commit a battery, is an assault; Flournoy v. State, 25 Tex. App. 244, 7 S. W. 865; Lane v. State, 85 Ala. 11, 4 South. 730; 13 C. B. 860; People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 527, 5 N. W. 982; but an approach with gesticulations and menaces was held not an assault; Berkeley v. Com., 88 Va. 1017, 14 S. E. 916; words are not legal provocation to justify an assault and battery; State v. Workman, 39 S. C. 151, 17 S. E. 694; Willey v. Carpenter, 64 Vt. 212, 23 Atl. 630, 15 L. R. A. 853. It is an assault where one strikes at another with a stick without hitting him; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 110. Shooting into a crowd is an assault upon each member of the crowd; Scott v. State, 49 Ark. 156, 4 S. W. 750; an officer is guilty of an assault in shooting at a fleeing prisoner, who had been arrested for misdemeanor, whether he intended to hit the prisoner or not; State v. Sigman, 106 N. C. 728, 11 S. E. 520.

Generally speaking "consent to an assault is no justification," and "an injury, even in sport, would be an assault if it went beyond what was admissible in sports of the sort, and was intentional"; McNeil v. Mullin, 70 Kan. 634, 79 Pac. 168, quoting Cooley, Torts 163; Willey v. Carpenter, 64 Vt. 212, 23 Atl. 630, 15 L. R. A. 853, and note; Poll. Torts 157; Grotton v. Glidden, 84 Me. 589, 24 Atl. 1008, 30 Am. St. Rep. 413. But there are exceptions, as where the essence of the offense is its being against the consent, as in rape (q. v.). And consent to vaccination may be implied from conduct so that no assault is committed; O'Brien v. S. S. Co., 154 Mass. 272, 28 N. E. 266, 13 L. R. A. 329.

It is not an assault for a beadle to turn out of church a man who is disturbing the service, if without unnecessary violence; [1893] 1 Q. B. 142; or for the master of a house to expel one who comes into his house and disturbs the peace of the family; 3 C. & K. 25.

If a teacher take indecent liberties with a female scholar, without her consent, though she does not resist, it is an assault; 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 64; 9 C. & P. 722; Ridout v. State, 6 Tex. App. 249. So, if a medical practitioner unnecessarily strips a female patient naked, under the pretence that he cannot otherwise judge of her illness, it is an assault, if he assisted to take off her clothes; 1 Moody 19; 1 Lew. 11. Where a medical man had connection with a girl fourteen years of age, under the pretence that he was thereby treating her professionally, she making no resistance solely from the belief that such was the case, it was held that he was properly convicted of an assault; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 580; 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 220; Templ. & M. 218. But an attempt to commit the misdemeanor of having carnal knowledge of a girl between ten and twelve years old, is not an assault, by reason of the consent of the girl; 8 C. & P. 574, 589; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 145. And see 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 377; 2 C. & K. 957; 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 266. But it has been held that one may be convicted of an assault upon the person of a girl under ten years of age with intent to commit a rape, whether she consented or resisted; People v. Gordon, 70 Cal. 467, 11 Pac. 762. One is not guilty of an assault if he takes hold of a woman's hand and puts his arm around her shoulder, unless he does so without her consent or with an intent to injure her; Crawford v. State, 21 Tex. App. 454, 1 S. W. 446. One is guilty of assault and battery who delivers to another a thing to be eaten, knowing that it contains a foreign substance and concealing the fact, if the other, in ignorance, eats it and is injured; Com. v. Stratton, 114 Mass. 303, 19 Am. Rep. 350; but see 2 C. & K. 912; 1 Cox, Cr. Cas. 281; People v. Quin, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 128. An unlawful imprisonment is also an assault; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 62, § 1. A negligent attack may be an assault; Whart. Cr. L. § 603. See Steph. Dig. Cr. L. § 243.

A teacher has a right to punish a pupil for misbehavior; but this punishment must be reasonable and proportioned to the gravity of the pupil's misconduct; and must be inflicted in the honest performance of the teacher's duty, not with the mere intent of gratifying his ill-will or malice. If it is unreasonable and excessive, is inflicted with an improper weapon, or is disproportioned to the offence for which it is inflicted, it is an assault; Vanvactor v. State, 113 Ind. 276, 15 N. E. 341, 3 Am. St. Rep. 645; State v. Stafford, 113 N. C. 635, 18 S. E. 256; Spear v. State (Tex.) 25 S. W. 125. The punishment must be for some specific offence which the pupil has committed, and which he knows he is punished for; State v. Mizner, 50 Ia. 145, 32 Am. Rep. 128. If a person over the age of 21 voluntarily attends school, he thereby waives any privilege which his age confers, and may be punished for misbehavior as any other pupils; State v. Mizner, 45 Ia. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 769. A teacher has no right, however, to punish a child for neglecting or refusing to study certain branches from which the parents of the child have requested that it might be excused, or which they have forbidden it to pursue, if those facts are known to the teacher. The proper remedy in such a case is to exclude the pupil from the school; State v. Mizner, 50 Ia. 145, 32 Am. Rep. 128; Morrow v. Wood, 35 Wis. 59, 17 Am. Rep. 471.

The teacher has in his favor the presumption that he has only done his duty, in addition to the general presumption of innocence; Vanvactor v. State, 113 Ind. 276, 15 N. E. 341, 3 Am. St. Rep. 645; State v. Mizner, 50 Ia. 145, 32 Am. Rep. 128; and in determining the reasonableness of the punishment, the judgment of the teacher as to what was required by the situation should have weight; Vanvactor v. State, 113 Ind. 276, 15 N. E. 341, 3 Am. St. Rep. 645. When a proper instrument has been used, the character of the chastisement, as regards its cruelty or excess, must be determined by considering the nature of the offence for which it was inflicted, the age, physical and mental condition, as well as the personal attributes of the pupil, and the deportment of the teacher; Vanvactor v. State, 113 Ind. 276, 15 N. E. 341, 3 Am. St. Rep. 645; Dowlen v. State, 14 Tex. App. 61; and since the legitimate object of chastisement is to inflict punishment by the pain which it causes, as well as the degradation it implies, it does not follow that chastisement was cruel or excessive because pain was caused or abrasions of the skin resulted from the use of a switch by the teacher; Vanvactor v. State, 113 Ind. 276, 15 N. E. 341, 3 Am. St. Rep. 645.

A teacher will be liable for prosecution, if he inflict such punishment as produces or threatens lasting mischief, or if he inflict punishment, not in the honest performance of duty, but under the pretext of duty to gratify malice; State v. Pendergrass, 19 N. C. 365, 31 Am. Dec. 416; State v. Long, 117 N. C. 791, 23 S. E. 431. But a charge to the jury that "malice means bad temper, high temper, quick temper; and if the injury was inflicted from malice, as above defined, then they should convict the defendant," is erroneous; for malice may exist without temper, and may not exist although the act be done while under the influence of temper, bad, high or quick. General malice, or malice against all mankind, "is wickedness, a disposition to do wrong, a black and diabolical heart, regardless of social duty, and fatally bent on mischief." Particular malice is "ill-will, grudge, a desire to be revenged on a particular person." This distinction should be explained to the jury, and the term "malice" should be accurately defined; State v. Long, 117 N. C. 791, 23 S. E. 431. See BATTERY; MENTAL SUFFERING; CORRECTION; SCHOOL; WHIPPING.

ASSAY. See ANNUAL ASSAY.

ASSAY OFFICE. An establishment, or department, in which the manipulations attending the assay of bullion and coins are conducted.

Assay offices are from time to time established by law at various points throughout the country, usually in connection with the branch mints, though the main assay office is in New York. R. S. § 3553 provides that the business of the assay office at New York shall be in all respects similar to that of the mints, except that bars only, and not coin, shall be manufactured therein; and no metals shall be purchased for minor coinage. All bullion intended by the depositor to be converted into coins of the United States, and silver bullion purchased for coinage, when assayed, parted, and refined, and its net value certified, shall be transferred to the mint at Philadelphia, under such directions as shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the expense of the contingent fund of the mint, and shall be there coined, and the proceeds returned to the assay office.

Sec. 3558 provides that the business of the mint at Denver, while conducted as an assay office, that of the assay office at Boise City, and that of any other assay offices hereafter established, shall be confined to the receipt of gold and silver bullion, for melting and assaying, to be returned to depositors of the same, in bars, with the weight and fineness stamped thereon.

The assay office is also subject to the laws and regulations applied to the mint; R. S. § 3562.

ASSECURATION. In European Law. Assurance; insurance of a vessel, freight, or cargo. Opposition to the decree of Grenoble. Ferrière.

ASSECURATOR. An insurer.

ASSEMBLY. The meeting of a number of persons in the same place. An assembly of persons would seem to mean three or more. 40 S. J. 481.

Political assemblies are those required by the constitution and laws: for example, the general assembly, which includes the senate and house of representatives. The meeting of the electors of the president and vice-president of the United States may also be called an assembly.

Popular assemblies are those where the people meet to deliberate upon their rights; these are guaranteed by the constitution. U. S. Const. Amend. art. 1.

Unlawful assembly is the meeting of three or more persons to do an unlawful act, although they may not carry their purpose into execution. Cl. Cr. Law. 341.

It differs from a riot or rout, because in each of the latter cases there is some act done besides the simple meeting. See State v. Stalcup, 23 N. C. 30, 25 Am. Dec. 732; 9 C. & P. 81, 431; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 535; 2 Id. § 1256; MEETING.

ASSENT. Approval of something done. An undertaking to do something in compliance with a request.

In strictness, assent is to be distinguished from consent, which denotes a willingness that something about to be done, be done; acceptance, compliance with, or receipt of, something offered; ratification, rendering valid something done without authority; and approval, an expression of satisfaction with some act done for the benefit of another beside the party approving. But in practice the term is often used in the sense of acceptance and approval. Thus, an offer is said to be assented to, although properly an offer and acceptance complete an agreement. It is apprehended that this confusion has arisen from the fact that a request, assent, and concurrence of the party requesting complete a contract as fully as an offer and acceptance. Thus, it is said there must be a request on one side, and assent on the other, in every contract; 5 Bingh. N. C. 75; and this assent becomes a promise enforceable by the party requesting, when he has done anything to entitle him to the right. Assent thus becomes in reality (so far as it is assent merely, and not acceptance) an offer made in response to a request. Assent and approval, as applied to acts of parliament and of congress, have become confounded from the fact that the bills of parliament were originally requests from parliament to the king. See 1 Bla. Com. 183.

Express assent is that which is openly declared. Implied assent is that which is presumed by law.

Unless express dissent is shown, acceptance of what it is for a person's benefit to take, is presumed, as in the case of a conveyance of land; 3 B. & Ald. 31; Harrison v. Trustees, 12 Mass. 461; Pearse v. Owens, 3 N. C. 234; Treadwell v. Bulkley, 4 Day (Conn.) 395, 4 Am. Dec. 225; Jackson v. Bodle, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 184; Church v. Gilman, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 656, 30 Am. Dec. 82; the assent (or acceptance) of the grantee to the delivery of a deed by a person other than the grantor, vests the title in him from the time of the delivery by the grantor to that third person; O'Kelly v. O'Kelly, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 436; Hulick v. Scovil, 4 Gilm. (Ill.) 176; Buffum v. Green, 5 N. H. 71, 20 Am. Dec. 562; Belden v. Carter, 4 Day (Conn.) 66, 4 Am. Dec. 185; Jackson v. Bodle, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 187; Wesson v. Stephens, 37 N. C. 557; 5 B. & C. 671; a devise which draws after it no charge or risk of loss, is presumed to have been accepted by the devisee; Brown v. Wood, 17 Mass. 73; Hannah v. Swarner, 8 Watts (Pa.) 9, 34 Am. Dec. 442.

Assent must be to the same thing done or offered in the same sense; Matlock v. Thompson, 18 Ala. 605; Keller v. Ybarru, 3 Cal. 147; Eliason v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 225, 4 L. Ed. 556; 5 M. & W. 575; it must comprehend the whole of the proposition, must be exactly equal to its extent and provisions, and must not qualify them by any new matter; 5 M. & W. 535; Slaymaker v. Irwin, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 369; Vassar v. Camp, 11 N. Y. 441.

In general, when an assignment is made to one for the benefit of creditors, the assent of the assignee will be presumed; Skipwith's

Ex'r v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh (Va.) 272, 281, 31 Am. Dec. 642. But see Crosby v. Hillyer, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 280; Welch v. Sackett, 12 Wis. 243. See ACCEPTANCE; ACCORD; AGREEMENT; CONTRACT.

ASSERT. To state as true; declare; maintain. To assert against another has probably a prima facie meaning of a contradiction of him, but the context or circumstances may show that it connotes a criminatory charge; 7 L. J. Ex. 268.

ASSERTORY OATH. See OATH.

ASSESS. To rate or fix the proportion which every person has to pay of any particular tax. To tax. To adjust the shares of a contribution by several towards a common beneficial object according to the benefit received. To fix the value of; to fix the amount of.

As used in a covenant to pay rates, etc., "assessed" means "reckoned on the value." 66 L. J. Ch. 353; [1897] 1 Ch. 633.

ASSESSMENT. Determining the value of a person's property or occupation for the purpose of levying a tax.

Determining the share of a tax to be paid by each individual.

Laying a tax.

Adjusting the shares of a contribution by several towards a common beneficial object according to the benefit received.

An assessment is an official estimate of the sums which are to constitute the basis of an apportionment of a tax between the individual subjects of taxation within the district. It does not of itself lay the charge upon either person or property, but is a step preliminary thereto, and which is essential to the apportionment; Evansville & I. R. Co. v. Hays, 118 Ind. 214, 20 N. E. 736. As the word is more commonly employed, an assessment consists in the two processes of listing the persons, property, etc., to be taxed, and of estimating the sums which are to be the guide in an apportionment of the tax between them; City of Chicago v. Fishburn, 189 Ill. 367, 59 N. E. 791; Pomeroy Coal Co. v. Emlen, 44 Kan. 123, 24 Pac. 340; State v. R. Co., 54 S. C. 564, 32 S. E. 691. To assess a tax is to determine what a taxpayer shall contribute to the public; and to levy a tax is to make a record of this determination and to extend the same against his property; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Klein, 52 Neb. 258, 71 N. W. 1069.

A local assessment can only be levied upon land. It cannot, as a tax can, be made a personal liability of the taxpayer. A tax is levied over a whole state, or a political subdivision. A local assessment is levied on property situated in a district created for the express purpose of the levy, and possessing no other existence than to be the thing on which the levy is made. A tax is a continuing burden; a local assessment is exceptional both as to time and locality; it is brought into being to accomplish a particular purpose. A tax is levied, collected, and administered by a public agency; a local assessment is made by an authority ad extra. Yet it is like a tax in that it is imposed under an authority derived from the legislature. It is like a tax in that it must be levied for a public purpose, and must be apportioned by some reasonable rule. It is unlike a tax in that the proceeds must be expended in an improvement from which a benefit, clearly exceptive and plainly perceived, must enure to the property upon which it is imposed; Town of Macon v. Patty, 57 Miss. 378, 34 Am. Rep. 451 (a leading case).

Though local assessments are laid under the taxing power, and are, in a certain sense, taxes, yet they are a peculiar class of taxes, and not within the meaning of that term as it is usually employed; Mayor, etc., of Birmingham v. Klein, 89 Ala. 461, 7 South. 386, 8 L. R. A. 369; Holley v. County of Orange, 106 Cal. 420, 39 Pac. 790; Nichols v. City of Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 636; City Council of Augusta v. Murphey, 79 Ga. 101, 3 S. E. 326; Dempster v. Chicago, 175 Ill. 278, 51 N. E. 710; Board of Com'rs of Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124; Gosnell v. City of Louisville, 104 Ky. 201, 46 S. W. 722; Jones v. City of Boston, 104 Mass. 461; Kansas City v. Bacon, 147 Mo. 259, 48 S. W. 860; Mann v. Jersey City, 24 N. J. L. 662; City of Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 14 S. E. 521, 17 L. R. A. 330; Raymond v. City of Cleveland, 42 Ohio St. 522; Beaumont v. Wilkes-Barre City, 142 Pa. 198, 21 Atl. 888; Heller v. City of Milwaukee, 96 Wis. 134, 70 N. W. 1111; as where a mining lease required a lessee to pay taxes, duties and imposts on coal mined, the mining improvements, and the surface and coal land itself, it was held not to require him to pay municipal assessments for paving a street or constructing a sewer; Pettibone v. Smith, 150 Pa. 118, 24 Atl. 693, 17 L. R. A. 423; and a devise requiring the life tenant to pay all necessary taxes on the property was held not to include assessments for sewers and curbing; Chambers v. Chambers, 20 R. I. 370, 39 Atl. 243; Chamberlin v. Gleason, 163 N. Y. 214, 57 N. E. 487. But "taxes" was held to include a sewer assessment in an agreement to convey a good title to land free from all mortgage encumbrances, taxes and mechanic's liens; Williams v. Monk, 179 Mass. 22, 60 N. E. 394.

The power to make special assessments for public improvements is within the taxing power of the state; People v. Mayor, etc., of Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266, note; People v. Pitt, 169 N. Y. 521, 62 N. E. 662, 58 L. R. A. 372. The authority may be exercised directly, or it may be left to local boards or bodies; In re Piper, 32 Cal. 530; Kelly

v. Chadwick, 104 La. 719, 29 South. 293; People v. Buffalo, 147 N. Y. 675, 42 N. E. 344 (where assessors and not common council were authorized to fix the district of assessment for river dredging); but in the latter case the determination will be by a body possessing, for the purpose, legislative power, and whose action must be as conclusive as if taken by the legislature itself; Cooley, Taxation [3d ed.] 1207, where it is said the two methods of apportionment between which a choice is usually made are: 1. An assessment made by assessors or commissioners, appointed for the purpose under legislative authority, who are to view the estates and levy the expense in proportion to the benefits which, in their opinion, the estates respectively will receive from the work proposed. 2. An assessment by some definite standard fixed upon by the legislature itself, which is applied to estates by a measurement of length, quantity, or value.

An assessment will be upheld wherever it is not obvious from the nature and location of the property involved, the district prescribed, the condition and character of the improvement, or the cost and relative value of the property to the assessment, that the method adopted has resulted in imposing a burden in substantial excess of the benefits, or disproportionate, within the district, as between owners; King v. Portland, 184 U. S. 69, 22 Sup. Ct. 290, 46 L. Ed. 431, affirming id., 38 Or. 402, 63 Pac. 2, 55 L. R. A. 812; Weber v. Reinhard, 73 Pa. 373, 13 Am. Rep. 747; Jones v. City of Boston, 104 Mass. 461; Ahern v. Board of Improvement Dist. No. 3, 69 Ark. 63, 61 S. W. 575; Simpson v. Kansas City, 46 Kan. 438, 26 Pac. 721; City of Chicago v. Baer, 41 Ill. 306; State v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227.

A principle of assessment is void if it is not based upon benefits to the property assessed, and the assessment limited to the benefits; Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443; Lee v. Rugles, 62 Ill. 427; In re Application for Drainage of Lands between Lower Chatham and Little Falls, 35 N. J. L. 497; In re City of New York, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 452; Gilmore v. Hentig, 33 Kan. 174, 5 Pac. 781; Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155, 24 Am. Rep. 535; Allegheny City v. R. Co., 138 Pa. 375, 21 Atl. 763; Hutcheson v. Storrie, 92 Tex. 688, 51 S. W. 848, 45 L. R. A. 289, 71 Am. St. Rep. 884; Adams v. City of Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 57 N. E. 114, 49 L. R. A. 797, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484; Cowley v. City of Spokane, 99 Fed. 840. That the cost of a local improvement may be assessed without regard to benefit is held in some jurisdictions; In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 296, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106; Weeks v. City of Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242, where the power to impose such burdens is placed upon a constitutional recognition of the power to make assessments as distinguished from taxation. It was held in In re Kingman, 153 Mass. 566, 27 N. E. 778, 12 L. R. A. 417, that assessments for public improvement need not be in proportion to the benefits. In Iowa all local assessments are based on the simple ground that the object is public, and that the system of taxing abutting lots secures such a just distribution of burdens as to be within the rule requiring uniformity of taxation; Morrison v. Hershire, 32 Ia. 271.

Front Foot Rule. The apportionment of the entire cost of a pavement upon abutting lots according to frontage, without any preliminary hearing as to benefits, may be authorized by the legislature, and this will not constitute a taking without due process of law; French v. Pav. Co., 181 U. S. 324, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879. This case and the other cases reported in the same volume all involved the constitutionality of acts creating special taxing districts and providing for assessing the costs of local improvements upon abutting property, in proportion to their frontage. The opinions were delivered in all of them by Mr. Justice Shiras; Harlan, White and McKenna, JJ., dissenting.

In Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616, an assessment of certain real estate in New Orleans for draining swamps was resisted in the state courts, and the case came into the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that the proceeding deprived the owner of his property without due process of law. The origin and history of this provision of the constitution as found in Magna Carta and in the 5th and the 14th amendments were considered; the cases of Murray v. Imp. Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L. Ed. 372, and McMillen v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 37, 24 L. Ed. 335, were approved; and it was held that "neither the corporate agency by which the work is done, the excessive price which the statute allows therefor, nor the relative importance of the work to the value of the land assessed, nor the fact that the assessment is made before the work is done, nor that the assessment is unequal as regards the benefits conferred, nor that personal judgments are rendered for the amount assessed, are matters in which the state authorities are controlled by the federal constitution." And to the same effect, French v. Pav. Co., 181 U. S. 324, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879, where the question involved was the constitutionality of the apportionment of the cost of a street pavement upon the lots of abutters.

There is a wide difference between a tax or assessment prescribed by a legislative body, and one imposed by a municipal corporation. And the difference is still wider between an act making the assessment, and the action of mere functionaries acting under municipal ordinances; Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 52, 18 Sup. Ct.

521, 42 L. Ed. 943, where the legislation in question was that of Congress, and was considered in the light of the conclusion that the United States possesses complete jurisdiction both of a political and municipal character. There a comprehensive system regulating the supply of water and the erection and maintenance of reservoirs and water mains was established, and of it every property owner of the District of Columbia was presumed to have notice. Accordingly, it was held that, when Congress enacted that thereafter assessments for laying water mains be levied on a front foot basis against all abutting lots, such act must be deemed conclusive alike of the question of the necessity of the work and of its benefits to abutting property, and that a property owner could not be heard to complain that he was not notified of the creation of such a system, or consulted as to the probable cost thereof.

The question of special benefit and the property to which it extends is a question of fact, and when the legislature determines it in a case within its general power, its decision is final; Spencer v. Merchant, 100 N. Y. 585, 3 N. E. 682. The courts cannot review its discretion. Where a tax or assessment is imposed by a direct exercise of the legislative power, calling for no inquiry into the weight of evidence, nor for anything in the nature of judicial examination, no notice to the owner is required; Hagar v. Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569. But where an assessment is imposed upon property according to its value to be ascertained by assessors upon evidence, such officers act judicially; Williams v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 547, 25 L. Ed. 708; and notice and opportunity to be heard are necessary; id.

Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443, was not intended, it is said, to overrule Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 966, 42 L. Ed. 270, or Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 18 Sup. Ct. 521, 42 L. Ed. 943, both of these cases being cited in the opinion in the former case, and declared not to be inconsistent with the conclusion there reached. Special facts showing an abuse or disregard of the law, resulting in an actual deprivation of property, may be ground for applying to a court of equity; and this was thought by a majority of the Supreme Court to have been the case in Norwood v. Baker, supra, per Shiras, J., in Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371, 385, 21 Sup. Ct. 616, 45 L. Ed. 900.

The legislative authority in respect to assessment districts is sometimes exercised by making several districts for a single work, as in case of street improvements, a statute may make each street or part of a street a taxing district; Hilliard v. City of Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738. Where unconnected sections of a street were opened, such sections were held separate streets, and the cost of each chargeable on the property benefited; In re Opening One Hundred and Sixty-Seventh St., 68 Hun 158, 22 N. Y. Supp. 604; Bacon v. City of Savannah, 86 Ga. 301, 12 S. E. 580. Where a street is of different widths, it may be divided into as many sections as there are different widths, and the property on each section be assessed for the cost thereof; Findlay v. Frey, 51 Ohio St. 390, 38 N. E. 114. The improvement of several streets may be treated as one work for the purposes of a special assessment and the whole work apportioned by uniform rule throughout one district; Parker v. Challiss, 9 Kan. 155; Arnold v. Cambridge, 106 Mass. 352; Litchfield v. Vernon, 41 N. Y. 123. The legislature may create a city boundary, or designate any other boundary, for a local taxing district, without reference to existing civil or political districts; and a city, as such a district, may tax property within its limits which it would not be able to tax for municipal purposes only; Henderson Bridge Co. v. City of Henderson, 90 Ky. 498, 14 S. W. 493; or it may create tax districts for road purposes without regard to the boundaries of counties, townships, or municipalities; Board of Com'rs of Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124; Street Lighting Dist. No. 1 v. Drummond, 63 N. J. L. 493, 43 Atl. 1061; for the construction and maintenance of a bridge across a river, several towns may be created a bridge and highway district; State v. Williams, 68 Conn. 131, 35 Atl. 24, 421, 48 L. R. A. 465. See Cooley, Taxation (3d ed.) 238. Taxing districts may be as numerous as the purposes for which the taxes are levied; Reelfoot Lake Levee Dist. v. Dawson, 97 Tenn. 151, 36 S. W. 1041, 34 L. R. A. 725.

Of Damages. Fixing the amount of damages to which the prevailing party in a suit is entitled.

It may be done by the court through its proper officer, the clerk or prothonotary, where the assessment is a mere matter of calculation, but must be by a jury in other cases. See DAMAGES; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In Insurance. An apportionment made in general average upon the various articles and interests at risk, according to their value at the time and place of being in safety, for contribution for damages and sacrifices purposely made, and expenses incurred for escape from impending common peril. 2 Phill. Ins. c. xv.

It is also made upon premium notes given by the members of mutual fire insurance companies, constituting their capital, and being a substitute for the investment of the paid up stock of a stock company; the liability to such assessments being regulated by the charter and the by-laws; May, Ins. § 549; Herkimer County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Full- er. 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 374; New England Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Belknap, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 140; Atlantic Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sanders, 36 N. H. 252; Susquehanna Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Leary, 136 Pa. 499, 20 Atl. 502, 505. A member of a mutual insurance company, who has paid something on a premium note, can be assessed for further losses to the face of the note only; Davis v. Parcher & Stewart Co., 52 Wis. 488, 52 N. W. 771. The right to assess is strictly construed, the notes being merely conditional promises to pay; Tesson v. Ins. Co., 40 Mo. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 293; American Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 19 Ia. 502; Devendorf v. Beardsley, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 656; May, Ins. § 557. As to assessments on corporate stock, see STOCK.

ASSESSMENT DISTRICTS. See ASSESSMENT.

ASSESSORS. In Civil and Scotch Law. Persons skilled in law, selected to advise the judges of the inferior courts. Bell, Dict.; Dig. 1. 22; Cod. 1. 51.

As to admiralty practice, see NAUTICAL ASSESSORS.

ASSETS. All the stock in trade, cash, and all available property belonging to a merchant or company.

The property in the hands of an heir, executor, administrator, or trustee, which is legally or equitably chargeable with the obligations which such heir, executor, administrator, or other trustee is, as such, required to discharge.

Assets enter mains. Assets in hand. Such property as at once comes to the executor or other trustee, for the purpose of satisfying claims against him as such. Termes de la Ley.

Equitable assets. Such as can be reached only by the aid of a court of equity, and which are to be divided, pari passu, among all the creditors; 2 Fonblanque 401; Willis, Trust. 118.

Legal assets. Such as constitute the fund for the payment of debts according to their legal priority.

Assets per descent. That portion of the ancestor's estate which descends to the heir, and which is sufficient to charge him, as far as it goes, with the specialty debts of his ancestors; 2 Williams, Ex. (7th Am. ed.) *1553.

Personal assets. Goods and personal chattels to which the executor or administrator is entitled.

Real assets. Such as descend to the heir, as an estate in fee-simple.

In the United States, generally, by statute, all the property of a decedent, real and personal, is liable for his debts, and is to be applied as follows, when no statute prescribes a different order of application, exhausting all the assets of each class before proceeding to the next: First, the personal estate not specifically bequeathed; second, real estate devised or ordered to be sold for the payment of debts; third, real estate descended but not charged with debts; fourth, real estate devised, charged generally with the payment of debts; fifth, general pecuniary legacies pro rata; sixth, real estate devised, not charged with debts; 4 Kent 421; 2 Wh. & T. Lead. Cas. 72.

With regard to the distinction between realty and personalty in this respect, growing crops go to the administrator; Penhalow v. Dwight, 7 Mass. 34, 5 Am. Dec. 21; Kain v. Fisher, 6 N. Y. 597; Cheney v. Roodhouse, 135 Ill. 257, 25 N. E. 1019; he is entitled to a crop of cotton, the cultivation of which was practically completed at intestate's death, although it was harvested and sold by the heirs; Marx v. Nelms, 95 Ala. 304, 10 South. 551. See Wright v. Watson, 96 Ala. 536, 11 South. 634; so do nurseries, though not trees in general; Chapman v. City of Lowell, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 380; as do bricks in a kiln; Taunton Copper Co. v. Ins. Co., 22 Pick. (Mass.) 110; so do chattels real, as interests for years and mortgages; and hence the administrator must bring the action if the mortgagor die before foreclosing; Lewis' Heirs v. Ringo, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 249; so does rent, provided the intestate dies before it is due; oil produced after testator's death and accruing as royalty, being the consideration for the lease, is not of the corpus but a part of the income of the estate; In re Woodburn's Estate, 138 Pa. 606, 21 Atl. 16, 21 Am. St. Rep. 932. Fixtures go to the heir; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 99; Jackson v. Twentyman, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 137, 7 L. Ed. 374; Swift v. Thompson, 9 Conn. 67, 21 Am. Dec. 718. In copyrights and patents the administrator has right enough to get them extended and beyond the customary time; Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. (U. S.) 646, 11 L. Ed. 1141. Where land is sold in partition, and one dies before the proceeds are distributed, his share passes as personalty to his administrator; State v. Harper, 54 Mo. App. 286. Land which an executor is directed to sell is personalty; 6 Ves. 520; 8 Ves. 547; Thomman's Estate, 161 Pa. 444, 29 Atl. 84; but a naked discretionary power of sale will not work a conversion until it is exercised; Sheridan v. Sheridan, 136 Pa. 14, 19 Atl. 1068; Darlington v. Darlington, 160 Pa. 65, 28 Atl. 503; In re Pyott's Estate, 160 Pa. 441, 28 Atl. 915, 921. Where the right of eminent domain has been exercised it converts the land into personalty in Pennsylvania; Hough's Estate, 3 D. R. Pa. 187; but not in New Jersey; Wetherill v. Hough, 52 N. J. Eq. 683, 29 Atl. 592. The wife's paraphernalia cannot be taken from her, in England, for the benefit of the children and heirs, but may be for creditors. In the United States, generally, the wearing apparel of widows and minors is retained by them, and is not assets. So among things reserved is the widow's quarantine, i. e. forty days of food and clothing; Griswold v. Chandler, 5 N. H. 495; Washburn v. Hale, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 430.

A claim against the United States is not a local asset in the District of Columbia; King v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 529. See Woerner, Am. L. of Admn.

See MARSHALLING OF ASSETS.

ASSEVERATION. The proof which a man gives of the truth of what he says, by appealing to his conscience as a witness.

It differs from an oath in this, that by the latter he appeals to God as a witness of the truth of what he says, and invokes him, as the avenger of falsehood and perfidy, to punish him if he speak not the truth. See AFFIRMATION; OATH.

ASSIGN. To make or set over to another. 2 Bla. Com. 326; Watkinson v. Inglesby, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 391.

To appoint; to select; to allot. 3 Bla. Com. 58.

To set forth; to point out; as, to assign errors. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 19.

ASSIGNATION. In French Law, a writ of summons.

ASSIGNEE. One to whom an assignment has been made.

Assignee in fact is one to whom an assignment has been made in fact by the party having the right.

Assignee in law is one in whom the law vests the right; as, an executor or administrator. See ASSIGNMENT.

ASSIGNMENT (Law Lat. assignatio, from assigno,—ad and signum,—to mark for; to appoint to one; to appropriate to).

A transfer or making over to another of the whole of any property, real or personal, in possession or in action, or of any estate or right therein.

A transfer by writing, as distinguished from one by delivery.

The transfer of the interest one has in lands and tenements, and more particularly applied to the unexpired residue of a term or estate for life or years; Cruise, Dig. tit. xxxii. (Deed) c. vii, § 15; 1 Steph. Com. 507. The deed by which the transfer is made is also called an assignment; Comyns, Dig.; Bacon, Abr.; La. Civ. Code, art. 2612; Angell, Assign.; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 78, 85; 4 Cruise, Dig. 160.

What may be assigned. Every demand connected with a right of property, real or personal, is assignable. Every estate and interest in lands and tenements may be assigned, as also every present and certain estate or interest in incorporeal hereditaments, even though the interest be future, including a term of years to commence at a subsequent period; for the interest is vested in presenti, though only to take effect in futuro; Co. Litt. 46 b; rent to grow due (but not that in arrear, Demarest v. Willard, 8 Cow.

[N. Y.] 206); a right of entry where the breach of the condition ipso facto terminates the estate; Gwynn v. Jones' Lessee, 2 G. & J. (Md.) 1173; Ensign v. Kellogg, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 1; a right to betterments; Lombard v. Ruggles, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 62; the right to cut trees, which have been sold on the grantor's land; Olmstead v. Niles, 7 N. H. 522; Pease v. Gibson, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 81; Emerson v. Fisk, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 200, 19 Am. Dec. 206; Kent v. Kent, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 569; McCoy v. Herbert, 9 Leigh (Va.) 548, 33 Am. Dec. 256; 11 Ad. & E. 34; a cause of action for cutting timber on another's land; Webber v. Quaw, 46 Wis. 118, 49 N. W. 830; a right in lands which may be perfected by occupation; Smith v. Rankin, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 1, 26 Am. Dec. 213; Cook v. Shute, Cooke (Tenn.) 67. But no right of entry or re-entry can be assigned; Eskridge v. McClure, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 84; Littleton § 347; Greenby v. Wilcocks, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 3 Am. Dec. 379; Gwyn v. Wellborn, 18 N. C. 319; nor a naked power; though it is otherwise where it is coupled with an interest; 2 Mod. 317.

To make an assignment valid at law, the subject of it must have an existence, actual or potential, at the time of the assignment; Needles v. Needles, 7 Ohio St. 432, 70 Am. Dec. 85; 15 Mees. & W. 110; Moody v. Wright, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 17, 46 Am. Dec. 706; Skipper v. Stokes, 42 Ala. 255, 94 Am. Dec. 646. But courts of equity will support an assignment not only of interests in action and contingency, but of things which have no present, actual, or potential existence, but rest in mere possibility only; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. (13th ed.) §§ 1040 b, 1055; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 527; Smedes v. Bank, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 380; as an heir's possibility of inheritance; Fitzgerald v. Vestal, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 258; see 1 Ch. Rep. 29; Bacon v. Bonham, 33 N. J. Eq. 614; East Lewisburg Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Marsh, 91 Pa. 96; Manderline v. Welch, 5 Wheat. 283, 5 L. Ed. 87. "An assignment cannot at law pass future property, but it may be made effectual against future property on the ground that a court of equity will in a suitable case enforce it as a contract." 36 Ch. D. 348, 351. "It has long been settled that future property, possibilities and expectancies are assignable in equity for value. The mode * * * is absolutely immaterial provided the intention of the parties is clear;" 13 A. C. 523.

The assignment of personal property is chiefly interesting in regard to choses in action and as to its effect in cases of insolvency and bankruptcy.

A chose in action cannot be transferred at common law; 10 Co. 43; Litt. 266 a; Thalhimer v. Brinckerhoff, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 623, 15 Am. Dec. 308; Greenby v. Wilcocks, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 3 Am. Dec. 379; 1 Cra. (U. S.) 367; Pillsbury v. Mitchell, 5 Wis. 17; Chapman v. Holmes' Ex'rs, 10 N. J. L.

20. But the assignee may sue in the assignor's name, and the assignment will be considered valid in equity. See infra.

In equity, as well as at law, some choses in action are not assignable on the ground that they are against public policy, as an officer's pay, or commission; 2 Anstr. 533; 1 Ball & B. Ch. 387; 1 Swaust. 74; Schwenk v. Wyckoff, 46 N. J. Eq. 560, 20 Atl. 259, 9 L. R. A. 221, 19 Am. St. Rep. 438; or the salary of a judge; Morrison v. Deaderick, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 342; 5 Moore, P. C. C. 219; contra, State v. Hastings, 15 Wis. 78; or of unearned pay of public officers generally; Bliss v. Lawrence, 58 N. Y. 442, 17 Am. Rep. 273; Bowery Nat. Bank of New York v. Wilson, 122 N. Y. 478, 25 N. E. 855, 9 L. R. A. 706, 19 Am. St. Rep. 507; Inhabitants of Wayne Township v. Cahill, 49 N. J. L. 144, 6 Atl. 621; Schloss v. Hewlett, 81 Ala. 266, 1 South. 263 (but see contra, Johnson v. Pace, 78 Ill. 143; Manly v. Bitzer, 91 Ky. 596, 16 S. W. 464, 34 Am. St. Rep. 242; Brackett v. Blake, 7 Metc. [Mass.] 335, 41 Am. Dec. 442; and also August v. Crane, 28 Misc. Rep. 549, 59 N. Y. Supp. 583; and Ciples v. Blair, Rice Eq. [S. C.] 60, where costs and fees were distinguished from salary and held assignable); or claims for fishing or other bounties from the government; or rights of action for fraud or tort as a right of action for assault; or in trover; Gardner v. Adams, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 297 (aliter of a right of action in replevin; Foy v. R. Co., 24 Barb. [N. Y.] 382); or of the sale of fish not yet caught; Low v. Pew, 108 Mass. 350, 11 Am. Rep. 357; assignment by a prosecuting attorney; Holt v. Thurman, 111 Ky. 84, 63 S. W. 280, 98 Am. St. Rep. 399; or by a sheriff to secure a promissory note; Bowery Nat. Bank v. Wilson, 122 N. Y. 478, 25 N. E. 855, 9 L. R. A. 706, 19 Am. St. Rep. 507; a cause of action for deceit is assignable; Dean v. Chandler, 44 Mo. App. 338; and it seems that all rights of action which would survive to the personal representatives, may be assigned; Butler v. R. Co., 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 110; Patten v. Wilson, 34 Pa. 299; Jordan v. Gillen, 44 N. H. 424; Walton v. Rafel, 7 Misc. 603, 28 N. Y. Supp. 10; so of a right of action against a common carrier for not delivering goods; Jordan v. Gillen, 44 N. H. 424; or for injury to goods; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Read, 87 Va. 185, 12 S. E. 395. It is well settled that a mere expectancy or possibility is not assignable at law, consequently wages to be earned in the future, not under an existing engagement, but under engagements subsequently to be made, are not assignable; Herbert v. Bronson, 125 Mass. 475; Bell v. Mulholland, 90 Mo. App. 612; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Woodring, 116 Pa. 513, 9 Atl. 58. If there is an existing employment under which it may reasonably be expected that the wages will be earned, then the possibility is coupled with an interest and the wages may be assigned; Rodijkelt v. Andrews, 74 Ohio St. 104, 77 N. E. 747, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564, 6 Ann. Cas. 761; Mallin v. Wenham, 209 Ill. 252, 70 N. E. 564, 65 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 233; Edwards v. Peterson, 80 Me. 367, 14 Atl. 936, 6 Am. St. Rep. 207; Metcalf v. Kincaid, 87 Ia. 443, 54 N. W. 867, 43 Am. St. Rep. 391; Peterson v. Ball, 121 Ia. 544, 97 N. W. 79; Bell v. Mulholland, 90 Mo. App. 612; Kane v. Clough, 36 Mich. 436, 24 Am. Rep. 599; Manly v. Bitzer, 91 Ky. 596, 16 S. W. 464, 34 Am. St. Rep. 242; Schilling v. Mullen, 55 Minn. 122, 56 N. W. 586, 43 Am. St. Rep. 475; Augur v. Packing Co., 39 Conn. 536; Garland v. Harrington, 51 N. H. 409; Mulhall v. Quinn, 1 Gray (Mass.) 105, 61 Am. Dec. 414; and this is true though the employment is for no definite period and may be terminated at any time by either party; Thayer v. Kelley, 28 Vt. 19, 65 Am. Dec. 220. The distinction between the two classes of cases is well illustrated where a workman assigned all the wages he would earn in a year from his then employer, and having left that employment for two months and afterwards returned to it, the wages of the second employment did not pass, being considered as a mere possibility; O'Keefe v. Allen, 20 R. I. 414, 39 Atl. 752, 78 Am. St. Rep. 884. It has been suggested that to prevent the assignment of future earnings is in accordance with public policy; Woodring v. R. Co., 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 465; but while that is approved, it is suggested that such a policy must be a matter of legislative intervention; 14 Harv. L. Rev. 379. The assignment by a master in chancery of his unearned fees is void; Shannon v. Bruner, 36 Fed. 147; as is the assignment by an executor of his fees before they are ascertained and fixed; In re Worthington, 141 N. Y. 9, 35 N. E. 929, 23 L. R. A. 97. A cause of action for malicious prosecution is not assignable even after verdict; Lawrence v. Martin, 22 Cal. 174; Butler v. R. Co., 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 110; North v. Turner, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 244; 6 Madd. 59; 2 M. & K. 592; nor is a right to recover damages for false imprisonment; Hunt v. Conrad, 47 Minn. 557, 50 N. W. 614, 14 L. R. A. 512; nor any rights pendente lite. Nor can personal trusts be assigned; Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Min. Co., 127 U. S. 379, 8 Sup. Ct. 1308, 32 L. Ed. 246; as the right of a master in his apprentice; Graham v. Kinder, 11 B. Monr. (Ky.) 60; Davis v. Coburn, 8 Mass. 299; or the duties of a testamentary guardian; Balch v. Smith, 12 N. H. 437; nor a contract for the performance of personal services; Halbert v. Deering, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 9; or one involving a relation of personal confidence; Burck v. Taylor, 152 U. S. 634, 14 Sup. Ct. 696, 38 L. Ed. 578; or one which couples the delegation of a duty with the transfer of a right. This was substantially the ground of the case of Boston

Ice Co. v. Potter, in 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9, where a contract to supply merchandize was held not assignable since "a man has the right to determine with whom he shall contract," which case has been much discussed, and its name coupled with the doctrine declared by it; see 7 Columbia L. Rev. 32; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 424. In England courts have gone farther, holding that a contract was not assignable when the result would be to impose on one party a greater liability than he intended to assume; [1901] 2 K. B. 811, where a contract to supply a small company was held not assignable to a powerful company with larger capital which would require much larger supplies, the court expressly declining to "accept the contention that only those contracts in which personal confidence or ability is involved cannot be assigned." An invention may be transferred by parol; Jones v. Reynolds, 120 N. Y. 213, 24 N. E. 279; every patent or interest therein is assignable; R. S. U. S. § 4898; an assignment of a contingent remainder for a valuable consideration, while void in law, is enforceable in equity; Watson v. Smith, 110 N. C. 6, 14 S. E. 640, 28 Am. St. Rep. 665. An assignment of the proceeds of sale of merchandize to be delivered in the future, where no contract exists requiring such delivery by the assignor, is not valid, even though notice of it was accepted by the assignee, and the amount actually due was not secured from garnishment by a creditor of the assignor; O'Neil v. Kerr Co., 124 Wis. 234, 102 N. W. 573, 70 L. R. A. 338. But a valid assignment may be made of a portion of the contract price of a building contracted to be erected by the assignor, but not yet erected, and such assignment need not be in writing nor accompanied by any transfer of the contract itself; Lanigan's Adm'r v. Currier Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 201, 24 Atl. 505.

In the assignment of a chose in action it is essential that it be delivered; Lewis v. Mason's Adm'r, 84 Va. 731, 10 S. E. 529; Hodenpuhl v. Hines, 160 Pa. 466, 28 Atl. 825; a partial assignment of choses in action is good in equity, although the legal title remains in the assignor; Texas Western Ry. Co. v. Gentry, 69 Tex. 625, 8 S. W. 98; the assignment of a fractional part of a claim is good, where the party who is to pay does not object; Kingsbury v. Burrill, 151 Mass. 199, 24 N. E. 36.

It is "a rule of general jurisprudence that if a person enters into a contract, and, without notice of any assignment, fulfills it to the person with whom he made the contract, he is discharged from his obligation;" L. R. 5 C. P. 594, per Willes, J.

Whether a prior assignment of a chose in action will be protected when no notice of it is given to the subsequent assignee or to the trustee or debtor, is a question somewhat complicated by the adherence of the English courts to a doctrine known as the rule of Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1, adopted also in Loveridge v. Cooper, id. 30. This rule is that an assignment of an equitable interest, or of a chose in action, without notice to the person having legal dominion of the subject matter, will be postponed to one made subsequently, of which notice is given. In applying this rule the English courts have held that inquiry by the later assignee is immaterial; 3 Cl. & Fin. 456; and that it is also immaterial that there was no trustee or person having dominion of the fund to whom the first assignee could give notice; [1904] 2 Ch. 385 (where it was said that "Dearle v. Hall is indisputable law, although many judges have said that they will not extend it"); that knowledge of the first assignment accidentally acquired by the trustee would protect it where there had been no formal notice; L. R. 3 Ch. App. 488; and that, in case of inquiry by the subsequent assignee, the trustee is not bound to answer; [1891] 3 Ch. 82; that notice to one of several trustees was sufficient, he not being the assignor; 4 De G., F. & J. 147; but knowledge of the assignor, being one of the trustees, did not avail in default of notice to the other two; 4 Drew. 635; [1901] 1 Ch. 365, where Cozens-Hardy, J., said: "I do not profess to be able to discover any definite principle upon which the rule in Dearle v. Hall is founded. Nevertheless it must now be recognized as a positive rule, though it is not one to be extended." This rule was recognized as law in [1893] A. C. 369, but it was critically examined and discussed by both L. Ch. Herschell and Lord Macnaghten and it is manifest that nothing short of the rigor of the English observance of the doctrine of stare decisis has maintained its authority.

The rule of the English courts was applied to an assignment of an interest in an English trust, made by one domiciled in New York; [1905] 2 Ch. 117, where the court admitted the validity of the assignment under the lex loci contractus, but considered that the law of the court administering a trust fund should settle the order of payment as between claimants.

The English rule requiring notice to the holder of the legal title or trustee of an assignment of the equitable interest or chose in action, has been followed in Judson v. Corcoran, 17 How. (U. S.) 614, 15 L. Ed. 231; Methven v. Power Co., 66 Fed. 113, 13 C. C. A. 362; Spain v. Hamilton's Adm'r, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 604, 17 L. Ed. 619; Burek v. Taylor, 152 U. S. 634, 14 Sup. Ct. 696, 38 L. Ed. 578; Vanbuskirk v. Ins. Co., 14 Conn. 141, 36 Am. Dec. 473; Phillips' Estate, 205 Pa. 515, 55 Atl. 213, 66 L. R. A. 760, 97 Am. St. Rep. 746; Murdoch v. Finney, 21 Mo. 138 (and see Thomas v. Liebke, 13 Mo. App. 389); Merchants' and Mechanics' Bank of Chicago v. Hewitt, 3 Ia. 93, 66 Am. Dec. 49; Graham Paper Co. v. Pembroke, 124 Cal. 120, 56 Pac. 627, 44 L. R. A. 634, 71 Am. St. Rep. 26; Meier v. Hess, 23 Or. 602, 32 Pac. 755. In other cases the assignment is held to be effectual without notice even against a subsequent assignment of which notice was given; Putnam v. Story, 132 Mass. 205; Gooding v. Riley, 50 N. H. 408; Garland v. Harrington, 51 N. H. 409; Fortunato v. Patten, 147 N. Y. 277, 41 N. E. 572; Central Trust Co. of New York v. Imp. Co., 169 N. Y. 314, 62 N. E. 387. The cases are collected in 1 Perry Trusts, § 438, note. In Clodfelter v. Cox, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 339, 60 Am. Dec. 157, it is said that there is an irreconcilable conflict in the American cases, and though the weight of authority seems to be against the English rule, the latter is considered more reasonable and safe and therefore followed. In a note to 14 Conn. 141, the view of the Tennessee court in that case as to the weight of authority is questioned and it is suggested as more correct to say that "by the preponderance of authority," an assignee of a chose in action without notice is protected against creditors of the assignor but not as against a subsequent assignee for value and in good faith, and this is said to be the English rule properly stated; 36 Am. Dec. 476 note.

The assignment of bills of exchange and promissory notes by general or special endorsement constitutes an exception to the law of transfer of choses in action. When negotiable (i. e., made payable to order), they are transferable by the statute of 3 & 4 Anne; they may then be transferred by endorsement; the holder can sue in his own name, and the equitable defences which might have existed between the promisor and the original promisee are cut out; Bump v. Van Orsdale, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 637, 639; Andrews v. Carr, 26 Miss. 577; Neyfong v. Wells, Hard. (Ky.) 562; where a payee endorses a note to third party adding a guaranty of payment, the contract and guaranty are assignable; Harbord v. Cooper, 43 Minn. 466, 45 N. W. 860. The assignee of a bill of lading has only such rights as the consignee would have had; Haas v. R. Co., 81 Ga. 792, 7 S. E. 629.

An assignee stands in the place of his assignor and takes simply his assignor's rights; Taliaferro v. Bank, 71 Md. 200, 17 Atl. 1036.

The most extensive class of assignments are the general assignments in trust made by insolvent and other debtors for the payment of their debts. These are usually regulated by state statutes.

The right of an insolvent debtor to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors exists at common law, and when good in the state where executed is good in every state; Weider v. Maddox, 66 Tex. 372, 1 S. W. 168, 59 Am. Rep. 617. Where the assignment is valid under the laws of one state it will pass a debt to the assignor due under contract made there with a citizen of another state, though the assignment is void in such other state; O'Neill v. Nagle, 19 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 399.

Voluntary or common law assignments of property in other states will be respected except so far as they come into conflict with the rights of local creditors or with the laws or public policy of the state in which the assignment is sought to be enforced; Barnett v. Kinney, 147 U. S. 476, 13 Sup. Ct. 403, 37 L. Ed. 247. With respect to statutory assignments, the prevailing doctrine is that a conveyance under a state insolvent law operates only upon property within that state and that with respect to property in other states it is given only such effect as the law of such other state would permit; and that in general it must give way to the claims of creditors pursuing their remedies there. It passes no title to real estate in another state. Nor as to personal property will the title acquired by it prevail against the garnishment of a debt due by the resident of another state or the seizure of tangible property therein under the laws of the state where the property is; Barth v. Backus, 140 N. Y. 240, 35 N. E. 425, 23 L. R. A. 47, 37 Am. St. Rep. 545; Rhawn v. Pearce, 110 Ill. 350, 51 Am. Rep. 691; Catlin v. Silver-Plate Co., 123 Ind. 477, 24 N. E. 250, 8 L. R. A. 62, 18 Am. St. Rep. 338; Security Trust Co. v. Dodd, 173 U. S. 624, 19 Sup. Ct. 545, 43 L. Ed. 845; King v. Cross, 175 U. S. 396, 20 Sup. Ct. 131, 44 L. Ed. 211.

A debtor making an assignment for creditors may legally choose his own trustee, and the title passes out of him to them; Nichols v. McEwen, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 65; Wilt v. Franklin, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 514, 2 Am. Dec. 474; Hannah v. Carrington, 18 Ark. 85; Hempstead v. Johnston, 18 Ark. 123, 65 Am. Dec. 458; Vansands v. Miller, 24 Conn. 180. The assent of creditors will ordinarily be presumed; Ashley's Adm'r v. Robinson, 29 Ala. 112, 65 Am. Dec. 387; Eager v. Com., 4 Mass. 183; Sebor v. Armstrong, 4 Mass. 206; De Forest v. Bacon, 2 Conn. 633; North v. Turner, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 244; Copeland v. Wild, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 411.

In some states the statutes provide that the assignment shall be for the benefit of all creditors equally, in others preferences are legal. Independently of bankrupt and insolvent laws, or laws forbidding preferences, priorities and preferences in favor of particular creditors are allowed. Such preference is not considered inequitable, nor is a stipulation that the creditors taking under it shall release the debtor from all further claims; Sebor v. Armstrong, 4 Mass. 206; Doe v. Scribner, 41 Me. 277; Nutter v. Harris, 9 Ind. 88; Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. C. C. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 10,877; Cameron v. Montgomery, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 132; Frazier v. Fredericks, 24 N. J. L. 162; Billings v. Billings, 2 Cal. 107, 56 Am. Dec. 319; Cooper v. McClun, 16 Ill. 435; Miller v. Conklin, 17 Ga.

430, 63 Am. Dec. 248; U. S. v. Lenox, 2 Paine, 180, Fed. Cas. No. 15,592; Murray v. Riggs, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 571; Union Bank of Maryland v. Kerr, 7 Md. 88; American Exchange Bank v. Inloes, id. 381; Hatton's Adm'rs v. Jordan, 29 Ala. 266; Haven v. Richardson, 5 N. H. 113; Brooks v. Marbury, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 78, 6 L. Ed. 423; Savings Bank of New Haven v. Bates, 8 Conn. 505; Hicks v. Harris, 26 Miss. 423; Bellamy v. Sheriff, 6 Fla. 62; Nightingale v. Harris, 6 R. I. 328; Lake Shore Banking Co. v. Fuller, 110 Pa. 156, 1 Atl. 731; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670, 10 Sup. Ct. 354, 33 L. Ed. 696; Nordlinger v. Anderson, 123 N. Y. 544, 25 N. E. 992; Van Wyck v. Read, 43 Fed. 716. See PREFERENCES.

How made. It used to be held that the instrument of assignment must be of as high a character and nature as the instrument transferred; but now a parol (usually written) assignment may transfer a deed, if the deed be at the same time delivered; Cannaday v. Shepard, 55 N. C. 224; Jones v. Witter, 13 Mass. 304; Porter v. Bullard, 26 Me. 448; Jackson v. Housel, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 284; Prescott v. Hull, id. 292; Morange v. Edwards, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 414; Onion v. Paul, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 114; Lessee of Bentley's Heirs v. Deforest, 2 Ohio 221; Dürst v. Swift, 11 Tex. 273; 5 Ad. & E. 107; 1 Madd. Ch. 53. When the transfer of personal chattels is made by an instrument as formal as that required in the assignment of an interest in lands, it is commonly called a bill of sale (which see). See as to the distinction, Blank v. German, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 36. In most cases, however, personal chattels are transferred by mere note or memorandum, or, as in the case of negotiable paper, by mere endorsement; Ball v. Larkin, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 555; Ryan v. Maddux, 6 Cal. 247; Field v. Weir, 28 Miss. 56; Worthington v. Curd, 15 Ark. 491. "To constitute an assignment of a chose in action, in equity, no particular form is necessary;" Spain v. Hamilton's Adm'r, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 604, 624, 17 L. Ed. 619. Any binding appropriation of money or property to a particular use is a transfer of ownership; Watson v. Bagaley, 12 Pa. 167, 51 Am. Dec. 595; Fourth Street Nat. Bank v. Yardley, 165 U. S. 634, 17 Sup. Ct. 439, 41 L. Ed. 855; Clark v. Iron Co., 81 Fed. 310, 26 C. C. A. 423. An assignment of a chose in action by parol as security is valid; Union Trust Co. v. Bulkeley, 150 Fed. 510, 80 C. C. A. 328, and so of book accounts to be thereafter earned by the assignor; L. R. 13 App. Cas. 523.

In France an assignment of a debt must be in writing; the registration duty must be paid thereon and formal notice in writing must be served after registration by an officer of the court, called a "huissier." Notice can be replaced by the debtor's formal acknowledgment in a notarial French deed.

This passes a legal title to the debt; [1900] 1 Ch. 602.

The proper technical and operative words in assignment are "assign, transfer, and set over;" but "give, grant, bargain, and sell," or any other words which show the intent of the parties to make a complete transfer, will work an assignment; 13 Sim. 469; 31 Beav. 351; Kimball v. Donald, 20 Mo. 577, 64 Am. Dec. 209.

No consideration is necessary to support the assignment of a term; 1 Mod. 263; McClenahan v. Gwynn, 3 Munf. (Va.) 556. Now, by the statute of frauds, all assignments of chattels real must be made by deed or note in writing, signed by the assigning party or his agent thereunto lawfully authorized by writing; 1 B. & P. 270. If a tenant assigns the whole or a part of an estate for a part of the term, it is a sub-lease, and not an assignment; Patten v. Deshon, 1 Gray (Mass.) 325; Astor v. Miller, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 68; Buckingham v. Granville Alexandria Soc., 2 Ohio 369; 1 Washb. R. P. *327.

Effect of. During the continuance of the assignment, the assignee is liable on all covenants running with the land, but may rid himself of such continuing liability by transfer to a mere beggar; 5 Coke 16; Ans. Contr. 232; 1 B. & P. 21; 1 Sch. & L. 310; 1 Ball & B. 238; Dougl. 56, 183; (but a conveyance to an irresponsible person to avoid paying a ground-rent accruing on the land conveyed was held not to release the original covenantor; American Academy of Music v. Smith, 54 Pa. 130). By the assignment of a right, all its accessories pass with it: for example, the collateral security, or a lien on property, which the assignor of a bond had, will pass with it when assigned; Potts v. Water Power Co., 9 N. J. Eq. 592; Waller v. Tate, 4 B. Monr. (Ky.) 529; Pattison v. Hull, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 747; Eskridge v. McClure, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 84; Boardman v. Hayne, 29 Ia. 339; Willis v. Twambly, 13 Mass. 204; Craig v. Parkis, 40 N. Y. 181, 100 Am. Dec. 469; Coffing v. Taylor, 16 Ill. 457. So, also, what belongs to the thing by the right of accession is assigned with it; Hodges v. Harris, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 360; Horn v. Thompson, 31 N. H. 562.

An assignee for the benefit of creditors takes the property assigned subject to all existing valid liens and equities against the assignor; Helm v. Gilroy, 20 Or. 517, 26 Pac. 851.

The assignee of a chose in action in a court of law must bring the action in the name of the assignor; and everything which might have been shown in defence against the assignor may be used against the assignee; 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 82; Pollard v. Ins. Co., 42 Me. 221; Guerry v. Perryman, 6 Ga. 119; Commercial Bank of Rochester v. Colt, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 506; Sanborn v. Little, 3 N.

H. 539; Norton v. Rose, 2 Wash. (Va.) 233; Pitts v. Holmes, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 92; McJilton v. Love, 13 Ill. 486, 54 Am. Dec. 449; Lyon v. Summers, 7 Conn. 399; Welch v. Mandeville, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 236, 4 L. Ed. 79; In re Brown's Estate, 2 Pa. 463; Hamilton v. Greenwood, 1 Bay (S. C.) 173, 1 Am. Dec. 607; Matheson v. Crain, 1 McCord (S. C.) 219; U. S. v. Sturges, 1 Paine, 525, Fed. Cas. No. 16,414; Patterson v. Atherton, 3 McLean, 147, Fed. Cas. No. 10,822; Robinson v. Marshall, 11 Md. 251; 1 Bisph. Eq. 226; but in many states the assignee of a chose in action may sue in his own name; Smith v. Ry. Co., 23 Wis. 267; Hooker v. Bank, 30 N. Y. 83, 86 Am. Dec. 351; Long v. Heinrich, 46 Mo. 603; it is no objection to suit by an assignee of an account in his name that no consideration for the assignment is shown; Young v. Hudson, 99 Mo. 102, 12 S. W. 632; and where a party assigns her interest in a suit for negligence to her attorneys by way of security, there is no reason why suit should be carried on in her name; Rajnowski v. R. Co., 78 Mich. 681, 44 N. W. 335. In equity the assignee may sue in his own name, but he can only go into equity when his remedy at law fails; 1 Yo. & C. 481; Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 485; Moseley v. Boush, 4 Rand. (Va.) 392; Haskell v. Hilton, 30 Me. 419; Murray v. Lyburn, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441; Spring v. Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 268, 5 L. Ed. 614. Such an assignment is considered as a declaration of trust; Morrison v. Deaderick, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 342; 3 P. Will. 199; Welch v. Mandeville, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 235, 4 L. Ed. 79; but all the equitable defences exist; Rousset v. Ins. Co., 1 Binn. (Pa.) 429; Spring v. Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 268, 5 L. Ed. 614. It has been held that the assignee of a chose in action does not take it subject to equities of third persons of which he had no notice; Himrod v. Bolton, 44 Ill. App. 516.

A valid assignment of a policy of insurance in the broadest legal sense, by consent of the underwriters, by statute, or otherwise, vests in the assignee all the rights of the assignor, legal and equitable, including that of action; but the instrument, not being negotiable in its character, is assignable only in equity, and not even so, if it has, as it sometimes has, a condition to the contrary; Field v. Ins. Co., 3 Md. 244; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 341, 56 Am. Dec. 742; Kingsley v. Ins. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 393; Grosvenor v. Ins. Co., 17 N. Y. 391; Simonton v. McLane's Adm'r, 25 Ala. 353; Folsom v. Ins. Co., 30 N. H. 231; Rison v. Wilkerson, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 565; Pollard v. Ins. Co., 42 Me. 221; Birdsey v. Ins. Co., 26 Conn. 165; State Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 31 Pa. 438; 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 427; Hall v. Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 184, 53 N. W. 727, 18 L. R. A. 135, 32 Am. St. Rep. 497. Where the policy does not provide that an assignment without the consent of the company renders it void, a parol assignment is valid; O'Brien v. Ins. Co., 57 Hun 589, 11 N. Y. Supp. 125. Upon transfer of a policy, in case of loss, the assignee may in some states sue in his own name; Southern Fertilizer Co. v. Reams, 105 N. C. 283, 11 S. E. 467, but this is usually when there is a statutory provision; and if there be none, suit must be in the name of the assignor; 3 Kent 261; Rousset v. Ins. Co., 1 Binn. (Pa.) 429. In marine policies, custom seems to have established a rule different from that of the common law, and to have made policies transferable with the subject matter of insurance; May, Ins. § 377.

Assignments are peculiarly the objects of equity jurisdiction; 9 B. & C. 300; Marbury v. Brooks, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 556, 5 L. Ed. 522; Nicoll v. Mumford, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 529; Phillips v. Prevost, id. 205; Howell v. Baker, id. 119; Hays v. Ward, id. 129, 8 Am. Dec. 554; and bona fide assignments will in most cases be upheld in equity courts; Davenport v. Woodbridge, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 17; Corser v. Craig, 1 Wash. C. C. 424, Fed. Cas. No. 3,255; Kellogg v. Krauser, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 137, 16 Am. Dec. 480; Sheftall's Adm'r v. Clay's Adm'r, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 230; Anderson v. Van Alen, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 343; but champerty and maintenance, and the purchase of lawsuits, are inquired into and restrained in equity as in law, and fraud will defeat an assignment. By some of the state statutes regulating assignments, the assignee may bring an action in his own name in a court of law, but the equities in defence are not excluded. See Johns v. Johns, 6 Ohio 271; Sirlott v. Tandy, 3 Dana (Ky.) 142; Harper v. Butler, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 239, 7 L. Ed. 410; DeFrance v. Davis, Walk. (Miss.) 69.

All assignments and transfers of any claim upon the United States, or of any part or share thereof, or interests therein, whatever may be the consideration therefor, are null and void, unless made after the allowance of such claim, the ascertainment of the amount due, and the issuance of a warrant for the payment thereof; § 3477 R. S. See 24 Am. L. Rev. 442. But this does not apply to the passing of such claims to heirs, devisees, or assignees in bankruptcy; Erwin v. U. S., 97 U. S. 392, 24 L. Ed. 1065.

Notice is not necessary as against the creditor or his assignee in bankruptcy, but the claims of competing assignees or encumbrancers rank as between themselves according to the dates at which they have respectively given notice to the debtor; Pollock, Contr. 232, citing 3 Cl. & F. 456. This applies to rights created by trust; id. 233.

In this country it has also been held that notice of the assignment of a chose in action is effective without notice or acceptance by the debtor; Quigley v. Welter, 95 Minn. 383, 104 N. W. 236; Kingman v. Perkins, 105 Mass. 111; Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. Bank, 116 Ky. 364, 76 S. W. 156; Young v. Upson, 115 Fed. 192; Tingle v. Fisher, 20 W. Va. 497.

The only purpose or necessity of notice is for the protection of the assignee against subsequent assignees or creditors or payments made by the debtor in ignorance of the assignment; Succession of Patrick, Mann. Unrep. Cas. (La.) 72; Chemical Co. v. McNair, 139 N. C. 326, 51 S. E. 949.

A party to an executory contract cannot assign it to a third party; but it is held in Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240, that a public building contract is distinguished from a private building contract on the theory that the public generally were invited to bid for and take public contracts regardless of the professions, trades, or occupations; and that, aside from the discretion vested in the board of supervisors to reject all bids when they deemed it for the public good, or the bid of any party who had proved delinquent in a previous contract, there was no restriction upon the capacity of the contractor. Ernst v. Kunkle, 5 Ohio St. 520; City of St. Louis v. Clemens, 42 Mo. 69; Anderson v. De Uriste, 96 Cal. 404, 31 Pac. 266. But in the construction of a complex plant, owners having no knowledge themselves as to how such a plant should be constructed, have a right to select the party with whom they would deal, and when the selection is made and the contract executed, there could be no substitution of contractors without the assent of the owners; and such a contract is not assignable by the contractor; Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Min. Co., 127 U. S. 379, 8 Sup. Ct. 1308, 32 L. Ed. 246; Putnam v. Ins. Co., 123 Mass. 328, 25 Am. Rep. 93; Swarts v. Lighting Co., 26 R. I. 388, 59 Atl. 77; Campbell v. County Com'rs, 64 Kan. 376, 67 Pac. 866; Edison v. Babka, 111 Mich. 235, 69 N. W. 499; Winchester v. Pyrites Co., 67 Fed. 45, 14 C. C. A. 300; Worden v. R. Co., 82 Ia. 735, 48 N. W. 71; Johnson v. Vickers, 139 Wis. 145, 120 N. W. 837, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1046.

ASSIGNMENT OF DOWER. The act by which the share of a widow in her deceased husband's real estate is ascertained and set apart to her.

The assignment may be made in pais by the heir or his guardian, or the devisee or other persons seized of the lands subject to dower; Pierce v. Williams, 3 N. J. Law, 709; Meserve v. Meserve, 19 N. H. 240; Blood v. Blood, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 80; Shattuck v. Gragg, id. 88; McRae v. Pegues, 4 Ala. 160; Baker v. Baker, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 67; Boyers v. Newbanks, 2 Ind. 388; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 51; or it may be made after a course of judicial proceedings, where a voluntary assignment is refused. In this case the assignment will be made by the sheriff, who will set off her share by metes and bounds; 2 Bla. Com. 136; 1 Washb. R. P. 229. The assignment should be made within forty days after the death of the husband, during which time the widow may remain in the mansion-house. See Pharis v. Leachman, 20 Ala. 662; Chaplin v. Simmons' Heirs, 7 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 337; Stedman v. Fortune, 5 Conn. 462; 1 Washb. R. P. 222, n. 227; QUARANTINE. The share of the widow is usually one-third of all the real estate of which the husband has been seized during coverture; and no writing or livery is necessary in a valid assignment, the dowress being in, according to the view of the law, of the seisin of her husband.

The assignment of dower in a house may be of so many rooms, instead of a third part of the house; Parrish v. Parrish, 88 Va. 529, 14 S. E. 325. The remedy of the widow, when the heir refuses to assign dower, is by a writ of dower unde nihil habet; 4 Kent 63. A conveyance by a widow of her right of dower before it has been allotted does not vest the legal title in the grantee, and she is a necessary party to enforce the allotment; Parton v. Allison, 111 N. C. 429, 16 S. E. 416; see id., 109 N. C. 674, 14 S. E. 107. If the guardian of a minor heir assign more than he ought, the heir on coming of age may have the writ of admeasurement of dower; McCormick v. Taylor, 2 Ind. 336; Jones v. Brewer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 314; Co. Litt. 34, 35; Fitzh. Nat. Br. 148; Stat. Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I.) c. 7; 1 Washb. R. P. 222; 1 Kent 63, 69.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS. The statement of the case of the plaintiff in error, on a writ of error, setting forth the errors complained of.

It corresponds with the declaration in an ordinary action; 2 Tidd, Pr. 1168; 3 Steph. Com. (11th ed.) 623. All the errors of which the plaintiff complains should be set forth and assigned in distinct terms, so that the defendant may plead to them; Newnan v. Pryor, 18 Ala. 186; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 15 Conn. 83; Adams v. Munson, 3 How. (Miss.) 77.

It is an essential part of the pleadings and as such should be so complete in itself as to show the basis of the judgment or decree of the appellate court, since after the cause is disposed of and the record remitted to the court below, the precipe, assignment of errors and pleas thereto are all that usually remain of record; In re Cessna's Estate, 192 Pa. 14, 43 Atl. 376.

The ruling of a trial court must be specified in the assignment, in order to question it on appeal; Line v. State, 131 Ind. 468, 30 N. E. 703; as where no errors are assigned in the record, no question is presented for the appellate court for review; Wilcox v. Moore, 44 Ill. App. 293; Fullerton's Estate, 146 Pa. 61, 23 Atl. 321; Patrick Red Sandstone Co. v. Skoman, 1 Colo. App. 323, 29 Pac. 21; Hawkins v. McDougal, 126 Ind. 544, 25 N. E. 708. Errors not assigned will not usually be considered by an appellate court. But the United States Circuit Court of Appeals will notice plain error though not assigned: City of Memphis v. R. Co., 183 Fed. 529, 106 C. C. A. 75. Alleged errors of law will not be considered unless contained in the assignment of errors, where on the whole the facts justify the judgment; Behn, M. & Co. v. Campbell, 205 U. S. 403, 27 Sup. Ct. 502, 51 L. Ed. 857.

The term is commonly used in connection with appeals in cases in equity. Under the federal appellate practice, it is necessary to file an assignment of error with the petition for an appeal.

ASSIGNOR. One who makes an assignment; one who transfers property to another. See ASSIGNMENT.

ASSIGNS. Assignees; those to whom property shall have been transferred. Now seldom used except in the phrase, in deeds, "heirs, administrators and assigns." Grant v. Carpenter, 8 R. I. 36.

ASSISA (Lat. assidere). Originally an assembly or court; then the enactments of such a court. 1 Holdsw. H. E. L. 116.

Assisa ultimæ præsentationis. Assize of darrein presentment, which see.

Assisa venalium. Statutes regulating the sale of certain articles. Spelman, Gloss.

Assisa cadit (or vertitur) in juratam. Where a matter is so doubtful that it must necessarily be tried before a jury. Jacob L. Dict.

ASSISORS. In Scotch Law. Jurors.

ASSISTANCE, WRIT OF. See WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.

ASSITHMENT. A wergild or compensation by a pecuniary mulct. Blount.

ASSIZE, ASSIZA (Lat. assidere, to sit by or near, through the Fr. assisa, a session). A writ directed to the sheriff for the recovery of immovable property, corporeal or incorporeal. Littleton § 234.

The action or proceedings in court based upon such a writ. Magna Carta c. 12; Stat. 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2) c. 25; 3 Bla. Com. 57, 252; Sellon, Pract. Introd. xii.

Such actions were to be tried by special courts, of which the judicial officers were justices of assize. See COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS. This form of remedy is said to have been introduced by the parliament of Northampton (or Nottingham) A. D. 1176, for the purpose of trying titles to land in a more certain and expeditious manner before commissioners appointed by the crown than before the suitors in the county court of the king's justiciars in the Aula Regis. The action is properly a mixed action, whereby the plaintiff recovers his land and damages for the injury sustained by the disseisin. The value of the action as a means for the recovery of land led to its general adoption for that purpose, those who had suffered injury not really amounting to a disseisin alleging a disseisin to entitle themselves to the remedy. The scope of the remedy was also extended so as to allow the recovery of incorporeal hereditaments, as franchises, estovers, etc. It gave place to the action of ejectment, and is now abolished, having been previously almost, if not quite, entirely disused. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 36. Stearns, Real Act. 187.

A jury summoned by virtue of a writ of assize.

Such juries were said to be either magna (grand), consisting of sixteen members and serving to determine the right of property, or parva (petit), consisting of twelve and serving to determine the right to possession. Mirror of Just. lib. 2.

This sense is said by Littleton and Blackstone to be the original meaning of the word; Littleton § 234; 3 Bla. Com. 185. Coke explains it as denoting originally a session of justices; and this explanation is sanctioned by the etymology of the word. Co. Litt. 153 b. It seems, however, to have been early used in all the senses here given. The recognitors of assize (the jurors) had the power of deciding, upon their own knowledge, without the examination of witnesses, where the issue was joined on the very point of the assize; but collateral matters were tried either by a jury or by the recognitors acting as a jury, in which latter case it was said to be turned into a jury (assisa vertitur in juratam). Booth, Real Act. 213; Stearns, Real Act. 187; 3 Bla. Com. 402. The term is no longer used in England to denote a jury.

The assizes are: The Grand Assize which provides a machinery for trying disputed claims to property; and possessory assizes for trying disputed claims to seisin or possession. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 149. See GRAND ASSIZE.

The verdict or judgment of the jurors or recognitors of assize; 3 Bla. Com. 57, 59.

A court composed of an assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the baron or justice, in a certain place, at an appointed time. Grand Coutum, c. 24. See COURT OF ASSIZE.

An ordinance or statute. Littleton § 234; Reg. Orig. 239. Anything reduced to a certainty in respect to number, quantity, quality, weight, measure, etc. 2 Bla. Com. 42; Cowell; Spelman, Gloss. Assisa.

As to this use of the term, see PROVISIONS. See the title immediately following.

In Scotch Law. The jury, consisting of fifteen men, in criminal cases tried in the court of justiciary. Paterson, Comp.

A writ of assize which formerly lay when a man or his ancestors under whom he claimed presented a clerk to a benefice, who was instituted, and afterwards upon the next avoidance, a stranger presented a clerk and thereby disturbed the real patron. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 245; Stat. 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2) c. 5. It has given way to the remedy by quare impedit.

ASSIZE OF FRESH FORCE. A writ of assize which lay where the disseisin had been committed within forty days. Fitzh. N. B. 7.

W. C. Bolland in Year Books of Edward II, Vol. VII, p. xxxvi (Selden Society), after referring to "a cryptic remark of Glanvill," and saying that "the history of this writ cannot be written yet," concludes that where the inhabitant of a town that has the franchise of having actions touching its own citizens heard and determined within the town is disseised of a tenement, then if he take action to recover it within a certain time of such disseisin (variously stated to be forty days or forty weeks) he must take that action by means of an assize of fresh force, otherwise he can avail himself only of a writ of right.

ASSIZE, GRAND. See GRAND ASSIZE.

ASSIZE OF MORTDANCESTOR. A writ of assize which lay to recover possession of lands against an abator or his alienee. It lay where the ancestor from whom the claimant derived title died seised. Cowell; 3 Bla. Com. 185.

ASSIZE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN. A writ of assize which lay where the claimant had been lately disseised. The action must have been brought subsequently to the next preceding session of the eyre or circuit of justices, which took place once in seven years; Co. Litt. 153.

The assizes of darrein presentment, mort d'ancestre, novel disseisin, and utrum were possessory. They were tried before a jury.

ASSIZE OF NUISANCE. A writ of assize which lay where a nuisance had been committed to the complainant's freehold.

The complainant alleged some particular fact done which worked an injury to his freehold (ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui), and, if successful, recovered judgment for the abatement of the nuisance and also for damages; Fitzh. N. B. 183; 3 Bla. Com. 221; 9 Co. 55; Tr. & Ha. Pr. 1776.

ASSIZE OF UTRUM. A writ of assize which lay for a parson to recover lands which his predecessor had improperly allowed the church to be deprived of. 3 Bla. Com. 257.

An assize for the trial of the question of whether land is a lay fee, or held in frank-almoigne. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 21.

ASSIZES. Sessions of the justices or commissioners of assize.

These assizes are held twice in each year in each of the various shires of England, with some exceptions, by virtue of several commissions, for the trial of matters of fact in issue in both civil and criminal cases. They still retain the ancient name in popular language, though the commission of assize is no longer issued. 3 Steph. Com. (11th ed.) 373. See ASSIZE; NISI PRIUS; COMMISSION OF ASSIZE; COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS.

ASSIZES DE JERUSALEM. A code of feudal law prepared at a general assembly of lords after the conquest of Jerusalem, A. D. 1099.

It was compiled principally from the laws and customs of France. It was reduced to form by Jean d'Iblin, Comte de Japhe et Ascalon, about the year 1290. 1 Fournel, Hist. des Av. 49; 2 Dupin, Prof. des Av. 674; Steph. Pl. Andr. ed. App. xl.

ASSOCIATE. A partner in interest.

An officer in each of the superior courts of common law in England whose duty it was to keep the records of his court, to attend its nisi prius sittings, and to enter the verdict, make up the postea, and deliver the record to the party entitled thereto. Abbott, Law Dict.

A person associated with the judges and clerk of assize in commission of general jail delivery. Mozley & W. Dict.

The term is frequently used of the judges of appellate courts, other than the presiding judge or chief justice.

ASSOCIATED PRESS. An association to buy, gather and accumulate information and news; to vend, supply, distribute and publish the same.

It is an association affected with a public interest, and must submit to control by the public for the common good. It must sell its news without discrimination to all newspaper publishers who desire to purchase the same; Inter-Ocean Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 184 Ill. 438, 56 N. E. 822, 48 L. R. A. 568, 75 Am. St. Rep. 184, and a by-law forbidding the furnishing news to or receiving news from an antagonistic person or corporation is void as creating a monopoly; id.

ASSOCIATION. The act of a number of persons in uniting together for some purpose. The persons so joining.

An organized union of persons for a common purpose; a body of persons acting together for the promotion of some object of mutual interest or advantage. Cent. Dict.

Any combination of persons whether the same be known by a distinctive name or not. Stroud, Jud. Dict.

An unincorporated company is fundamentally a large partnership, from which it differs mainly in the following particulars: That it is not bound by the acts of the individual partners, but only by those of its managers; that shares in it are transferable; and that it is not dissolved by the retirement, death, bankruptcy, etc., of its individual members; Dicey, Parties 149.

In the United States this term is used to signify a body of persons united without a charter but upon the methods and forms used by incorporated bodies for the prosecution of some enterprise. Abbott, L. Dict.

Apart from a statute, no action lies by or against an unincorporated association as such; Karges Furniture Co. v. Woodworkers Local Union, 165 Ind. 421, 75 N. E. 877, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 788, 6 Ann. Cas. 829; Dicey, Parties 148; especially when it is not organized to carry on some business; St. Paul Typothetæ v. Bookbinders' Union, 94 Minn. 351, 102 N. W. 725, 3 Ann. Cas. 695; Cleland v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 252, 92 N. W. 306, 96 N. W. 212, 98 N. W. 1075, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136. Actions must be brought in the names of all the members. The inconvenience of this doctrine has led to much legislation. Some statutes provide for suits against associations (or partnerships) in the associate names, service of process on officers or other associates, and judgments binding the associate property, but only those members individually who have been personally served; see 20 Harv. L. Rev. 58. Judgments may bind individually even those members not personally served; Patch Mfg. Co. v. Capeless, 79 Vt. 1, 63 Atl. 938. Such association may sue and be sued by its name; Whitney v. Backus, 149 Pa. 29, 24 Atl. 51; Davison v. Holden, 55 Conn. 103, 10 Atl. 515, 3 Am. St. Rep. 40. In New York actions may be brought against such association of seven or more persons in the name of the president or treasurer; Curran v. Galen, 152 N. Y. 33, 46 N. E. 297, 37 L. R. A. 802, 57 Am. St. Rep. 496. One or more members may sue for the benefit of all, where the members are so numerous that it is impracticable to bring them all in; Liggett v. Ladd, 17 Or. 89, 21 Pac. 133. In England it has been held that an association of employes might be sued in its name, upon the ground that such associations are expressly recognized by parliament, and such right arises by necessary implication from the legislative recognition, and the right to own property; [1901] A. C. 426. See 20 Harv. L. Rev. 58; Dicey, Parties.

In English Law. A writ directing certain persons (usually the clerk and his subordinate officers) to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants for the purpose of taking the assizes. 3 Bla. Com. 59.

ASSOIL (spelled also assoile, absoile, as-soilyle). To set free; to deliver from excommunication. Stat. 1 Hen. IV. c. 7; Cowell. See ABSOIL.

ASSUME. To take to or upon one's self. See Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 44 Ohio St. 314, 7 N. E. 139.

ASSUMPSIT (Lat. assumpsit, he has undertaken). In Contracts. An undertaking, either express or implied, to perform a parol agreement. 1 Lilly, Reg. 132.

Express assumpsit is an undertaking made orally, by writing not under seal, or by matter of record, to perform an act or to pay a sum of money to another.

Implied assumpsit is an undertaking presumed in law to have been made by a party, from his conduct, although he has not made any express promise.

The law presumes such an undertaking to have been made, on the ground that everybody is supposed to have undertaken to do what is, in point of law, just and right; 2 Burr. 1008; 8 C. B. 545; Leake, Contr. 75; Huffman v. Wyrick, 5 Ind. App. 183, 31 N. E. 823. Such an undertaking is never implied where the party has made an express promise; 2 Term 100; Kimball v. Tucker, 10 Mass. 192; nor ordinarily against the express declaration of the party to be charged, Jewett v. Inhabitants of Somerset, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 125; Wheelock v. Freeman, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 165, 23 Am. Dec. 674; nor will it be implied unless there be a request or assent by the defendant shown; Webb v. Cole, 20 N. H. 490; though such request or assent may be inferred from the nature of the transaction; 1 Dowl. & L. 984; Hawley v. Sage, 15 Conn. 52; Hall v. R. Co., 28 Vt. 401; Treasurer of City of Camden v. Mulford, 26 N. J. Law 49; or from the silent acquiescence of the defendant; Doty v. Wilson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 378; Bradley v. Richardson, 2 Blatchf. 343, Fed. Cas. No. 1,786; or even contrary to fact on the ground of legal obligation; 1 H. Bla. 90; Inhabitants of Hanover v. Turner, 14 Mass. 227, 7 Am. Dec. 203;

Inhabitants of Alna v. Plummer, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 258; Van Valkinburgh v. Watson, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 480, 7 Am. Dec. 395; no promise to pay is implied from a mere use of personal property with the permission of the owner; Davis v. Breon, 1 Ariz. 240, 25 Pac. 537.

In Practice. A form of action which lies for the recovery of damages for the non-performance of a parol or simple contract. 7 Term 351; Ballard v. Walker, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 60.

It differs from debt, since the amount claimed need not be liquidated (see DEBT), and from covenant, since it does not require a contract under seal to support it. See COVENANT. See 4 Coke 91; 4 Burr. 1008; Carter v. Carter, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 428; Newell v. Hill, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 181. Assumpsit is one of the class of actions called actions upon the case, and in the older books is called action upon the case upon assumpsit. Comyns, Dig.

It was a new variety of action on the case, framed, as it seems, as often on the writ of deceit as on that of trespass. Failure to perform one's agreements did not create a debt, but it was found to be a wrong in the nature of deceit for which there must be a remedy in damages. The first recorded case was Y. B. 2 Hen. IV, 3 pl. 9. It was only in 1596 (4 Co. Rep. 91a) that it was conclusively decided that assumpsit was admissible at the plaintiff's choice where debt would also lie; and it was still later before it was admitted that the substantial cause of action was the contract; Poll. Contr. 148. See Prof. James Barr Ames in 2 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 53 (3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. L. H. 259); Holmes, Com. L. 284; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 329.

Special assumpsit is an action of assumpsit brought upon an express contract or promise.

General assumpsit is an action of assumpsit brought upon the promise or contract implied by law in certain cases. See 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 14; Tr. & Ha. Pr. 1490.

The action should be brought by the party from whom the consideration moved; 3 B. & P. 149, n; 4 B. & C. 664; Cabot v. Haskins, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 83, 92; or by the person for whose benefit it was paid; Hinkley v. Fowler, 15 Me. 285; against the party who made the undertaking. It lies for a corporation; 1 Campb. 466; and against it; Bank of United States v. Daudridge, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 68, 6 L. Ed. 552; City of San Antonio v. Lewis, 9 Tex. 69; Waring v. Catawba Co., 2 Bay (S. C.) 109; Overseers of Poor of North Whitehall Tp. v. Overseers of Poor of South Whitehall Tp., 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 117; but not in England formerly (because a corporation could not contract except under its seal), unless by express authority of some legislative act, or in actions on negotiable paper; 1 Chit. Pl. *119; 4 Bingh. 77; but now corporations are liable in many cases on contracts not under seal, and generally upon executed contracts, up to the extent of the benefit received; 6 A. & E. 846; L. R. 10 C. P. 409; Brice, Ultra Vires (3d ed.) 693.

Assumpsit will lie at the suit of a third party on a contract made in his favor; Hendrick v. Lindsay, 93 U. S. 143, 23 L. Ed. 855; Kountz v. Holthouse, 85 Pa. 235 (but see Ramsdale v. Horton, 3 Pa. 330); Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268 (but see Vrooman v. Turner, 69 N. Y. 280, 25 Am. Rep. 195); Snell v. Ives, 85 Ill. 279; Bassett v. Hughes, 43 Wis. 319. Contra, Warren v. Batchelder, 15 N. H. 129. See discussion in 15 Am. L. Rev. 231, and 4 N. J. L. J. 197.

A promise or undertaking on the part of the defendant, either expressly made by him or implied by the law from his actions, constitutes the gist of the action. A sufficient consideration for the promise must be averred and shown; 21 Am. Jur. 258, 283; though it may be implied by the law; Jackson v. Teele, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 29; Jerome v. Whitney, id. 321; Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 210, 25 Am. Dec. 378; as in case of negotiable promissory notes and bills, where a consideration is presumed to exist till its absence is shown; Middlebury v. Case, 6 Vt. 165.

The action lies for—

The action may be brought for a sum specified in the promise of the defendant, or for the definite amount of money ascertained by computation to be due, or for as much as the services, etc., were worth (called a quantum meruit), or for the value of the goods, etc. (called a quantum valent). The value of services performed under a contract void by the statute of frauds is recoverable on quantum meruit; Lapham v. Osborne, 20 Nev. 168, 18 Pac. 881; Wonsettler v. Lee, 40 Kan. 367, 19 Pac. 862; a city is liable for water supplied after termination of the contract; Wilson v. City of Charlotte, 110 N. C. 449, 14 S. E. 961; one hired to do work, but who is wrongfully stopped, may recover on quantum meruit what the labor is worth, regardless of its value to the other party; Mooney v. Iron Co., 82 Mich. 263, 46 N. W. 376.

The form of the action, whether general or special, depends upon the nature of the undertaking of the parties, whether it be express or implied, and upon other circumstances. In many cases where there has been an express agreement between the parties, the plaintiff may neglect the special contract and sue in general assumpsit. He may do this: first, where the contract is executed: 5 B. & C. 628; Robertson v. Lynch, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 451; Baker v. Corey, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 496; Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237, 6 L. Ed. 463; Cochran v. Tatum, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 405; Coursey v. Covington, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 45; Wood v. Gee, 3 McCord (S. C.) 421; Hancock v. Ross, 18 Ga. 364; and is for the payment of money; Brooks v. Scott's Ex'r, 2 Munf. (Va.) 344; Cochran v. Tatum, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 394; Cochran v. Tatum, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 405; Morse v. Potter, 4 Gray (Mass.) 292; though if a time be fixed for its payment, not until the expiration of that time; 1 Stark. 229; second, where the contract, though only partially executed, has been abandoned by mutual consent; 7 Term 181; Mead v. Degloyer, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 632; Tebbetts v. Haskins, 16 Me. 283; Adams v. Pugh, 7 Cal. 150; or extinguished and rescinded by some act of the defendant; Hoagland v. Moore, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 167; Jenkins v. Thompson, 20 N. H. 457; third, where that which the plaintiff has done has been performed under a special agreement, but not in the time or manner agreed, but yet has been beneficial to the defendant and has been accepted and enjoyed by him; 1 Bingh. 34; Taft v. Inhabitants of Montague, 14 Mass. 282, 7 Am. Dec. 215; Watchman v. Crook, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 240; McKinney v. Springer, 3 Ind. 59, 54 Am. Dec. 470; Epperly v. Bailey, 3 Ind. 72; Allen v. McKibbin, 5 Mich. 449; Cole v. Clarke, 3 Wis. 323; see 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 14; Miller v. Phillips, 31 Pa. 218.

A surety who has paid money for his principal may recover upon the common counts, though he holds a special agreement of indemnity from the principal; Gibbs v. Bryant, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 118. But in general, except as herein stated, if there be a special agreement, special assumpsit must be brought thereon; Sherman v. R. Co., 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 239; Maynard v. Tidball, 2 Wis. 34.

The declaration should state the contract in terms, in case of a special assumpsit; but, in general, assumpsit contains only a general recital of consideration, promise, and breach. Several of the common counts are frequently used to describe the same cause of action. Damages should be laid in a sufficient amount to cover the amount of the claim; see 2 Const. S. C. 339; Beverley v. Holmes, 4 Munf. (Va.) 95; Benden v. Manning, 2 N. H. 289; Bailey v. Freeman, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 280; Hendrick v. Seely, 6 Conn. 176; People's Bank v. Adams, 43 Vt. 195; Davisson v. Ford, 23 W. Va. 617.

Non assumpsit is the usual plea, under which the defendant may give in evidence most matters of defence; Com. Dig. Pleader (2 G, 1). Under that plea it may be shown that no such promise as alleged was made or is implied, or that the promise if made was void; but defences which from their nature admit a promise and set up a subsequent performance or avoidance as, e. g. payment, set off, statute of limitations, should be pleaded specially, in the absence of a statutory definition of the effect of the general plea, which exists in many states. Where there are several defendants, they cannot plead the general issue severally; Meagher v. Bachelder, 6 Mass. 444; nor the same plea in bar severally; Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 152. The plea of not guilty is defective, but is cured by verdict; King v. McDaniel, 4 Call (Va.) 451.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK. See NEGLIGENCE; MASTER AND SERVANT; EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

ASSURANCE. Any instrument which confirms the title to an estate. Legal evidence of the transfer of property. 2 Bla. Com. 294; [1896] 1 Ch. 468.

The term assurances includes, in an enlarged sense, all instruments which dispose of property, whether they be the grants of private persons, or not; such are fines and recoveries, and private acts of the legislature. Eunom. Dial. 2, s. 5.

In Commercial Law. Insurance.

ASSURED. A person who has been insured by some insurance company or underwriter, against the losses or perils mentioned in the policy of insurance.

The party whom the underwriters agree to indemnify in case of loss. 1 Phill. Ins. § 2. He is sometimes designated in maritime insurance by description, and not by name, as in a policy "for whom it may concern;" Haynes v. Rowe, 40 Me. 181; Cobb v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 192; Myers v. Ins. Co., 27 Pa. 268, 67 Am. Dec. 462; Blanchard v. Ins. Co., 33 N. H. 9; Augusta Ins. & Banking Co. of Georgia v. Abbott, 12 Md. 348. See INSURANCE.

ASSURER. An insurer; an underwriter.

ASTRARIUS HÆRES (from astre, the hearth of a chimney). Where the ancestor by conveyance hath set his heir apparent and his family in a house in his lifetime. Cunningham, L. Dict.

ASTRIHILTET. In Saxon Law. A penalty for a wrong done by one in the king's peace. The offender was required to replace the damage twofold. Spelman, Gloss.

ASYLUM. A refuge; a place of retreat and security. An establishment for the detention and cure of persons suffering from mental disease—and also a place for the reception and bringing up of desolate orphans. That some of its inmates are to be orphans will not impart to the institution generally the character of an orphan asylum; [1899] A. C. 107. It is not an educational institution; State v. Bacon, 6 Neb. 286.

In International Law. 1. A place of refuge for fugitive offenders. Every sovereign state has the right to offer an asylum to fugitives from other countries, but there is no corresponding right on the part of the alien to claim asylum. In recent years this right of asylum has been voluntarily limited by most states by treaties providing for the extradition (q. v.) of fugitive criminals.

Owing to the privilege of ex-territoriality (q. v.) possessed by ambassadors, their residences were in former times frequently made an asylum for fugitive criminals. Although claimed by, and often conceded to, ambassadors, this right of asylum was not definitely recognized, and Grotius, in 1625, does not admit it as part of the law of nations (II, c. 18, § 8). In 1726, when the Spanish Government arrested the Duke of Ripperda, who had taken refuge in the residence of the British Embassy, the British Government complained of the act as a violation of international law (Causes Célèbres, I, 178). Within the past century the right of asylum has been rarely exercised, except in Central and South American countries and in the Orient, where it has been frequently granted to political refugees. Even in those countries the United States has discouraged its ministers from granting asylum, though it has not absolutely prohibited it.

The qualified privilege of ex-territoriality possessed by public vessels of a state in foreign waters has led them at times to exercise the right of asylum, but international comity requires that this privilege be not abused, and it can, in no case, be exercised by merchant vessels. II, Moore, §§ 291–307.

2. In time of war, a place of refuge in neutral territory for belligerent war-ships. See NEUTRALITY.

AT. Expresses position attained by motion to, and hence contact, contiguity or co-incidence, actual or approximate, in space or time. Being less restricted as to relative position than other prepositions, it may in different constructions assume their office, and so become equivalent according to the context to in, on, near, by, about, under, over, through, from, to, toward, etc. Cent. Dict.

AT LARGE. Open to discussion or controversy; not precluded.

A congressman at large is one who is elected by electors of an entire state.

See POUND; RUNNING AT LARGE; ANIMAL.

AT LAW. According to the course of the common law. In the law.

ATAMITA. In Civil Law. A great-great-grandfather's sister.

ATAVUNCULUS. In Civil Law. A great-great-grandfather's brother.

ATAVUS. In Civil Law. The male ascendant in the fifth degree.

ATHA. In Saxon Law. (Spelled also Atha, Athe, Atte.) An oath. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

Athes, or Athaa, a power or privilege of exacting and administering an oath in certain cases. Cowell; Blount.

ATHEIST. One who denies or does not believe in the existence of a God.

Such persons are, at common law, incapable of giving testimony under oath, and are therefore, incompetent witnesses; but the disability is now largely removed. See WITNESS.

ATILUM. Tackle; the rigging of a ship; plough-tackle. Spelman, Gloss.

ATMATERTERA (Lat.). In Civil Law. A great-great-grandmother's sister.

ATTACHÉ. One attached to an embassy or a legation at a foreign court.

ATTACHMENT. Taking into the custody of the law the person or property of one already before the court, or of one whom it is sought to bring before it.

A writ for the accomplishment of this purpose. This is the more common sense of the word.

It is in its nature, but not strictly, a proceeding in rem; since that only is a proceeding in rem in which the process is to be served on the thing itself, and the mere possession of the thing, by the service of process and making proclamation, authorizes the court to decide upon it without notice to any individual whatever; Drake, Att. § 4*a*; Megee v. Beirne, 39 Pa. 50; Bray v. McClury, 55 Mo. 128.

Of Persons. A writ issued by a court of record, commanding the sheriff to bring before it a person who has been guilty of contempt of court, either in neglect or abuse of its process or of subordinate powers; 3 Bla. Com. 280; 4 id. 283; or disregard of its authority in refusing to do what is enjoined; 1 Term 266; or by openly insulting the court; 4 Bla. Com. 283; 3 id. 17. It is to some extent in the nature of a criminal process; Stra. 441. See State v. McDermott, 10 N. J. L. 63; Bacon v. Wilber, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 121, n.; 1 Term 266.

See ARREST.

Of Property. A writ issued at the institution or during the progress of an action, commanding the sheriff or other proper officer to attach the property, rights, credits, or effects of the defendant to satisfy the demands of the plaintiff.

It is a process which secures jurisdiction of the defendant, not by personal service, but by the seizure of his property. It may be either a foreign attachment, which is founded upon the absence or nonresidence of the defendant, or a domestic attachment, which, under various state statutes, is provided for, either as the beginning, or in the course of a suit. The proceedings in both classes of cases are usually, in substance, the same.

The origin of the law of attachment, as administered in the United States, is found in one of the customs of London, "which is agreed by all authorities to have a very ancient existence." Drake, Att. § 1. With other customs of London, it has, from time to time, been confirmed by Royal Charter and Acts of Parliament, and is declared "never to become obsolete by non-user or abuser"; id. The authority cited notes the curious fact respecting the customs of London that they were certified and recorded by word of mouth, and that the mayor and aldermen should declare whether the things under dispute were a custom or not, and that having been once recorded, they were afterwards to be judicially noticed. Locke, in his treatise on Attachment, according to the custom of London, attributes its origin to the Roman Law, quoting from Wilson's Adams, Rom. Antiq. 194, in support of his theory and passage, which is reproduced in a note to the section of Drake cited. In that and the subsequent sections will be found what is known of the remedy thus derived, which, as is there suggested, was found peculiarly adapted to our circumstances in the United States growing out of the division of the country into states, each sovereign, the unrestrained opportunity of transit from one to another and the expansion of credit and abolition of imprisonment for debt. All of these causes contributed to the adoption of a system of remedies for acting directly upon the property of debtors. The proceeding appears to be devoid of almost every feature of a common law proceeding, there being no service of process on the defendant, the seizure of his property in limine, and not under execution, and the appropriation of debts due to the defendant for the payment of his own debt, as well as the provision for the protection of the defendant by pledges to refund the amount so collected, if, within a specified time, there be an appearance and the debt be disproved; id. § 4. See CUSTOMS OF LONDON.

The original design of this writ was to secure the appearance of one who had disregarded the original summons, by taking possession of his property as a pledge; 3 Bla. Com. 280.

By an extension of this principle, in the New England states, property attached remains in the custody of the law after an appearance, until final judgment in the suit. See Bond v. Ward, 7 Mass. 127, 5 Am. Dec. 28.

In some states attachments are distinguished as foreign and domestic,—the former issued against a non-resident of the state, the latter against a resident. Where this distinction is preserved, the foreign attachment enures solely to the benefit of the party suing it out; while the avails of the domestic attachment may be shared by other creditors, who come into court and present their claims for that purpose.

It is a distinct characteristic of the whole system of remedy by attachment, that it is—except in some states where it is authorized in chancery—a special remedy at law, belonging exclusively to a court of law, and to be resorted to and pursued in conformity with the terms of the law conferring it; and where from any cause the remedy by attachment is not full and complete, a court of equity has no power to pass any order to aid or perfect it; Drake, Att. § 4.

In the New England states the attachment of the defendant's property, rights, and credits is an incident of the summons in all actions ex contractu. This is called Trustee Process, q. v. Elsewhere throughout the country the writ issues only upon cause shown by affidavit. And in most of the states its issue must be preceded by the execution by or on behalf of the plaintiff of a cautionary bond to pay the defendant all damage he may sustain by reason of the attachment. The grounds upon which the writ may be obtained vary in the different states. Wherever an affidavit is required as the basis of the attachment, it must verify the plaintiff's cause of action, and also the existence of some one or more of the grounds of attachment prescribed by the local statute as authorizing the issue of the writ.

Among the grounds upon which attachments are usually permitted by statute, the most frequent and universal is non-residence in the state, which is the primary basis for the issue of a foreign attachment; with respect to this ground, however, a man may have two residences in different states; Barron v. Burke, 82 Ill. App. 116; Rosenzweig v. Wood, 30 Misc. 297, 63 N. Y. Supp. 447. Then again, in most jurisdictions, attachments may be levied against the property of absconding debtors, either actual; Stewart v. Lyman, 62 App. Div. 182, 70 N. Y. Supp. 936; or intentional; Stock v. Reynolds, 121 Mich. 356, 80 N. W. 289; Stouffer v. Niple, 40 Md. 477; and this intention must be shown; Hanson v. Tompkins, 2 Wash. 508, 27 Pac. 73; one has been held to be an absconding debtor who conceals himself; Stafford v. Mills, 57 N. J. L. 574, 32 Atl. 7; or absents himself so as to prevent the service of ordinary process upon him; Ellington v. Moore, 17 Mo. 424.

Other grounds upon which attachment is permitted in some states are: The fraudulent incurring of a debt under contract; Merchants' Bank of Cleveland v. Ins. & Trust Co., 12 Ohio Dec. (Rep.) 738; fraudulently removing or disposing of property; Bullene v. Smith, 73 Mo. 151; Howard v. Caperton, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 313; or transferring it; Culbertson v. Cabeen, 29 Tex. 247; though in the ordinary course of business; Farris v. Gross, 75 Ark. 391, 87 S. W. 633, 5 Ann. Cas. 616; but the removal must be fraudulent; Dunn v. Claunch, 13 Okl. 577, 76 Pac. 143; and it must be actually, not constructively, fraudulent; Wadsworth v. Laurie, 164 Ill. 42, 45 N. E. 435; the death of a non-resident debtor owning property in the state; Bacchus v. Peters, 85 Tenn. 678, 4 S. W. 833; failing to pay on delivery the price or value of goods delivered where there was a contract so to pay; Harlow v. Sass, 38 Mo. 34; Miller v. Godfrey, 1 Colo. App. 177, 27 Pac. 1016; the fact that a demand is not otherwise secured, or that security given has become worthless; Williams v. Hahn, 113 Cal. 475, 45 Pac. 815 (but not if the security was originally worthless; Barbieri v. Ramelli, 84 Cal. 154, 23 Pac. 1086); the failure to pay for labor performed when it should have been paid at the time; De Lappe v. Sullivan, 7 Colo. 182, 2 Pac. 926.

The remedy by attachment is allowed in general only to a creditor. In some states, under special statutory provisions, damages arising ex delicto may be sued for by attachment; but the almost universal rule is otherwise. The claim of an attaching creditor, however, need not be so certain as to fall within the technical definition of a debt, or as to be susceptible of liquidation without the intervention of a jury. It is sufficient if the demand arise on contract, and that the contract furnish a standard by which the amount due could be so clearly ascertained as to enable the plaintiff to aver it in his affidavit, or the jury by their verdict to find it; Van Winkle v. Ketcham, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 323; Fisher v. Consequa, 2 Wash. C. C. 382, Fed. Cas. No. 4,816; Wilson v. Wilson, 8 Gill (Md.) 192, 50 Am. Dec. 685; Weaver v. Puryear, 11 Ala. 941; Jones v. Buzzard, 2 Ark. 415; Templin v. Krahn, 3 Ind. 374; Roelofson v. Hatch, 3 Mich. 277.

Some of the causes of action in tort upon which, in the absence of a statute, attachments have not been permitted are: Trover; Hynson v. Taylor, 3 Ark. 552; breach of promise of marriage; Phillips 527; a steamboat collision; Griswold v. Sharpe, 2 Cal. 17; trespass; Ferris v. Ferris, 25 Vt. 100; assault and battery; Thompson v. Carper, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 542; Minga v. Zollicoffer, 23 N. C. 278; loss of profits resulting from the failure of the defendant to dispose properly of a return cargo; Warwick v. Chase, 23 Md. 154; malicious prosecution; Tarbell v. Bradley, 27 Vt. 535; Stanly v. Ogden, 2

Root (Conn.) 259; damage for loss of property by a common carrier declared on in tort; Piscataqua Bank v. Turnley, 1 Miles (Pa.) 312; money embezzled and lost in gambling; Babcock v. Briggs, 52 Cal. 502; misbehavior in office, where there was no bond and the action is in tort; Dunlop v. Keith, 1 Leigh (Va.) 430, 19 Am. Dec. 755; expense and loss of time caused by a wound inflicted by defendant; Prewitt v. Carmichael, 2 La. Ann. 943; breaking open a letter entrusted to the care of defendant; Raver v. Webster, 3 Ia. 502, 66 Am. Dec. 98; slander; Sergeant v. Helmbold, Harper (S. C.) 219; Baune v. Thomassin, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 563; destruction by fire of plaintiff's property caused by the negligence of the defendant; Handy v. Brong, 4 Neb. 60. If the plaintiff alleged a cause of action on a contract and it appears from the pleadings or the evidence not to be such, it should be dismissed; Elliott v. Jackson, 3 Wis. 649.

In some states an attachment may, under peculiar circumstances, issue upon a debt not yet due and payable; but in such cases the debt must possess an actual character to become due in futuro, and not be merely possible and dependent on a contingency, which may never happen; Smead v. Chrisfield, 1 Handy (Ohio) 442. An attachment can be sued out in equity against an absconding debtor by the accommodation maker of a negotiable note not yet due; Altmeyer v. Caulfield, 37 W. Va. 847, 17 S. E. 409.

Corporations, like natural persons, may be proceeded against by attachment; Libbey v. Hodgdon, 9 N. H. 394; Bushel v. Ins. Co., 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 173; Bank of United States v. Bank, 1 Rob. (Va.) 573; Wilson v. Danforth, 47 Ga. 676; St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 9 Mo. 421; Planters' & Merchants' Bank of Mobile v. Andrews, 8 Porter (Ala.) 404; Mineral Point R. Co. v. Keep, 22 Ill. 9, 74 Am. Dec. 124. It will lie against a corporation for the conversion of its own stock; Condouris v. Cigarette Co., 3 Misc. 66, 22 N. Y. Supp. 695.

Representative persons, such as heirs, executors, administrators, trustees, and others, claiming merely by right of representation, are not liable to be proceeded against, as such, by attachment; Jackson v. Walsworth, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 372; Peacock v. Wildes, 8 N. J. Law 179; McCoombe v. Dunch, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 73, 1 L. Ed. 294; Taliaferro v. Lane, 23 Ala. 369; Patterson v. McLaughlin, 1 Cra. 352, Fed. Cas. No. 10,828; Metcalf v. Clark, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 45; Smith v. Riley, 32 Ga. 356; Levy v. Succession of Lehman, 38 La. Ann. 9; Bryant v. Fussell, 11 R. I. 286.

Goods in the hands of a common carrier are not exempt from attachment, and, when it is pending, the carrier is not justified in giving them up to the consignor, as the right of the officer to hold them is to be determined by the court out of which the attachment issued; Stiles v. Davis, 1 Black (U. S.) 101, 17

L. Ed. 33; but goods in transit to another state cannot be attached, whether without the state, when the seizure was made (the carriers being within the jurisdiction); Bates v. R. Co., 60 Wis. 296, 19 N. W. 72, 50 Am. Rep. 369; Western R. R. v. Thornton, 60 Ga. 300; Sutherland v. Bank, 78 Ky. 250; Stevenson v. R. Co., 61 Minn. 104, 63 N. W. 256, 28 L. R. A. 600; or still within the state, and not moved from the starting point, but loaded for movement; Baldwin v. R. Co., 81 Minn. 247, 83 N. W. 986, 51 L. R. A. 640, 83 Am. St. Rep. 370. Obedience to attachment process does not deprive the carrier of his right to his charges for services to the shipper, and he may retain possession of the goods until the charges are paid; Rucker v. Donovan, 13 Kan. 251, 19 Am. Rep. 84; Wolfe v. Crawford, 54 Miss. 514.

It is a question whether the personal baggage of a traveller can be reached or affected by attachment; Western R. R. v. Thornton, 60 Ga. 300.

Property in the hands of officers of court cannot be attached, as receivers; Martin v. Davis, 21 Ia. 537; Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. (U. S.) 52, 14 L. Ed. 322; Columbian Book Co. v. De Golyer, 115 Mass. 69; Glenn v. Gill, 2 Md. 1; Taylor v. Gillean, 23 Tex. 508; Field v. Jones, 11 Ga. 413; Nelson v. Conner, 6 Rob. (La.) 339; Langdon v. Lockett, 6 Ala. 727, 41 Am. Dec. 78; Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaton, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 421, 28 Am. Dec. 226; Gouverneur v. Warner, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 624; Yuba County v. Adams, 7 Cal. 35; Bentley v. Shrieve, 4 Md. Ch. 412; Robinson v. R. Co., 66 Pa. 160; an assignee in bankruptcy; In re Cunningham, 19 N. B. R. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 3478; or a sheriff; Bradley v. Keesee, 5 Cold. (Tenn.) 223, 94 Am. Dec. 246.

The levy of an attachment does not change the estate of the defendant in the property attached; Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 485; Starr v. Moore, 3 McLean 354, Fed. Cas. No. 13,315; Perkins' Heirs v. Norvell, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 151; Snell v. Allen, 1 Swan. (Tenn.) 208; Oldham v. Scrivener, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 579; Sammis v. Sly, 54 Ohio St. 511, 44 N. E. 508, 56 Am. St. Rep. 731. Nor does the attaching plaintiff acquire any property thereby; Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 485; Crocker v. Radcliffe, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 23; Willing v. Bleeker, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 221; Owings v. Norwood's Lessee, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 96; Goddard v. Perkins, 9 N. H. 488. Nor can he acquire through his attachment any higher or better rights to the property attached than the defendant had when the attachment was levied, unless he can show some fraud or collusion by which his rights are impaired; Crocker v. Pierce, 31 Me. 177; Kentucky Refining Co. v. Bank, 89 S. W. 492, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 486.

The levy of an attachment constitutes a lien on the property or credits attached; Goore v. McDaniel, 1 McCord (S. C.) 480;

Peck v. Webber, 7 How. (Miss.) 658; Val Loan v. Kline, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 129; Davenport v. Lacon, 17 Conn. 278; Erskine v. Stalley, 12 Leigh (Va.) 406; Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. But, as the whole office of an attachment is to seize and hold property until it can be subjected to execution, this lien is of no value unless the plaintiff obtain judgment against the defendant and proceed to subject the property to execution.

Where two or more separate attachments are levied simultaneously on the same property, they will be entitled each to an aliquot part of the proceeds of the property; Durant v. Johnson, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 544; Campbell v. Ruger, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 215; Nutter v. Connet, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 201; True v. Emery, 67 Me. 28; Wilson v. Blake, 53 Vt. 305; Thurston v. Huntington, 17 N. H. 438; see Love v. Harper, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 113; Yelverton v. Burton, 26 Pa. 351. Where several attachments are levied successively on the same property, they have priority in the order in which they are sued out; Lutter & Voss v. Grosse, 82 S. W. 278, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 585; and a junior attaching creditor may impeach a senior attachment, or judgment thereon, for fraud; Pike v. Pike, 24 N. H. 384; Walker v. Roberts, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 561; McCluny v. Jackson, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 96; Smith v. Gettinger, 3 Ga. 140; Reed v. Ennis, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 393; Hale v. Chandler, 3 Mich. 531; but not on account of irregularities; Kincaid v. Neall, 3 McCord (S. C.) 201; Camberford v. Hall, 3 McCord (S. C.) 345; Walker v. Roberts, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 561; In re Griswold, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 412.

By the levy of an attachment upon personalty, the officer acquires a special property therein, which continues so long as he remains liable therefor, either to have it forthcoming to satisfy the plaintiff's demand, or to return it to the owner upon the attachment being dissolved, but no longer; Barker v. Miller, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 195; Gates v. Gates, 15 Mass. 310; Poole v. Symonds, 1 N. H. 289, 8 Am. Dec. 71; Nichols v. Valentine, 36 Me. 322; Braley v. French, 28 Vt. 546; Foulks v. Pegg, 6 Nev. 136; Stiles v.

Davis, 1 Black (U. S.) 101, 17 L. Ed. 33; Holt v. Burbank, 47 N. H. 164; Wentworth v. Sawyer, 76 Me. 434; Rochester Lumber Co. v. Locke, 72 N. H. 22, 54 Atl. 705. For any violation of his possession, while his liability for the property continues, he may maintain trover, trespass, and replevin; Luden v. Leavitt, 9 Mass. 104, 6 Am. Dec. 45; Lathrop v. Blake, 23 N. H. 46; Walker v. Foxcroft, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 270; 3 Foster 46; Carroll v. Frank, 28 Mo. App. 69; Whitney v. Ladd, 10 Vt. 165.

As it would often subject an officer to great inconvenience to keep attached property in his possession, he is allowed in the New England states and New York to deliver it over, during the pendency of the suit, to some responsible person, who will give an accountable receipt for it, and who is usually styled a receiptor or bailee, and whose possession is regarded as that of the officer, and, therefore, as not discharging the lien of the attachment. This practice is not authorized by statute, but has been so long in vogue in the states where it prevails as to have become a part of their systems; Drake, Att. § 344.

In many states provisions exist, authorizing the defendant to retain possession of the attached property by executing a bond with sureties for the delivery thereof, either to satisfy the execution which the plaintiff may obtain in the cause, or when and where the court may direct. This bond, like the bailment of attached property, does not discharge the lien of the attachment; Gray v. Perkins, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 622; Rives v. Wilborne, 6 Ala. 45; Evans v. King, 7 Mo. 411; People v. Cameron, 2 Gilman (Ill.) 468; Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 400, 9 L. Ed. 470; Boyd v. Buckingham, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 434. Property thus bonded cannot be seized under another attachment, or under a junior execution; Rives v. Wilborne, 6 Ala. 45; Kane v. Pilcher, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 651; Gordon v. Johnston, 4 La. 304.

Provisions also exist in many states for the dissolution of an attachment by the defendant's giving bond and security for the payment of such judgment as the plaintiff may recover. This is, in effect, merely Special Bail. From the time it is given, the cause ceases to be one of attachment, and proceeds as if it had been instituted by summons; Harper v. Bell, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 221; People v. Cameron, 2 Gilman (Ill.) 468; Fife v. Clarke, 3 McCord (S. C.) 347; Reynolds v. Jordan, 19 Ga. 436; Drake, Att. § 312.

One holding property by virtue of a forthcoming bond may sue for its destruction; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brinkerhoff, 119 Ala. 606, 24 South. 892. The execution of the bond does not discharge the attachment or levy, but the property is still in contemplation of law in the possession of the court; Hobson & Co. v. Hall, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 635.

An attachment is dissolved by a final judgment for the defendant; Suydam v. Huggeford, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 465; Johnson v. Edson, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 299; Brown v. Harris, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 505, 52 Am. Dec. 535; it may be dissolved, on motion, on account of defects in the plaintiff's proceedings, apparent on their face; but not for defects which are not so apparent; Baldwin v. Conger, 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 516. Every such motion must precede a plea to the merits; Garmen v. Barringer, 19 N. C. 502; Young v. Gray, Harp. (S. C.) 38; Stoney v. McNeill, Harp. (S. C.) 156; Watson v. McAllister, 7 Mart. O. S. (La.) 368; Symons v. Northern, 49 N. C. 241; Drakford v. Turk, 75 Ala. 339; Memphis, C. & L. R. Co. v. Wilcox, 48 Pa. 161. The death of the defendant pendente lite is held in some states to dissolve the attachment; Sweringen v. Eberius' Adm'r, 7 Mo. 421, 38 Am. Dec. 463; Vaughn v. Sturtevant, 7 R. I. 372; Phillips v. Ash's Heirs and Adm'rs, 63 Ala. 414 (but not after judgment; Fitch v. Ross, 4 S. & R. [Pa.] 557). And so the civil death of a corporation; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Little, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 207, 42 Am. Dec. 293; Paschall v. Whitsett, 11 Ala. 472. Not so, however, the bankruptcy of the defendant; Downer v. Brackett, 21 Vt. 599, Fed. Cas. No. 4,043; President, etc., of Franklin Bank v. Bachelder, 23 Me. 60, 39 Am. Dec. 601; Kittredge v. Warren, 14 N. H. 509; Davenport v. Tilton, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 320; Vreeland v. Bruen, 21 N. J. L. 214; Wells v. Brander, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 348; Hill v. Harding, 93 Ill. 77.

In those states where under a summons property may be attached if the plaintiff so directs, the defendant has no means of defeating the attachment except by defeating the action; but in some states, where an attachment does not issue except upon stated grounds, provision is made for the defendant's contesting the validity of the alleged grounds; while in other states it is held that he may do so, as a matter of right, without statutory authority; Morgan v. Avery, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 656; Campbell v. Morris, 3 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 535; Havis v. Trapp, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 130; Harris v. Taylor, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 536, 67 Am. Dec. 576; Voorhees v. Hoagland, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 232.

As to the attachment of property or indebtedness held by or owing from a third person, see GARNISHMENT.

ATTACHMENT OF THE FOREST. See COURT OF ATTACHMENT.

ATTACHMENT OF PRIVILEGE. A process by which a man, by virtue of his privilege, calls another to litigate in that court to which he himself belongs, and who has the privilege to answer there.

A writ issued to apprehend a person in a privileged place. Termes de la Ley.

ATTAINDER. That extinction of civil rights and capacities which takes place whenever a person who has committed treason or felony receives sentence of death for his crime. 1 Steph. Com. 408; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 641.

Attainder by confession is either by pleading guilty at the bar before the judges, and not putting one's self on one's trial by a jury, or before the coroner in sanctuary, when, in ancient times, the offender was obliged to abjure the realm.

Attainder by verdict is when the prisoner at the bar pleads not guilty to the indictment, and is pronounced guilty by the verdict of the jury.

Attainder by process or outlawry is when the party flies, and is subsequently outlawed. Coke, Litt. 391.

The effect of attainder upon a felon is, in general terms, that all his estate, real and personal, is forfeited; that his blood is corrupted, so that nothing passes by inheritance to, from, or through him; 1 Wms. Saund. 361, n.; 6 Coke 63 a, 68 b; 2 Rob. Eccl. 547; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 598; that he cannot sue in a court of justice; Co. Litt. 130 a. See 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 641.

In England, by statute 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, attainder upon conviction, with consequent corruption of blood, forfeiture, or escheat, is abolished.

In the United States, the doctrine of attainder is now scarcely known, although during and shortly after the Revolution acts of attainder were passed by several of the states. The passage of such bills is expressly forbidden by the constitution.

Under the Confiscation Act of July 17, 1862, which imposed the penalty of confiscation of property as a punishment for treason and rebellion, all that could be sold was a right to the property seized, terminating with the life of the person for whose offence it was seized; Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 339, 19 L. Ed. 696.

ATTAINT. Attainted, stained, or blackened.

A writ which lies to inquire whether a jury of twelve men gave a false verdict. Bracton, l. 4, tr. 1, c. 134; Fleta, l. 5, c. 22, § 8.

Formerly the jury were rather witnesses than judges; a false verdict would be perjury. The aggrieved party procured a writ of attaint. The case was tried before 24 jurors, usually knights. The penalty on conviction was one year's imprisonment, forfeiture of goods, etc. Its origin is uncertain; it appears on the record of the King's Court in 1202. It was limited to the possessory assizes (see ASSIZE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN), but by 1360 it had been extended to all classes of cases. It came to be the rule that the attaint jury must have before it the evidence on which the first jury founded its verdict, but the first jury could produce new evidence. Before 1565 it was seldom in use; it was abolished in 1825. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 161.

ATTEMPT. An endeavor to accomplish a crime carried beyond mere preparation, but falling short of execution of the ultimate design in any part of it. Com. v. McDonald, 5

Cush. (Mass.) 367; Griffin v. State, 26 Ga. 493.

An intent to do a particular criminal thing combined with an act which falls short of the thing intended. 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 728; Johnson v. State, 14 Ga. 55; State v. Marshall, 14 Ala. 411; People v. Lawton, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 126; Cunningham v. State, 49 Miss. 685.

"An attempt, in general, is an overt act done in pursuance of an intent to do a specific thing, tending to the end, but falling short of complete accomplishment of it."

"In law, the definition must have this further qualification, that the overt act must be sufficiently proximate to the intended crime to form one of the natural series of acts which the intent requires for its full execution." Mitchell, J., in Com. v. Eagan, 190 Pa. 10, 21, 42 Atl. 374, 377.

To constitute an attempt, there must be an intent to commit some act which would be indictable, if done, either from its own character of that of its natural and probable consequences; State v. Jefferson, 3 Harr. (Del.) 571; Moore v. State, 18 Ala. 532; People v. Shaw, 1 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 327; Davidson v. State, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 455; 9 C. & P. 518; 1 Crawf. & D. 156, 186; 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 731; an act apparently adapted to produce the result intended; Whart. Cr. L. § 182; State v. Clarissa, 11 Ala. 57; Com. v. Manley, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 173; Dunbar v. Harrison, 18 Ohio St. 32; State v. Rawles, 65 N. C. 334; Kunkle v. State, 32 Ind. 220; U. S. v. Morrow, 4 Wash. C. C. 733, Fed. Cas. No. 15,819; Rasnick v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 356; 6 C. & P. 403; 1 Leach 19 (though some cases require a complete adaptation; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 749); an act immediately and directly tending to the execution of the principal crime, and committed by the prisoner under such circumstances that he has the power of carrying his intention into execution; 1 F. & F. 511; including solicitations of another; 2 East 5; People v. Bush, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 133; State v. Avery, 7 Conn. 266, 18 Am. Dec. 105; Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26; U. S. v. Worrall, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 384, 1 L. Ed. 426; but mere solicitation, not directed to the procurement of some specific crime, is not an attempt; Whart. Cr. L. 179; see SOLICITATION; and the crime intended must be at least a misdemeanor; 1 C. & M. 661, n.; Respublica v. Roberts, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 39, 1 L. Ed. 27. An abandoned attempt, there being no outside cause prompting the abandonment, is not indictable; Whart. Cr. L. § 137.

It has been held that an attempt to commit a crime, which could not, under the circumstances, be consummated, is not a criminal attempt; Dears. & B. C. C. 197; 9 Cox C. C. 497; People v. Moran, 123 N. Y. 254, 25 N. E. 412, 10 L. R. A. 109, 20 Am. St. Rep. 732; contra, 38 W. R. 95 (where in a remark which seems both obiter and casual, the Court of Cr. Cas. Res. disapproves the earlier English cases); Com. v. McDonald, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 365; People v. Jones, 46 Mich. 441, 9 N. W. 486; State v. Wilson, 30 Conn. 500; Rogers v. Com., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 463; Hamilton v. State, 36 Ind. 280, 10 Am. Rep. 22. These are commonly known as the "pickpocket cases," but the doctrine that one may be guilty of an attempt to commit a crime, when it was for some reason unknown to the perpetrator, impossible, has been applied in cases of other crimes, as homicide; People v. Lee Kong, 95 Cal. 666, 30 Pac. 800, 17 L. R. A. 626, 29 Am. St. Rep. 165; bribery; Ex parte Bozeman, 42 Kan. 451, 22 Pac. 628; State v. Mitchell, 170 Mo. 633, 71 S. W. 175, 94 Am. St. Rep. 763; obtaining by false pretense; 11 Cox C. C. 570; extortion; People v. Gardner, 144 N. Y. 119, 38 N. E. 1003, 28 L. R. A. 699, 43 Am. St. Rep. 741; burglary, where there was no property on the premises which could be stolen; State v. Beal, 37 Ohio St. 108, 41 Am. Rep. 490; abortion, where the woman was not pregnant; 2 Cox C. C. 41; but not where the woman was not quick with child when that was required to constitute the offence of procuring an abortion; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248; or where the charge was of an attempt to commit rape where the circumstances were such that if the object had been obtained it would not have been rape; State v. Brooks, 76 N. C. 1; People v. Quin, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 128; contra, 24 Q. B. D. 357; Com. v. Shaw, 134 Mass. 221; Rhodes v. State, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 351. The cases on this subject are collected in an article on "Criminal Attempts" by J. H. Beale, Jr., in 16 Harv. L. Rev. 491. See, also, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, note. The offense may exist though the act may be impossible of accomplishment by the methods employed; Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18, 48 N. E. 770.

Mere preparations, though made with criminal intent, do not constitute an attempt; [1903] T. S. 868 (So. Afr.).

An indictment has been upheld upon a criminal intent coupled with an act (procuring dies for counterfeiting) which fell short of an attempt under their statute; 33 E. L. & E. 533. See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 724.

An attempt to commit a crime was not in itself a crime, in the early common law, but it is now generally made such by statute; and in some cases attempts are specially provided against with reference to particular crimes, as arson. See 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 417, note, where cases under some state statutes are found. See RAPE; SUICIDE.

ATTENDANT. One who owes a duty or service to another, or in some sort depends upon him. Termes de la Ley.

ATTENDANT TERMS. Long leases or mortgages so arranged as to protect the title of the owner.

To raise a portion for younger children, it was quite common to make a mortgage to trustees. The powers of these trustees were generally to take possession of the estate, or to sell a part of the term if the portions were not duly paid. If the deed did not become ipso facto void upon payment of the portion, a release was necessary from the trustees to discharge the mortgage. If this was not given, the term became an outstanding satisfied term. The purchaser from the heir then procured an assignment of the term to trustees for his benefit, which then became a satisfied term to attend the inheritance, or an attendant term. These terms were held attendant by the courts, without any assignment, and operated to defeat intermediate alienations to some extent. There were other ways of creating outstanding terms besides the method by mortgage; but the effect and general operation of all these were essentially the same. By reason of the want of notice, by means of registration, of the making of charges, mortgages, and conveyances of lands, this mode of protecting an innocent purchaser by means of an outstanding term to attend the inheritance came to be very general prior to the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, which abolished all such terms as soon as satisfied. 1 Washb. R. P. 311; 4 Kent. 86.

ATTENTAT. Any thing whatsoever wrongfully innovated or attempted in the suit by the judge a quo, pending an appeal. Used in the civil and canon law; 1 Add. Eccl. 22, note; Ayliffe, Parerg. 100.

ATTENTION. Consideration; notice. The phrase "your bill shall have attention" was held to be ambiguous and not to amount to an acceptance of the bill; 2 B. & Ald. 113.

ATTEMINARE. To put off to a succeeding term; to prolong the time of payment of a debt. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 4; Cowell; Blount.

ATTEMINING. The granting a time or term for the payment of a debt.

ATTEMPOIEMENT. In Canon Law. A making terms; a composition, as with creditors. 7, Low. C. 272, 306.

ATTESTATION. The act of witnessing an instrument in writing, at the request of the party making the same, and subscribing it as a witness. 3 P. Wms. 254; Shanks v. Christopher, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 146; Hall v. Hall, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 373.

Deeds, at common law, do not require attestation; 2 Bla. Com. 307; 3 Dane, Abr. 354; Thacher v. Phinney, 7 Allen (Mass.) 149; and there are several states where at common law it was not necessary; Ingram v. Hall, 2 N. C. 205; Dole v. Thurlow, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 157. In many of the states there are statutory requirements on the subject, and where such exist they must be strictly complied with. It is generally safe to have two witnesses, one of whom may be and usually is the officer taking the acknowledgment. See Coit v. Starkweather, 8 Conn. 289, 20 Am. Dec. 110; Stone v. Ashley, 13 N. H. 38; Shults v. Moore, 1 McLean 520, Fed. Cas. No. 12,824; Ross v. Worthington, 11 Minn. 443 (Gil. 323), 88 Am. Dec. 95; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 275, n.; 4 Kent 457. The requisites are not the same in all cases as against the grantor and as against purchasers. See French v. French, 3 N. H. 234.

The attesting witness need not see the grantor write his name: if he sign in the presence of the grantor, and at his request, it is sufficient; Jar. Wills 87-91; 2 B. & P. 217.

Wills must usually be attested by competent or credible witnesses; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 691; Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350, 20 Am. Dec. 481; 1 Burr. 414; who must subscribe their names attesting in the presence of the testator; Edelen v. Hardey's Lessee, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 61, 16 Am. Dec. 292; Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh (Va.) 6; 1 Maule & S. 294; 2 Curt. Eccl. 320; 3 id. 118; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 678; Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 4 South. 225; Mays v. Mays, 114 Mo. 536, 21 S. W. 921. And see Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 342; 1 Ves. Ch. 11; 2 Washb. R. P. 682; but he need not sign in their presence; Stirling v. Stirling, 64 Md. 138, 21 Atl. 273; Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, 18 S. W. 280, 30 Am. St. Rep. 875. The term "presence" in a statute requiring the subscription of witnesses to a will to be made in the presence of the testator, means "conscious presence;" Tucker v. Sandidge, 85 Va. 546, 8 S. E. 650.

In some states three witnesses are required to wills devising lands; in the majority of states only two. In Pennsylvania no attesting witnesses are required except in wills making gifts to charity, where two credible witnesses, not interested in the charity, are required.

A person may attest a will by making his mark, although the person who writes his name fails to sign his own name as a witness to the mark; Davis v. Semmes, 51 Ark. 48, 9 S. W. 434. Persons signing as witnesses must do so after the testator has signed the will; Brooks v. Woodson, 87 Ga. 379, 13 S. E. 712, 14 L. R. A. 160. If a will is signed by only two witnesses where three are required as to realty, it is inoperative as to the realty but valid as to the personalty; Hays v. Ernest, 32 Fla. 18, 13 South. 451.

ATTESTATION CLAUSE. That clause wherein the witnesses certify that the instrument has been executed before them, and the manner of the execution of the same.

The usual attestation clause to a will is in the following formula, to-wit: "Signed, sealed, published, and declared by the above-named A B, as and for his last will and testament, in the presence of us, who have hereunto subscribed our names as the witnesses thereto, in the presence of the said testator and of each other." That of deeds is generally in these words: "Sealed and delivered in the presence of us."

ATTESTING WITNESS. One who, upon being required by the parties to an instrument, signs his name to it to prove it, and for the purpose of identification. 3 Campb. 232; Jenkins v. Dawes, 115 Mass. 599.

ATTESTOR. One who attests or vouches for.

ATTILE. The rigging or furniture of a ship. Jacob, L. Dict.

ATTORN. To turn over; to transfer to another money or goods; to assign to some particular use or service. Kennet, Paroch. Antiq. 283.

Used of the part taken by the tenant in a transfer of lands; 2 Bla. Com. 288; Littleton § 551. Now used of assent to such a transfer; 1 Washb. R. P. 28. The lord could not alien his land without the consent of the tenant, nor could the tenant assign without the consent of his lord; 2 Bla. Com. 27; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 137; 1 Washb. R. P. 28, n. Attornment is abolished by various statutes; 1 Washb. R. P. 336; Wms. R. P. 233, 366.

✕ Attornment is the acknowledgment by a tenant of a new landlord on the alienation of the land and an agreement to become the tenant of the purchaser; Lindley v. Dakin, 13 Ind. 388. ✕

The attornment of a tenant to a stranger without consent of the landlord is void; Terry v. Terry, 66 S. W. 1024, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2242; Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 Mich. 339, 86 Am. Dec. 57; Perkins v. Potts, 53 Neb. 444, 73 N. W. 936.

The doctrine of attornment grew out of the peculiar relations existing between the landlord and his tenant under the feudal law, and the reasons for the rule never had any existence in this country, and is inconsistent with our laws, customs and institutions. Beyond its application to estop a tenant from denying the title of his landlord, it can serve but little, if any, useful purpose; Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 292.

Recognition by the tenant of the assignee of the landlord and payment of rent to him are a sufficient attornment; Bradley & Co. v. Coal Co., 99 Ill. App. 427; Cummings v. Smith, 114 Ill. App. 35; and so is taking a lease from the landlord's grantee, good from the beginning of accumulations of rent in arrear; Pelton v. Place, 71 Vt. 430, 46 Atl. 63.

A conveyance of the leased land passes to the purchaser the right to collect the rent, and the tenant cannot prevent it by refusing to attorn to him; Edwards v. Clark, 83 Mich. 246, 47 N. W. 112, 10 L. R. A. 659; nor can the tenant dispute his landlord's title and attorn to another while in possession under the lease, and if he desires, after his term expires, to contest his landlord's title, he must first surrender the possession to him; McDowell v. Sutlive, 78 Ga. 142, 2 S. E. 937; Grizzard v. Roberts, 110 Ga. 41, 35 S. E. 291; Stover v. Davis, 57 W. Va. 196, 49 S. E. 1023.

Attornment is not necessary to entitle an assignee of the landlord to demand payment of the rent and to dispossess the tenant; Wetterer v. Soubirous, 22 Misc. 739, 49 N. Y. Supp. 1043; Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. 906, 45 S. E. 794. Where there is a statute authorizing summary proceedings by the assignee, etc., of the landlord, the latter cannot maintain them after a conveyance of the demised premises; Boyd v. Sametz, 17 Misc. 728, 40 N. Y. Supp. 1070; but such proceedings may be instituted against the tenant of his grantor by the grantee of the landlord; Doner v. Ingram, 119 Mo. App. 156, 95 S. W. 983; Small v. Clark, 97 Me. 304, 54 Atl. 758; or by an assignee of the lease; Drew v. Mosbarger, 104 Ill. App. 635. It has been held that the action in such cases could not be brought by the purchaser in his own name, but in the name of the vendor for his use; Cooper v. Gambill, 146 Ala. 184, 40 South. 827; and also that a tenant may resist a warrant for forcible detainer brought by one under whom he did not enter; Gray v. Gray, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 468.

To transfer services or homage.

Used of a lord's transferring the homage and service of his tenant to a new lord. Bract. 81, 82; 1 Sullivan, Lect. 227.

ATTORNATO FACIENDO VEL RECIPIENDO. A writ to command a sheriff or steward of a county court or hundred court to receive and admit an attorney to appear for the person that owes suit of court. Fitz. N. B. 349.

ATTORNEY. One put in the place, turn, or stead of another, to manage his affairs; one who manages the affairs of another by direction of his principal. Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley.

One who acts for another by virtue of an appointment by the latter. Attorneys are of various kinds.

Attorney in fact. A person to whom the authority of another, who is called the constituent, is by him lawfully delegated.

This term is employed to designate persons who act under a special agency, or a special letter of attorney, so that they are appointed in factum, for the deed, or special act to be performed; but in a more extended sense it includes all other agents employed in any business, or to do any act or acts in pais for another. Bacon, Abr. Attorney; Story, Ag. § 25.

All persons who are capable of acting for themselves, and even those who are disqualified from acting in their own capacity, if they have sufficient understanding, as infants of a proper age, and females coverts, may act as attorneys of others; Co. Litt. 52 a; 1 Esp. 142; 2 id. 511.

Attorney-at-law. An officer in a court of justice who is employed by a party in a cause to manage the same for him.

Appearance by an attorney, on behalf of his client, has been allowed in England from the time of the earliest records of the courts of that country. They are mentioned in Glanville, Bracton, Fleta, and Britton; and a case turning upon the party's right to appear by attorney is reported; Y. B. 17 Edw. III. p. 8, case 23. In France such appearances were first allowed by letters patent of Philip le Bel. A. D. 1290; 1 Fournel, Hist. des. avocats, 42, 92; 2 Loizel, Coutumes 14. It results from the nature of their functions, and of their duties, as well to the court as to the client, that no one can, even by consent, be the attorney of both the litigating parties in the same controversy; Farr. 47. The name of attorney has commonly been applied in this country to those who practise in courts of common law; solicitors, in courts of equity; and proctors, in courts of admiralty.

The two branches of the legal profession were distinguished by Lord Brougham in The Serjeant's Case in 1839: "If you appear by attorney, he represents you, but where you have the assistance of an advocate you are present. . . . Appearance by an attorney is one thing, but admitting advocates to plead the cause of another is a totally different proceeding." The case is reported in Manning's Serviens ad Legem.

As a general rule the eligibility of persons to hold the office of attorney-at-law is settled by local legislation or by rule of court.

The admission of attorneys to practise and their powers, duties and privileges are proper subjects of legislative control to the same extent and subject to the same limitations, as in the case of any other profession or business; Cook v. De La Guerra, 24 Cal. 241; In re Cooper, 22 N. Y. 67. In Robinson's Case, 131 Mass. 376, 41 Am. Rep. 239, this was recognized where a woman applied for admission and was rejected because the statute had not so provided, and it was said that the duty of the courts is limited to declaring the law as it is; and whether any change would be expedient is a legislative question. In In re Applicants for License, 143 N. C. 1, 55 S. E. 635, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 10 Ann. Cas. 187, a statute provided that persons possessing certain qualifications should be admitted to the practise of the law. One of these was that such applicant should file with the clerk of the court a certificate of good moral character signed by two attorneys of the court. Protests against the admission of three applicants were filed on the ground that they were not of good moral character, and it was held that when a statute has prescribed the qualifications for admission, and an applicant is shown to possess these qualifications, the courts must admit him. It was urged that this statute impaired the inherent right of the court to control its officers, but the court, quoting from a dissenting opinion in an Illinois case infra, said that if this is one of the inherent powers of a court, it is just as inherent in one court as another, and so it might come about that the judges of the supreme court and each of the judges of the superior courts might require widely different qualifications.

The Illinois case is directly opposed to this, and holds that the function of determining whether an applicant is sufficiently acquainted with the law pertains to the courts themselves. An act providing that persons having certificates of graduation from law schools of a certain specified standard should be admitted to practise law was held to be an unconstitutional encroachment upon the judicial branch of the government; In re Day, 181 Ill. 73, 54 N. E. 646, 50 L. R. A. 519; and to the same effect, In re Branch, 70 N. J. L. 537, 57 Atl. 431; In re Mosness, 39 Wis. 509, 20 Am. Rep. 55, where a statute was held invalid which authorized the admission of a non-resident. See 13 Harv. L. Rev. 233, where it is said, "The legislature certainly has no positive power to compel the courts to admit persons to practice before them," although admitting a limited control to prevent the admission of unsuitable persons. And a Pennsylvania case commenting on an act providing that the court shall admit attorneys in specified cases says, "We are clearly of the opinion that the Act of 1887, though probably not so intended, is an encroachment upon the judiciary department of the government;" Petition of Splane, 123 Pa. 527, 16 Atl. 481.

It has been held that, excepting where permitted by special statute, women cannot act as attorneys-at-law in the various states; In re Bradwell, 55 Ill. 535; Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 130, 21 L. Ed. 442; and the supreme court of the United States will not issue a mandamus to compel a state court to admit a woman to practise law before such court, upon the ground that she has been denied a privilege or immunity belonging to her as a citizen of the United States, in contravention of the constitution; In re Lockwood, 154 U. S. 116, 14 Sup. Ct. 1082, 38 L. Ed. 929; the right to practise law in a state court not being such privilege or immunity; Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 130, 21 L. Ed. 442; but the general trend of authority now is that women may be admitted to practise as attorneys; In re Leach, 134 Ind. 665, 34 N. E. 641, 21 L. R. A. 701; Ricker's Petition, 66 N. H. 207, 29 Atl. 559, 24 L. R. A. 740; Richardson's Case, 3 D. R. (Pa.) 299. Any woman of good standing at the bar of the supreme court of any state or territory or of the District of Columbia for three years, and of good moral character, may become a member of the bar of the supreme court of the U. S.; Act Feb. 15, 1879. In North Carolina, unnaturalized foreigners cannot be licensed as attorneys; Ex parte Thompson, 10 N. C. 355; Weeks, Att. at Law, 73, note.

The business of attorneys is to carry on the practical and formal parts of the suit; 1 Kent 207. See, as to their powers, 2 Supp. to Ves. Jr. 241, 254; 3 Chit. Bla. Com. 23, 338; Bacon, Abr. Attorney; Lynch v. Com., 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 368, 16 Am. Dec. 582; Huston v. Mitchell, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 307, 16 Am. Dec. 506; Holker v. Parker, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 452, 3 L. Ed. 396.

The presumption is that an attorney has authority to appear; if the person he appears for does not disclaim his authority, he is bound; Bacon v. Mitchell, 14 N. D. 454, 106 N. W. 129, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244; International Harvester Co. of America v. Champ-lin, 155 App. Div. 847, 140 N. Y. Supp. 842.

The authority of an attorney commences with his retainer; Stone v. Bank, 174 U. S. 413, 19 Sup. Ct. 747, 43 L. Ed. 1028; while acting generally for a client he cannot accept service without authority; Reed v. Reed, 19 S. C. 548. After he has been retained in a case, he has certain implied powers therein; Stone v. Bank, 174 U. S. 413, 19 Sup. Ct. 747, 43 L. Ed. 1028. In suits actually pending, he may agree that one suit shall abide the event of another suit; Ohlquest v. Farwell, 71 Ia. 231, 32 N. W. 277; Gilmore v. Ins. Co., 67 Cal. 366, 7 Pac. 781. He may discontinue an action; Barrett v. R. Co., 43 N. Y. 628; Simpson v. Brown, 1 Wash. Terr. 248. In Rhutael v. Rule, 97 Ia. 20, 65 N. W. 1013, it was held that the authority to dismiss must be specially conferred; contra, Bacon v. Mitchell, 14 N. D. 454, 106 N. W. 129, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244. He may, where a pending case has been referred to arbitrators, agree to the submission of all matters in controversy, including those not embraced in the case; Bingham's Trustees v. Guthrie, 19 Pa. 418.

In general, the agreement of an attorney-at-law, within the scope of his employment, binds his client; 1 Salk. 86; as, to amend the record; Johnson v. Chaffant, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 75; to refer a cause; Holker v. Parker, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 436, 3 L. Ed. 396; 3 Taunt. 486; not to sue out a writ of error; 1 H. Bla. 21, 23; 2 Saund. 71 a, b; 1 Term 388; to strike off a non pros.; Reinholdt v. Albertl, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 469; to waive a judgment by default; 1 Archb. Pr. 26; or waive a jury trial; Stevenson v. Felton, 99 N. C. 58, 5 S. E. 399. But the act must be within the scope of his authority. He cannot, for example, without special authority, purchase lands for the client at sheriff's sale; Pearson v. Morrison, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 21; Beardsley v. Root, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 464, 6 Am. Dec. 386; or extend the time for payment of money to release a judgment in ejectment, entered by consent; Beaty v. Hamilton, 127 Pa. 71, 17 Atl. 755; or compromise a claim; Brockley v. Brockley, 122 Pa. 1, 15 Atl. 646; Willard v. Gas-Fixture Co., 47 Mo. App. 1; U. S. v. Beebe, 180 U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 371, 45 L. Ed. 563; contra, Beliveau v. Mfg. Co., 68 N. H. 225, 40 Atl. 734, 44 L. R. A. 167, 73 Am. St. Rep. 577; or satisfy a judgment for less than is due; Peters v. Lawson, 66 Tex. 336, 17 S. W. 734.

In the absence of fraud, the client is concluded by the acts, and even by the omissions, of his attorney; Rogers v. Greenwood, 14 Minn. 333 (Gil. 256); Sampson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. 200; Weeks, Att. at Law 375.

The mistake or unskillfulness of the attorney is not enough to authorize an injunction to restrain the enforcement of a judgment; Donovan v. Miller, 12 Idaho 600, 88 Pac. 82, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524, 10 Ann. Cas. 444; Hambrick v. Crawford, 55 Ga. 335; Lowe v. Hamilton, 132 Ind. 406, 31 N. E. 1117; Payton v. McQuown, 97 Ky. 757, 31 S. W. 874, 53 Am. St. Rep. 437, and 31 L. R. A. 33, where the cases are collected in a note. Nor is the mistake of counsel upon a point of law ground for a new trial; Patterson v. Matthews, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 80. Relief, however, has been granted on this ground, notably in Sharp v. New York, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 578, which with an early case in Tennessee is criticized as deciding "with a spirit of humanity but with little regard for the settled principles of law"; Black, Judg. sec. 375.

In general, he has all the powers exercised by the usages of the court in which the suit is pending; Weeks, Att. at Law 374.

The principal duties of an attorney are—to be true to the court and to his client; to manage the business of his client with care, skill, and integrity; 4 Burr. 2061; 1 B. & Ald. 202; 2 Wils. 325; 1 Bingh. 347; Mech. Ag. 824; to keep his client informed as to the state of his business; to keep his secrets confided to him as such. And he is privileged from disclosing such secrets when called as a witness; Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414, 69 Am. Dec. 321; Sibley v. Waffle, 16 N. Y. 180; Martin v. Anderson, 21 Ga. 301; 40 E. L. & Eq. 353; Sargent v. Inhabitants of Hampden, 38 Me. 581. See CLIENT; CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS. His first duty is the administration of justice, and his duty to his client is subordinate to that; In re Thomas, 36 Fed. 242. If an attorney while employed by one side secretly seeks employment on the other side, promising to give information acquired during such employment, he will be disbarred; U. S. v. Costen, 38 Fed. 24; but an attorney who learns from his client, in a professional consultation, or in any other manner, that the latter intends to commit a crime; it seems is bound by a higher duty to society and to the party to be affected to disclose it; State v. Barrows, 52 Conn. 323.

In estimating the value of services rendered by an attorney it is proper to take into account the time necessarily employed in and the success of the litigation; Berry v. Davis, 34 Ia. 594; the amount of values involved; Smith v. R. Co., 60 Ia. 515, 15 N. W. 303; and recovered; Parsons v. Hawley, 92 Ia. 175, 60 N. W. 520; the ability, learning and experience of the attorney and his standing in the profession; Clark v. Ellsworth, 104 Ia. 442, 73 N. W. 1023; the character of the claim and the amount of the services to be rendered; Morehouse v. R. Co., 185 N. Y. 520, 78 N. E. 179, 7 Ann. Cas. 377.

An attorney's contract with his client for a fifty per cent. contingent fee is not necessarily unenforceable on the ground of being unconscionable; In re Fitzsimons, 174 N. Y. 15, 66 N. E. 554, but see to the contrary, 48 Ohio L. Bul. 238, discussing Hermon v. R. Co., 121 Fed. 184; Muller v. Kelly, 125 Fed. 212, 60 C. C. A. 170. These cases were not decided on the ground of champerty, but of taking improper advantage of the fiduciary relation. Fifty per cent. of the claim was held not to be extortionate in a difficult and complicated case, where the attorney exercised no influence in adjusting the amount, but it was voluntarily offered, and where he had paid out of it large amounts to other counsel; Taylor v. Bemiss, 110 U. S. 42, 3 Sup. Ct. 441, 28 L. Ed. 64.

Where an attorney had agreed to prosecute an action for a contingent fee of one-half the amount recovered, it was held that the client could maintain an action against the attorney for the whole amount so recovered less the costs paid by the attorney; Ackert v. Barker, 131 Mass. 436. See CHAMPERTY.

A contract for a contingent fee does not deprive the client of the right to substitute another attorney; Johnson v. Ravitch, 113 App. Div. 810, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1059.

Any agreement conditioned on obtaining a divorce or intended or calculated to facilitate its obtainment is void; Barngrover v. Pettigrew, 128 Ia. 533, 104 N. W. 904, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, 111 Am. St. Rep. 206, where the contract was to procure evidence to obtain a divorce. The parties to the divorce suit compromised and settled their differences and the attorney sued to recover on the contract. It was held that he could not recover on a quantum meruit because the services rendered were in themselves illegal.

A provision of a trust mortgage deed that in case of its sale an attorney's fee of five per cent. should be paid out of the proceeds was held void as against public policy though the fee was reasonable; Turner v. Boger, 126 N. C. 300, 35 S. E. 592, 49 L. R. A. 590.

A contract between a wife and her solicitor providing that for his services in procuring an allowance of alimony and enforcing its payment he shall receive a share of the alimony recovered is void, not only because the claim for alimony is incapable of assignment, but also because the contract is against public policy; Lynde v. Lynde, 64 N. J. Eq. 736, 52 Atl. 694, 58 L. R. A. 471, 97 Am. St. Rep. 692. Here the Court of Chancery took jurisdiction over the solicitor as an officer of the court, in order to require him to do justice to his client.

Any contract whereby a client is prevented from settling or discontinuing a suit is void, as such an agreement would encourage litigation; Kansas City Elevated R. Co. v. Service, 74 Kan. 316, 94 Pac. 262, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1105; Huber v. Johnson, 68 Minn. 74, 70 N. W. 806, 64 Am. St. Rep. 456; Boardman v. Thompson, 25 Ia. 487; Weller v. R. Co., 68 N. J. Eq. 659, 61 Atl. 459, 6 Ann. Cas. 442; Davis v. Chase, 159 Ind. 242, 64 N. E. 88, 853, 95 Am. St. Rep. 294; North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Ackley, 171 Ill. 100, 49 N. E. 222, 44 L. R. A. 177; Davis v. Webber, 66 Ark. 190, 49 S. W. 822, 45 L. R. A. 196, 74 Am. St. Rep. 81; In re Snyder, 190 N. Y. 66, 82 N. E. 742, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101, 123 Am. St. Rep. 533, 13 Ann. Cas. 441; Davy v. Ins. Co., 78 Ohio St. 256, 85 N. E. 504, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443, 125 Am. St. Rep. 694.

But courts have an inherent power to protect attorneys against settlements consummated with the express purpose of depriving them of their compensation; Potter v. Min. Co., 19 Utah 421, 57 Pac. 270; Jones v. Morgan, 39 Ga. 310, 99 Am. Dec. 458; Jackson v. Stearns, 48 Or. 25, 84 Pac. 798, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 390. The attorney may proceed in the original suit in the name of his client notwithstanding the settlement; Randall v. Van Wagenen, 115 N. Y. 527, 22 N. E. 361, 12 Am. St. Rep. 828. But this rule applies only when the attorney has acquired a lien; Weicher v. Cargill, 86 Minn. 271, 90 N. W. 402; and it is said that there are serious practical difficulties in the way of such a procedure when the action is to recover unliquidated damages. The power to arrest or rescind the effect of a settlement is cautiously exercised in respect to suits for debts actually owing; and the power would be more cautiously applied to actions for torts, where it would be impracticable for the court, upon the opposing representations of the parties and without hearing the proof, to ascertain whether there was a just cause of action or whether there was ground to distrust the justice of the settlement. The whole case would have to be tried before the court could pronounce that the suit was properly instituted, and that it afforded prima facie ground for the award of costs; Boogren v. R. Co., 97 Minn. 51, 106 N. W. 104, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 379, 114 Am. St. Rep. 691, where the court adopting the language of Betts, J., in Peterson v. Watson, 1 Blatchf. & H. 487, Fed. Cas. No. 11,037, concludes: "That manifestly could never be done without serious inconvenience and expense; and the better practical rule will doubtless be to leave the proctor to look to the responsibility of his client alone. Ordinarily he will take the precaution to secure himself against the mischances of suits of this character; and if he does not, no urgent equity is thereby created for an extraordinary interference on his behalf by the court." This practice may occasionally work a hardship to the attorneys, but it is nevertheless a salutary rule.

As to the right of the attorney to recover under statutes giving him a lien, where his client has settled without his knowledge, see LIEN.

For a violation of his duties an action will, in general, lie; Cavillaud v. Yale, 3 Cal. 108, 58 Am. Dec. 388; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 145, 146; and in some cases he may be punished by attachment. Official misconduct may be inquired into in a summary manner, and the name of the offender stricken from the roll; Rice v. Com., 18 B. Monr. (Ky.) 472; Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 335, 20 L. Ed. 646; 17 Am. Dec. 194 note. See Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; DISBAR.

It is held that to solicit causes of action tends to promote litigation and to degrade the profession and that a contract so obtained is invalid; Ingersoll v. Coal Co., 117 Tenn. 263, 98 S. W. 178, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 282, 119 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 10 Ann. Cas. 829, where the plaintiffs, a firm of attorneys, solicited a large number of claims for personal injuries and brought suit thereon. The defendants compromised with the claimants without the consent of the attorneys, and the latter sued the defendants for the fees promised by the claimants.

An attorney who enters into a barratrous contract to bring suits cannot recover upon an implied contract for services rendered in a suit brought pursuant to such contract, though the services are not, in themselves and apart from the barratrous contract, improper or illegal; Gammons v. Johnson, 76 Minn. 76, 78 N. W. 1035; Gammons v. Gulbranson, 78 Minn. 21, 80 N. W. 779. A contract whereby an attorney agrees to pay for business brought to him is void; Alpers v. Hunt, 86 Cal. 78, 24 Pac. 846, 9 L. R. A. 483, 21 Am. St. Rep. 17; but this decision was under a statute providing for the disbarment of attorneys who lent their names to be used in legal proceedings by persons who were not attorneys. That case was followed in Langdon v. Conlin, 67 Neb. 243, 93 N. W. 389, 60 L. R. A. 429, 108 Am. St. Rep. 643, 2 Ann. Cas. 834, where the facts were similar and the statute declared the rights and duties of attorneys. That such contracts are void as against public policy and good morals is held in Lyon v. Hussey, 82 Hun 15, 31 N. Y. Supp. 281; Burt v. Place, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 431, where a statute prohibits the promise of a valuable consideration to any person as an inducement to placing a claim in the hands of an attorney. An attorney was held to be prohibited from paying or agreeing to pay a layman for inducing a client to place his claim in the attorney's hands; In re Clark, 184 N. Y. 222, 77 N. E. 1, affirming 108 App. Div. 150, 95 N. Y. Supp. 388. But see to the contrary; Voeke v. Peters, 58 Ill. App. 338, where an agreement by attorneys to pay a commission for all business brought to them was held not contrary to public policy; and to the same effect, Dunne v. Herrick, 37 Ill. App. 180, where an attorney's clerk solicited business for him and a contract between attorney and client to pay the attorney one-half the amount recovered in a suit for personal injuries was held valid and binding on the client.

The execution and delivery by an attorney at law of a power of attorney to sign his name to any and all letters of collection and other business of the corporation as long as the attorney in fact should remain in the employ of the corporation, is unprofessional conduct requiring discipline; In re Rothschild, 140 App. Div. 583, 125 N. Y. Supp. 629, where, as the offence had never been passed upon by the court, the attorney was suspended from practice for one year with leave to apply for reinstatement on satisfactory proof of his conduct meanwhile.

An attorney is not an insurer of the result in a case in which he is employed, and only ordinary care and diligence can be required of him; Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331, 41 N. W. 417, 16 Am. St. Rep. 585. The authority of an attorney is revoked by the death of the client, and he cannot proceed further in the cause without a new retainer from the proper representative; Prior v. Kiso, 96 Mo. 303, 9 S. W. 898; Moyle v. Landers, 78 Cal. 99, 20 Pac. 241, 12 Am. St. Rep. 22.

An attorney is entitled to two kinds of liens for his fees, one upon the papers of his client in his possession, called a retaining lien, and the other upon a judgment or fund recovered, called a charging lien; Goodrich v. McDonald, 112 N. Y. 157, 19 N. E. 649; Sanders v. Seelye, 128 Ill. 631, 21 N. E. 601; Strohecker v. Irvine, 76 Ga. 639, 2 Am. St. Rep. 62. See Blackburn v. Clarke, 85 Tenn. 506, 3 S. W. 505; Taylor Iron & Steel Co. v. Higgins, 66 Hun 626, 20 N. Y. Supp. 746.

"A corporation cannot practice law, directly or indirectly;" In re Co-operative Law Co., 198 N. Y. 479, 92 N. E. 15, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 55, 139 Am. St. Rep. 839, 19 Ann. Cas. 879.

In all United States courts parties may plead and manage their cases personally or by counsel as the rules of such courts provide. R. S. § 747.

ATTORNEY'S CERTIFICATE. A certificate of the commissioners of stamps that the attorney therein named has paid the annual duty. This must be renewed yearly; and the penalty for practising without such certificate is fifty pounds; Stat. 37 Geo. III. c. 90, §§ 26, 28, 30. See also 7 & 8 Vict. c. 73, §§ 21-26; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 63.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL. A great officer, under the king, created by letters patent, whose office is to exhibit informations and prosecute for the crown in matters criminal; to file bills in the exchequer in any matter concerning the king's revenue. Others may bring bills against the king's attorney; 3 Bla. Com. 27; Termes de la Ley. He is usually addressed as "Mr. Attorney."

In each state there is an attorney-general, or similar officer, who appears for the state or people, as in England the attorney-general appears for the crown.

"The office is a public trust, which involves the exercise of an almost boundless discretion by an officer who ought to stand as impartial as a judge." Com. v. Burrell, 7 Pa. 39, per Gibson, C. J.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES. An officer appointed by the president. His duties are to prosecute and conduct all suits in the supreme court in which the United States shall be concerned, and give his advice upon questions of law when required by the president, or when requested by the heads of any of the departments, touching matters that concern their departments; Act of 24th Sept. 1789. He is a member of the cabinet and under the act of congress of Jan. 19, 1886, U. S. Rev. Stat. 1 Supp. 487, is the fourth in succession, after the vice-president, to the office of president in case of a vacancy. See DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE; CABINET.

ATTORNEY, LETTER OF. See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

ATTORNEY, WARRANT OF. See WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

ATTORMENT. See ATTORN.

AU BESOIN. (Fr. in case of need. "Au besoin chez Messieurs — à —." "In case of need, apply to Messrs. — at —").

A phrase used in the direction of a bill of exchange, pointing out the person to whom application may be made for payment in case of failure or refusal of the drawee to pay; Story, Bills § 65.

AUBAINE. See DROIT D'AUBAINE.

AUCTION. A public sale of property to the highest bidder. See 19 Cent. L. J. 247; Bateman, Auct.

The manner of conducting an auction is immaterial, whether it be by public outcry or by any other manner. The essential part is the selection of a purchaser from a number of bidders. In a case where a woman continued silent during the whole time of the sale, but when any one bid she gave him a glass of brandy, and, when the sale broke up, the person who received the last glass of brandy was taken into a private room and he was declared to be the purchaser, this was adjudged to be an auction; 1 Dowl. Bailm. 115.

Auctions are generally conducted by persons licensed for that purpose. A bidder may be employed by the owner, if it be done bonâ fide and to prevent a sacrifice of the property under a given price; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Loomis, 11 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 431; Veazie v. Williams, 3 Sto. 622, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907; The Raleigh, 37 Fed. 125. It has been held that the owner should give fair notice of this so that no one should be misled or deceived; Miller v. Baynard, 2 Houst. (Del.) 559, 83 Am. Dec. 168; but where bidding is fictitious, and by combination with the owner to mislead the judgment and inflame the zeal of others, it would be a fraudulent and void sale; Poll. Contr. 539; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. Ed. 1018; id., 3 Sto. 611, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907; Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254; Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564; Phippen v. Stickney, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 384; Switzer v. Skiles, 3 Gilm. (Ill.) 529, 44 Am. Dec. 723. But see 2 Kent 539, where this subject is considered. And see 6 J. B. Moore 316; 15 M. & W. 367; Baham v. Bach, 13 La.

287, 33 Am. Dec. 561; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; McDowell v. Slums, 41 N. C. 278; Tomlinson v. Savage, id., 430; Pennock's Appeal, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 561. Unfair conduct on the part of the purchaser will avoid the sale; 6 J. B. Moore 216; 3 B. & B. 116; Venzie v. Williams, 3 Sto. 623, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907; Wooton v. Hinkle, 20 Mo. 290; Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564. Where a buyer addressed the company assembled at an auction and persuaded them that they ought not to bid against him, the purchase by such buyer was held void; 3 B. & B. 116.

Where a sale is "without reserve" neither the vendor nor any one on his behalf can bid, and the property must go to the highest bidder; see Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195. An auctioneer who offers his property for sale without reserve pledges himself that the sale shall be without reserve, or contracts that the property shall go to the highest bona fide bidder, and in case the owner overbid, the highest bona fide bidder may sue the auctioneer as upon a contract; 1 El. & El. 309; such a case is not affected by the Statute of Frauds, § 17, which relates only to direct sales; id. This rule was approved in [1899] 2 Ch. 73; and see [1904] 41 Sc. L. Rep. 688.

In the United States the influence of the leading English case (1 El. & El. 309) is less plainly shown and the rule is even less clearly defined; Tillman v. Dunman, 114 Ga. 406, 40 S. E. 244, 57 L. R. A. 787, 88 Am. St. Rep. 28.

In New York it is said there is no case in that state which is directly in point upon the proposition that as a matter of law, where an auctioneer advertises a sale at public auction, and in response to this invitation bidders attend, an implied contract arises between them that the property will be knocked down to the highest bidder; Taylor v. Harnett, 26 Misc. 362, 55 N. Y. Supp. 988. In this case the auctioneer refused to accept the highest bid because of its inadequacy; to the same effect, Newman v. Vonderheide, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint 164; but see Hartwell v. Gurney, 16 R. I. 78, 13 Atl. 113, where it is said obiter that the stricter rule seems to be the just and honest one and ought to prevail, for an offer to sell at auction is an offer to sell to the highest bidder, and every bid is an inchoate acceptance entitling the bidder to the property offered, if it turns out to be the highest and there is no retraction on either side before the hammer falls. But it has been held that an announcement that a certain property will be sold to the highest bidder is a mere declaration of an intent to hold an auction; Anderson v. R. Co., 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379.

A bid may be retracted by the bidder or the property withdrawn before acceptance has been signified; 3 Term 148; 4 Bingh. 653; 6 Hare 443; Benj. Sales § 270; [1904] 41 Sc. L. Rep. 688. The making the bid is the offer and it is accepted and made a binding unilateral contract by the fall of the hammer; 13 Harv. L. Rev. 58, citing 3 Term 148; 6 B. & S. 720; Blossom v. R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. Ed. 43; Coker v. Dawkins, 20 Fla. 141.

Sales at auction are within the Statute of Frauds; 2 B. & C. 945; 7 East 558; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; People v. White, 6 Cal. 75; Talman v. Franklin, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 395.

In Louisiana a bid made at an auction sale, although formally accepted, is not a complete sale, but only a promise of sale, which gives a right of action for breach or a claim for specific performance; Collins v. Desmaret, 45 La. Ann. 108, 12 South. 121. In California and Dakota the codes provide that if the auctioneer, having authority to do so, announces that the sale will be without reserve, the highest bona fide bidder has an absolute right to the completion of the sale to him, and that bids by the seller or any agent for him are void. But they also enact that the bidder may withdraw at any time before the hammer falls. Cal. Civ. Code § 1796; Dak. Civ. Code § 1026. Elsewhere, it is complete, at common law. See Bateman, Auctions 180. Error in description of real estate sold will avoid the sale if it be material; 4 Bingh. N. C. 463; 8 C. & P. 469; 1 Y. & C. 658; but an immaterial variation merely gives a case for deduction from the amount of purchase-money; 2 Kent 437; Judson v. Wass, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 525, 6 Am. Dec. 392; State v. Gaillard, 2 Bay (S. C.) 11, 1 Am. Dec. 628; McFerran v. Taylor, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 270, 2 L. Ed. 436.

See BY-BIDDING.

AUCTIONARIUS (Lat.). A seller; a registrator; a retailer; one who bought and sold; an auctioneer, in the modern sense. Spelman, Gloss. One who buys poor, old, worn-out things to sell again at a greater price. Du Cange.

AUCTIONEER. A person authorized by law to sell the goods of others at public sale; one who conducts a public sale or auction; Com. v. Harnden, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 482. He is the agent of the seller; Ans. Contr. 346; 3 Term 148; Boinest v. Leigne, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 464; and of the buyer, for some purposes at least; 4 Ad. & E. 792; 3 Ves. & B. 57; McComb v. Wright, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 659; Trustees of First Baptist Church of Ithaca v. Bigelow, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 28; Cleaves v. Foss, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 1; Inhabitants of Alna v. Plummer, id. 258; Brent v. Green, 6 Leigh (Va.) 16; 2 Kent 539; Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616; Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 653;

White v. Watkins, 23 Mo. 423; [1902] 2 Ch. 266; up to the moment of sale he is agent for the vendor exclusively; it is only when the bidder becomes the purchaser that the agency for the buyer begins; Benj. Sales § 270. He is the agent of both parties at a public sale within the Statute of Frauds; 7 East 558; Pugh v. Chesseldine, 11 Ohio 109, 37 Am. Dec. 414; Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 655; Benj. Sales § 268. And see 16 Harv. L. Rev. 220, where it is remarked that the case where an agent acts for both parties at a sale is in itself anomalous; but not if he sells goods at a private sale; 1 H. & C. 484. The memorandum must be made at the time of the sale; Horton v. McCarty, 53 Me. 394; Smith v. Arnold, 5 Mas. 414, Fed. Cas. No. 13,004. An auctioneer employed to sell goods in his possession ordinarily has authority to receive payment for them, but if he acts as a mere crier or broker for a principal who retains possession, he would not have such authority; Benj. Sales § 741. He has a special property in the goods, and may bring an action for the price; 7 Taunt. 237; Beller v. Block, 19 Ark. 566; Hulse v. Young, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; see 5 M. & W. 645; 5 B. & Ad. 568; and has a lien upon them for the charges of the sale, his commission, and the auction-duty; Harlow v. Sparr, 15 Mo. 184; 2 Kent 536.

Where auctioneers were employed to sell goods upon the terms that they were to be paid a lump sum by way of commission and were further to be paid all expenses, they were not entitled to charge the owner with the gross amounts of printing and advertising bills (where they had received discounts from printers and proprietors, in the honest belief that they were entitled to have such discounts allowed them); L. R. [1905] 1 K. B. 1.

He must obtain the best price he fairly can, and is responsible for damages arising from a failure to pursue the regular course of business, or from a want of skill; 3 B. & Ald. 616; and where he sells goods as the property of one not the owner, is liable for their value to the real owner; 7 Taunt. 237; Hoffman v. Carow, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 21; Allen v. Brown, 5 Mo. 323; and if he sells goods with notice that they were obtained by fraud of another, he is liable to the real owner; Morrow Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Shoe Co., 57 Fed. 685, 6 C. C. A. 508, 24 L. R. A. 417. See Hutchinson v. Gordon, 2 Harr. (Del.) 179. For false representation or breach of contract, the vendee of land sold at auction has a right of action against the vendor as well as the auctioneer to recover a deposit paid at the time of sale; Mahon v. Liscomb, 19 N. Y. Supp. 224. See AGENT; AUCTION; BIDDER.

AUCTIONEER. In Roman Law. An auctioneer.

In auction sales, a spear was fixed upright in the forum, beside which the seller took his stand;

hence goods thus sold were said to be sold sub hasta (under the spear). The catalogue of goods was on tablets called auctionariæ.

AUDIENCE. A hearing.

It is usual for the executive of a country to whom a minister has been sent, to give such minister an audience. And after a minister has been recalled, an audience of leave usually takes place.

As to the right of audience in court, see BARRISTER; DISBAR.

AUDIENCE COURT. See COURT OF AUDIENCE.

AUDITA QUERELA (Lat.). A form of action which lies for a defendant to recall or prevent an execution, on account of some matter occurring after judgment amounting to a discharge, and which could not have been, and cannot be, taken advantage of otherwise. Thatcher v. Gammon, 12 Mass. 268. If in a justice's suit the defendant is out of the state at the time of the service of the writ and remains away until after the return day and has no notice of suit, judgment by default may be set aside by audita querela; Sawyer v. Cross, 65 Vt. 158, 26 Atl. 528; but not unless the action was on its face appealable; Sawyer v. Cross, 66 Vt. 616, 30 Atl. 5.

It is a regular suit in which the parties appear and plead; Brooks v. Hunt, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 484; Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329; Clark v. Hydraulic Co., 12 Vt. 435; Melton v. Howard, 7 How. (Miss.) 103; Avery v. U. S., 12 Wall. (U. S.) 305, 20 L. Ed. 405; and in which damages may be recovered if execution was issued improperly; Brooke, Abr. Damages 38; but the writ must be allowed in open court, and is not of itself a supersedeas; Emery v. Patton, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 125.

It is a remedial process, equitable in its nature, based upon facts, and not upon the erroneous judgments or acts of the court; 2 Wms. Saund. 148, n.; Lovejoy v. Webber, 10 Mass. 103; Brackett v. Winslow, 17 Mass. 159; Little v. Cook, 1 Alk. (Vt.) 363, 15 Am. Dec. 698; Porter v. Vaughn, 24 Vt. 211.

It lies where an execution against A has been taken out on a judgment acknowledged by B. without authority, in A's name; Fitzh. N. B. 233; and see Cro. Eliz. 233; and generally for any matters which work a discharge occurring after judgment entered; Cro. Car. 443; Pettit v. Seaman, 2 Root (Conn.) 178; Com. v. Whitney, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 439; see 5 Co. 86 b; and for matters occurring before judgment which the defendant could not plead through want of notice or through collusion or fraud of the plaintiff; Johnson v. Harvey, 4 Mass. 485; Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. (Va.) 639, 16 Am. Dec. 780; Wardell v. Eden, 2 Johns. Cas. 258; Williams v. Butcher, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 304.

It may be brought after the day on which judgment might have been entered, although it has not been; 1 Rolle, Abr. 300, 431, pl. 10; 1 Mod. 111; either before or after execution has issued; Lothrop v. Bennet, Ktrb. (Conn.) 187.

It does not lie for matter which might have been, or which may be, taken advantage of by a writ of error; Sutton v. Tyrrell, 10 Vt. 87; in answer to a scire facias of the plaintiff; 1 Salk. 264; nor where there is or has been a remedy by plea or otherwise: T. Raym. 80; Thatcher v. Gammon, 12 Mass. 270; Barrett v. Vaughan, 6 Vt. 243; Avery v. U. S., 12 Wall. (U. S.) 305, 20 L. Ed. 405; nor where there has been an agreement to accept a smaller sum in payment of a larger debt, while any part of the agreement continues executory; Keen v. Vaughan's Ex'x, 48 Pa. 477; nor to show that a confessed judgment was to be collateral security only; Emery v. Patton, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 125; nor where a judgment is erroneous in part without a tender of the legal part of the judgment; Rickard v. Fisk, 66 Vt. 675, 30 Atl. 93; nor against the commonwealth; Com. v. Berger, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 237.

In modern practice it is usual to grant the same relief upon motion which might be obtained by audita querela; Baker v. Judges, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 191; Witherow v. Keller, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 274; and in some of the states the remedy by motion has entirely superseded the ancient remedy; Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. (Va.) 639, 16 Am. Dec. 780; Longworth v. Screven, 2 Hill (S. C.) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381; Marsh v. Haywood, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 210; Dunlap v. Clements, 18 Ala. 778; Chambers v. Neal, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 256; while in others audita querela is of frequent use as a remedy recognized by statute; Sawyer v. Cross, 66 Vt. 616, 30 Atl. 5; Rickard v. Fisk, 66 Vt. 675, 30 Atl. 93; Stone v. Chamberlain, 7 Gray (Mass.) 206; Foss v. Witham, 9 Allen (Mass.) 572.

"Audita querela was given quite recently, that is to say in the tenth year of the reign, in Parliament, . . . and it was never given before." Y. B. 18 Edw. III, Rolls Series, p. 308. See Jac. L. Dict.; Fitzh. N. B. 102; Register of Writs, vol. 1, pp. 149, 150 (for the writ itself).

AUDITOR. An officer of the government, whose duty it is to examine the accounts of officers who have received and disbursed public moneys by lawful authority.

"The name auditor seems to have been originally applied to one whose duties were judicial rather than fiscal." McIlwain, High Court of Parl. 251.

An officer of the court, assigned to state the items of an account between the parties in a suit where accounts are in question, and exhibit the balance. Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 218.

They may be appointed by courts either of law or equity. They are appointed at common law in actions of account; Bacon,

Abr. Accompt, F; and in many of the states in other actions, under statute regulations; Pierce v. Thompson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 193; Bartlett v. Trefethen, 14 N. H. 427; Campbell v. Crout, 3 R. I. 60. An order of reference is proper where an accounting is necessary and the questions of law involved have been disposed of; Brown v. Finch, 63 Hun 633, 18 N. Y. Supp. 551. Where a trial has been commenced before a jury and the defendant consents to an accounting and the discharge of the jury, he cannot afterwards object to the order of reference because it requires the auditor to pass on disputed questions of law and fact; Garrity v. Hamburger Co. (Ill.) 28 N. E. 743.

Appearing before an auditor and examining witnesses without objection constitutes a waiver of the auditor's taking an oath before entering on his duties; Pardridge v. Ryan, 134 Ill. 247, 25 N. E. 627; Newcomb v. Wood, 97 U. S. 581, 24 L. Ed. 1085; Kelsey v. Darrow, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 125.

They have authority to hear testimony; Shearman v. Akins, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 283; Leach v. Shepard, 5 Vt. 363; Townshend v. Duncan, 2 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 45; Callender v. Colegrove, 17 Conn. 1; Paine v. Ins. Co., 69 Me. 568; in their discretion; Smith v. Smith, 27 N. H. 244; in some states, to examine witnesses under oath; Palmer v. Palmer, 38 N. H. 418; Dorsey v. Hammond, 1 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 463; to examine books; Lazarus v. Ins. Co., 19 Pick. (Mass.) 81; Callender v. Colegrove, 17 Conn. 1; and other vouchers of accounts; Barnard v. Stevens, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 297.

The auditor's report must state a special account; Finney's Adm'r v. Harbeson, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 514; Thomas v. Alsop, 2 Root (Conn.) 12; Tutton v. Addams, 45 Pa. 67; Hill v. Hogaboom, 13 Vt. 141; Bartlett v. Trefethen, 14 N. H. 427; giving items allowed and disallowed; Macks v. Brush, 5 Vt. 70; Whitehead v. Perie, 15 Tex. 7; but it is sufficient if it refer to the account; Demund v. Gowen, 5 N. J. L. 687; but see Herrick v. Belknap's Estate, 27 Vt. 673; and are to report exceptions to their decision of questions taken before them to the court; Thompson v. Arms, 5 Vt. 546; Crousillat v. McCall, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 433; and exceptions must be taken before them; Chappedelaine v. Dechenaux, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 308, 2 L. Ed. 629; Thompson v. Arms, 5 Vt. 546; Davis' Heirs v. Foley, Walk. (Miss.) 43; Whitehead v. Perie, 15 Tex. 7; Benoit v. Brill, 24 Miss. 83; Anderson v. Usher, 59 Ga. 567; unless apparent on the face of the report; Himely v. Rose, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 313, 3 L. Ed. 111. See Mengas' Appeal, 19 Pa. 221.

In some jurisdictions, the report of auditors is final as to facts; Parker v. Avery, Ktrb. (Conn.) 353; Wood v. Barney, 2 Vt. 369; Davis' Heirs v. Foley, Walk. (Miss.) 43; In re Ludlam's Estate, 13 Pa. 188; Bradford v. Wright, 5 R. I. 338; Whitehead v.

Perle, 15 Tex. 7; Closson v. Means, 40 Me. 337; unless impeached for fraud, misconduct, or very evident error; Appeal of Stehman, 5 Pa. 413; Appeal of Speakman, 71 Pa. 25; Closson v. Means, 40 Me. 337; but subject to any examination of the principles of law in which they proceeded; Spencer v. Usher, 2 Day (Conn.) 116. In others it is held prima facie correct; Lyman v. Warren, 12 Mass. 412; Washington County Mutual Ins. Co. v. Dawes, 6 Gray (Mass.) 376; Tourne v. Riviere, 1 La. Ann. 380; Bartlett v. Trefethen, 14 N. H. 427; Mathes v. Bennett, 21 N. H. 188; and evidence may be introduced to show its incorrectness; Tourne v. Riviere, 1 La. Ann. 380; Benoit v. Brill, 24 Miss. 83; see Appeal of Thompson, 103 Pa. 603; Colgrove v. Rockwell, 24 Conn. 584; and in others it is held to be of no effect till sanctioned by the court; Dorsey v. Hammond, 1 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 463; Lee v. Abrams, 12 Ill. 111.

When the auditor's report is set aside in whole or in part, it may be referred back; Moore's Ex'r v. Beauchamp, 4 B. Monr. (Ky.) 71; Shearman v. Akins, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 283; Leach v. Hammond, 7 Colo. 79, 1 Pac. 693; or accepted if the party in favor of whom the wrong decision was made remits the item.

Where the report is referred back to the auditor, the whole case is reopened, and all parties are bound to take notice; In re Thomas' Estate, 76 Pa. 30; see Mason v. Potter, 26 Vt. 722; O'Neill v. Capelle, 62 Mo. 202.

Where two or more are appointed, all must act; Crone v. Daniels, 20 Conn. 331; unless the parties consent that a part act for all; Booth v. Tousey, 1 Tyl. (Vt.) 407.

An accountant appointed for the purpose of verifying and stating the true financial condition of a corporation, firm or individual. Lindley, L. J., in [1895] 2 Ch. 673, defining his duties to be in substance: To ascertain and state the true financial condition of the company and his duty is confined to that. He must take reasonable care to ascertain that the books show the company's true financial position. But he does not guarantee that the books do correctly show the true position of the company's affairs; or that his balance sheet is accurate according to the books. He must use reasonable care and skill, under the circumstances, before he believes that what he certifies is true; where suspicion is aroused more care is necessary.

AUDITORS OF THE IMPREST. Officers in the exchequer who formerly had the charge of auditing the great accounts of the king's customs, naval and military expenses, etc., but who are now superseded by the commissioners for auditing the public accounts. Jacob.

AUGMENTATION. The increase arising to the crown's revenues from the suppression of monasteries and religious houses and the appropriation of their lands and revenues.

A court of augmentations erected by Henry VIII., which was invested with the power of determining suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey lands.

The court was dissolved in the reign of Mary, but the office of augmentations remained long after; Cowell.

A share of the great tithes temporarily granted to the vicars by the appropriators, and made perpetual by statute 29 Car. II. c. 8.

The word is used in a similar sense in the Canadian law.

See COURT OF AUGMENTATION.

AULA. This was employed in mediæval England along with curia, and meant an enclosure or hall; it was used of the meetings of the lord's men held there exactly in the same way that the word court was used. McIlwain, High Court of Parl. 30. See COURT; CURIA; CURIA REGIS.

AULA REGIA. (Called frequently Aula Regis). The King's hall or palace. See CURIA REGIS.

AULIC COUNCIL. Pertaining to a royal court. In the old German empire, the Aulic Council was the personal council of the emperor, and one of the two supreme courts of the empire which decided without appeal. It was instituted about 1502, and organized under a definite constitution in 1559, modified in 1654. It finally consisted of a president, a vice-president, and eighteen councillors, six of whom were Protestants; the unanimous vote of the latter could not be set aside by the others. The Aulic Council ceased to exist on the extinction of the German Empire in 1806. The title is now given to the Council of State of the Emperor of Austria. Cent. Dict.

AUNCCEL WEIGHT. An ancient manner of weighing by means of a beam held in the hand. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

AUNT. The sister of one's father or mother: she is a relation in the third degree. See 2 Comyn, Dig. 474; Dane, Abr. c. 126, a. 3, § 4.

AUSTRALIAN BALLOT. See ELECTION.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY. An empire in the southern central portion of Europe.

Since 1867 it has consisted of Austria and Hungary united under one hereditary sovereign, a common army and navy and diplomacy controlled by the Delegations, a body of 120 members, one-half representing the legislature of Austria and one-half that of Hungary, the upper house of each country returning 20 and the lower house 40 delegates. Ordinarily the delegates sit and vote in two chambers, their jurisdiction being limited to foreign affairs, common finances, and war. The legislature of Austria consists of the Provincial Diets representing the provinces and the Reichsrath, which consists of an upper house composed of princes of the imperial family, nobles, ecclesiastics, and 120 life members nominated by the Emperor; also a lower house of 353 members, elected. There is a ministry of nine members.

The legislature of Hungary is conjointly in the King and the Diet or Reichstag. This consists of an upper house or house of magnates, including hereditary peers, ecclesiastics and fifty life peers appointed by the Crown and other special representatives, and the lower house elected by the people to the number of 453. There is a ministry of nine, including a president. The supreme court of Austria sits at Vienna, that of Hungary at Buda-Pesth. An administrative court, a high court of justice, and a court of cassation also sit at Vienna. There are courts of second instance in the larger cities and circuit courts at most of the principal towns throughout the Empire.

AUTER. Another. See AUTRE.

AUTER ACTION PENDANT (L. Fr. another action pending). A plea that another action is already pending. It may be made either at law or in equity; Story, Eq. Pl. § 736. The second suit must be for the same cause; 2 Dick. 611; Russell v. Alvarez, 5 Cal. 48; Hixon v. Schooley, 26 N. J. L. 461; Clark v. Tuggle, 18 Ga. 604; Ballou v. Ballou, 26 Vt. 673; Merritt v. Richey, 100 Ind. 416; but a writ of error may abate a suit on the judgment; Jenkins v. Pepoon, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 312; and if in equity, for the same purpose; 2 M. & C. Ch. 602; see Hart v. Granger, 1 Conn. 154; and in the same right; Story, Eq. Pl. § 739. The criterion by which to decide whether two suits are for the same cause of action is, whether the evidence, properly admissible in the one, will support the other; Steam Packet Co. v. Bradley, 5 Cr. C. C. 393, Fed. Cas. No. 13,333. See Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 679, 20 L. Ed. 666.

The suits must be such that the same judgment may be rendered in both; Buffum v. Tilton, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 510. They must be between the same parties; Hall v. Holcombe, 26 Ala. 720; Adams v. Gardiner, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 197; Langham v. Thomason, 5 Tex. 127; in person or interest; Bennett v. Chase, 21 N. H. 570; Hartz v. Com., 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 359; Anderson v. Barry, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 281. The parties need not be precisely the same; Rowley v. Williams, 5 Wis. 151.

A suit for labor is not abated by a subsequent proceeding in rem to enforce a lien; Delahay v. Clement, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 201. A suit in trespass is temporarily barred by a previous proceeding in rem to enforce a forfeiture under laws of United States; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 314, 4 L. Ed. 381.

The prior action must have been in a domestic court; 4 Ves. Ch. 357; Bowne v. Joy, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 221; Lyman v. Brown, 2 Curt. C. C. 559, Fed. Cas. No. 8,627; Hatch v. Spofford, 22 Conn. 485, 58 Am. Dec. 433; Drake v. Brander, 8 Tex. 351; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 588; Allen v. Watt, 69 Ill. 655; Yelverton v. Conant, 18

N. H. 123; see Newell v. Newton, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 470; Smith v. Lathrop, 44 Pa. 326, 84 Am. Dec. 448; Salmon v. Wootton, 9 Dana (Ky.) 422; Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Jackson, 86 Ga. 676, 13 S. E. 109; but a foreign attachment against the same subject-matter may be shown; Embree v. Hanna, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 101; see Winthrop v. Carlton, 8 Mass. 456; Morton v. Webb, 7 Vt. 124; Sargent v. Granite Co., 3 Misc. 325, 23 N. Y. Supp. 886; Harvey v. R. Co., 50 Minn. 405, 52 N. W. 905, 17 L. R. A. 84; but it will not avail where there was no appearance in the attachment suit or no personal service on the party attached; Douglass v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 200, 33 N. E. 938, 20 L. R. A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448; and of the same character; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 62; Story, Eq. Pl. 736; thus a suit at law is no bar to one in equity; Peak v. Bull & Co., 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 428; Bolton v. Landers, 27 Cal. 104; nor is the pendency of a bill in equity a bar to an action at law; Mattel v. Conant, 156 Mass. 418, 31 N. E. 487; Blanchard v. Stone, 16 Vt. 234; unless there be concurrent jurisdiction; 22 Law Rep. 74; but the plaintiff may elect, and equity will enjoin him from proceeding at law if he elect to proceed in equity; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. § 4; Bisp. Eq. § 363; but he will not be required to elect in such case, unless the suit at law is for the same cause, and the remedy at law is co-extensive, and equally beneficial with the remedy in equity. A suit in the circuit court having jurisdiction will abate a suit in the state court, if in the same state; Walsh v. Durkin, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 99; Smith v. Ins. Co., 22 N. H. 21; and so will a suit in a state court abate one in a United States circuit court; Earl v. Raymond, 4 McLean, 233, Fed. Cas. No. 4,243; but not unless jurisdiction is shown; White v. Whitman, 1 Curt. C. C. 494, Fed. Cas. No. 17,561; Ex parte Balch, 3 McLean, 221, Fed. Cas. No. 790; Wadleigh v. Veazie, 3 Sumn. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 17,031; and not unless the suit is pending for the same cause, and between the same parties, in the same state in which the circuit court is sitting; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983; Brooks v. Mills County, 4 Dill. 524, Fed. Cas. No. 1,955.

The pendency of another suit for the same equitable relief, in another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, is a bar to a motion for an injunction; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. City of Erie, 27 Pa. 380; and may be pleaded in abatement of an action at law for the same cause; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. R. Co., 76 Pa. 481.

In general, the plea must be in abatement; Hartz v. Com., 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 359; Carr v. Casey, 20 Ill. 637; Rowley v. Williams, 5 Wis. 151; Ex parte Balch, 3 McLean, 221, Fed. Cas. No. 790; Danforth v. R. Co., 93 Ala. 614, 11 South. 60; Central R. & Banking Co. v. Coleman, 88 Ga. 294, 14 S. E. 382; Mattel v. Conant, 156 Mass. 418, 31 N. W.

487; Rogers v. Hoskins, 15 Ga. 276; but in a penal action at the suit of a common informer, the priority of a former suit for the same penalty in the name of a third person may be pleaded in bar, because the party who first sued is entitled to the penalty; Anderson v. Barry, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 281.

It must be pleaded in abatement of the subsequent action in order of time; Renner v. Marshall, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 215, 4 L. Ed. 74; Carr v. Casey, 20 Ill. 637; Rowley v. Williams, 5 Wis. 151; Greenwood v. Rector, 1 Hempst. 708, Fed. Cas. No. 5,792; Hailman v. Buckmaster, 3 Gilman. (Ill.) 498; Buffum v. Tilton, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 510; Nicholl v. Mason, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 339.

It must show an action pending or judgment obtained at the time of the plea; Hixon v. Schooley, 26 N. J. L. 461; Hope v. Alley, 11 Tex. 259; but it is sufficient to show it pending when the second suit was commenced; Parker v. Colcord, 2 N. H. 36; Toland v. Tichenor, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 320; the court first acquiring concurrent jurisdiction retains it to the exclusion of the other; Griffin v. Birkhead, 84 Va. 612, 5 S. E. 685; when both suits are commenced at the same time, the pendency of each may be pleaded in abatement of the other, and both be defeated; Davis v. Dunklee, 9 N. H. 545; Beach v. Norton, 8 Conn. 71; Harris v. Linnard, 9 N. J. L. 58; Morton v. Webb, 7 Vt. 124; Middlebrook v. Travis, 68 Hun 155, 22 N. Y. Supp. 672; and the plaintiff cannot avoid such a plea by discontinuing the first action subsequently to the plea; 2 Ld. Raym. 1014; Com. v. Churchill, 5 Mass. 174; Frogg's Ex'rs v. Long's Adm'r, 3 Dana (Ky.) 157, 28 Am. Dec. 69; contra, Marston v. Lawrence, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 397; Ballou v. Ballou, 26 Vt. 673; Rogers v. Hoskins, 15 Ga. 270; Rush v. Frost, 49 Ia. 183; Findlay v. Keim, 62 Pa. 112; Warder v. Henry, 117 Mo. 530, 23 S. W. 776. And a prior suit discontinued before plea pleaded in the subsequent one will not abate such suit; Adams v. Gardiner, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 197; Dean v. Massey, 7 Ala. 601; Nichols v. Bank, 45 Minn. 102, 47 N. W. 462; nor will it if a nonsuit is entered nunc pro tunc, to make it of a date before the commencement of the second action; Wilson v. Pearson, 102 N. C. 290, 9 S. E. 707. It may be pleaded in abatement of the action in the inferior court, and must aver appearance, or at least service of process; 1 Vern. 318. Suing out a writ is said to be sufficient at common law; Bentley v. Joslin, 1 Hempst. 218, Fed. Cas. No. 18,232. See LIS PENDENS.

It must be shown that the court entertaining the first suit has jurisdiction; Rood v. Eslava, 17 Ala. 430; White v. Whitman, 1 Curt. 494, Fed. Cas. No. 17,561. It is a sufficient defence that the plaintiff has pleaded the identical claim on which the action was brought as a set-off in a pending suit by the defendant; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Davenport, 154 Pa. 111, 25 Atl. 890.

It must be proved by the defendant by record evidence; Fowler v. Byrd, Hempst. 213, Fed. Cas. No. 4,999 a; Com. v. Churchill, 5 Mass. 174; Riddle v. Potter, 1 Cra. C. C. 288, Fed. Cas. No. 11,811. It is said that if the first suit be so defective that no recovery can be had, it will not abate the second; Rogers v. Hoskins, 15 Ga. 270; Langham v. Thomason, 5 Tex. 127; Quinebaug Bank v. Tarbox, 20 Conn. 510; Downer v. Garland, 21 Vt. 362; Cornelius v. Vanarsdallen's Adm'r, 3 Pa. 434.

A prior indictment pending does not abate a second for the same offence; Dutton v. State, 5 Ind. 533; Com. v. Drew, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 279; Com. v. Dunham, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 513.

When a defendant is arrested pending a former suit or action in which he was held to bail, he will not, in general, be held to bail if the second suit be for the same cause of action; Clark v. Weldo, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 206; under special circumstances, in the discretion of the court, a second arrest will be allowed; Peck v. Hozier, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 347. Pendency of one attachment will abate a second in the same county; James v. Dowell, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 333.

AUTER DROIT. In right of another.

AUTER VIE. See ESTATE PUR AUTRE VIE.

AUTHENTIC ACT. In Civil Law. An act which has been executed before a notary or other public officer authorized to execute such functions, or which is testified by a public seal, or has been rendered public by the authority of a competent magistrate, or which is certified as being a copy of a public register. Nov. 73, c. 2; Cod. 752, 6. 4. 21; Dig. 22. 4.

An act which has been executed before a notary public or other officer authorized to execute such functions, in presence of two witnesses, free, male, and aged at least fourteen years; or of three witnesses, if the party be blind. La. Civ. Code, art. 2231. If the party does not know how to sign, the notary must cause him to affix his mark to the instrument. La. Civ. Code, art. 2231. The authentic act is full proof of the agreement contained in it, against the contracting parties and their heirs or assigns, unless it be declared and proved to be a forgery. id. art. 2233. See Merlin, Répert.

AUTHENTICATION. A proper or legal attestation.

Acts done with a view of causing an instrument to be known and identified.

Under the constitution of the U. S., congress has power to provide a method of au-thenticating copies of the records of a state with a view to their production as evidence in other states. See FOREIGN JUDGMENT; FULL FAITH AND CREDIT; RECORDS.

AUTHENTICS. A collection of the Novels of Justinian, made by an unknown person.

They are entire, and are distinguished by their name from the epitome made by Julian. See 1 Mackelvey, Civ. Law § 72.

A collection of extracts made from the Novels by a lawyer named Irnier, and which he inserted in the code at the places to which they refer. These extracts have the reputation of not being correct. Merlin, Répert. Authentique.

AUTHOR (Lat. auctor, from augere, to increase, to produce).

One who produces, by his own intellectual labor applied to the materials of his composition, an arrangement or compilation new in itself. Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Blatchf. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 640.

When a person has conceived the design of a work, and has employed others to execute it, the creation of the work may be so far due to his mind as to make him the author; 7 C. B. N. S. 268; but he is not an author who merely suggests the subject, and has no share in the design or execution of the work; 17 C. B. 432; Drone, Copyright 236. The reporter of a speech verbatim is the author of the report; [1900] A. C. 539. The adopter of a foreign drama, who introduces into his version material alterations, is an author of a dramatic piece; 74 C. T. 77; within the Fine Arts Copyright Act, the operator who takes (or superintends the taking of) the negative is the author of a photograph and not the actual proprietor of the business; 52 L. J. Q. B. 750.

See COPYRIGHT.

AUTHORITIES. Enactments and opinions relied upon as establishing or declaring the rule of law which is to be applied in any case.

The opinion of a court, or of counsel, or of a text-writer upon any question, is usually fortified by a citation of authorities. In respect to their general relative weight, authorities are entitled to precedence in the order in which they are here treated.

The authority of the constitution and of the statutes and municipal ordinances are paramount; and if there is any conflict among these, the constitution controls, and courts declare a statute or ordinance which conflicts with the former to be so far forth of no authority. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

The decisions of courts of justice upon similar cases are the authorities to which most frequent resort is to be had; and although in theory these are subordinate to the first class, in practice they do continually explain, enlarge, or limit the provisions of enactments, and thus in effect largely modify them. The word authorities is frequently used in a restricted sense to designate citations of this class. See 23 A. & E. Encyc. of Law 19; Chamberlain, Stare Decisis. See PRECEDENTS.

As to American decisions as authorities in English courts, see PRECEDENTS.

The opinions of legal writers. Of the vast number of treatises and commentaries which we have, comparatively few are esteemed as authorities. A very large number are in reality but little more than digests of the adjudged cases arranged in treatise form, and find their chief utility as manuals of reference. Hence it has been remarked that when we find an opinion in a text-writer upon any particular point, we must consider it not merely as the opinion of the author, but as the supposed result of the authorities to which he refers; and if on examination of those authorities they are found not to establish it, his opinion is disregarded; 3 B. & P. 301. Where, however, the writer declares his own opinion as founded upon principle, the learning and ability of the writer, together with the extent to which the reasons he assigns commend themselves to the reader, determine the weight of his opinion. A distinction has been made between writers who have and who have not held judicial station; Ram, Judgments 93. But this, though it may be borne in mind in estimating the learning and ability of an author, is not a just test of his authority. See 3 Term 64, 241. Early text-books have a footing of their own and are considered authorities. Pollock, First Book 236. "In England and America, not only is there no line between the careers of judges and advocates, but there is no line between the judges and advocates and the jurists. Indeed, a large proportion of those text-writers who could be properly cited as authority have either filled high judicial positions, or have been actively engaged in some branch of practice. Omitting the names of living writers, we have, in England, Bracton, Littleton, Coke, Hale, Doderidge, Gilbert, Foster, Blackstone, Fearne, Hargrave, Butler, Preston, Wigram, Abbott, Sugden, Stephen, Byles, Williams, Blackburn, Benjamin; and in the United States, Kent, Story, Redfield, Washburn, Rawle [Covenants for Title]." John C. Gray (Nature and Sources of Law 255). Foster's Crown Law (1762) is said to be the latest book to which authority in the exact sense can be ascribed. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 246. Five books are said to stand out pre-eminently in the history of English law—Glanvil, Bracton, Littleton, Coke and Blackstone. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 484.

"It is to my mind much to be regretted, and it is a regret which I believe every judge on the bench shares, that text-books are more and more quoted in court—I mean, of course, text-books by living authors—and some judges have gone so far as to say that they shall not be quoted." Kekewich, J., in [1887] L. R. 37 C. D. 54.

In complicated questions of real estate law, in the absence of cases, weight is given to text-books of recognized authority; 18 C. B. N. S. 90, 107 (Erle, C. J.); and to the settled practice of conveyancers; 2 Brod. & Bing. 473, 600, per Eldon, L. C., in the House of Lords; Turn. & R. 81, 87, when the same judge puts his decision on that ground, saying, that "after the abuse which I have heard at the bar of the House of Lords and elsewhere upon that subject, I am not sorry to have this opportunity of stating my opinion that great weight should be given to that practice." The practice of conveyancers was considered by Jessel, M. C., worthy of consideration though not decisive; 16 Ch. D. 211, 223.

As to the value and effect of the opinions of the Attorney-Generals of the United States, see In re District Attorney of United States, 2 Cadwalader's Cases 138, Fed. Cas. No. 3,924, 7 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 801, per Cadwalader, J. Devens, Atty.-Gen., in 16 Op. 522, referred to this opinion as being that of a subordinate judge, and therefore less weighty than those of the Attorney-Generals. See EXECUTIVE POWER.

The opinions of writers on moral science, and the codes and laws of ancient and foreign nations, are resorted to in the absence of more immediate authority, by way of ascertaining those principles which have commended themselves to legislators and philosophers in all ages. See CODE. Lord Coke's saying that common opinion is good authority in law, Co. Litt. 186 a, is not understood as referring to a mere speculative opinion in the community as to what the law upon a particular subject is; but to an opinion which has been frequently acted upon, and for a great length of time, by those whose duty it is to administer the law, and upon which course of action important individual rights have been acquired or depend; Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 528, 577, 49 Am. Dec. 189.

As to the mode of citing authorities, see CITATION OF AUTHORITIES.

See JUDGE-MADE LAW; LAW.

AUTHORITY. The lawful delegation of power by one person to another.

Authority coupled with an interest is an authority given to an agent for a valuable consideration, or which forms part of a security.

Express authority is that given explicitly, either in writing or verbally.

General authority is that which authorizes the agent to do everything connected with a particular business. Story, Ag. § 17.

It empowers him to bind his principal by all acts within the scope of his employment; and it cannot be limited by any private direction not known to the party dealing with him. Paley, Ag. 199.

Limited authority is that where the agent is bound by precise instructions.

Special authority is that which is confined to an individual transaction. Story, Ag. § 19; 15 East 400, 408; Andrews v. Kneeland, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 354.

Such an authority does not bind the employer, unless it is strictly pursued; for it is the business of the party dealing with the agent to examine his authority; and therefore, if there be any qualification or express restriction annexed to it, it must be observed; otherwise, the principal is discharged; Paley, Ag. 202.

Naked authority is that where the principal delegates the power to the agent wholly for the benefit of the former.

A naked authority may be revoked; an authority coupled with an interest is irrevocable.

Unlimited authority is that where the agent is left to pursue his own discretion.

See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

AUTOCRACY. A government where the power of the monarch is unlimited by law.

AUTOMATIC COUPLER. See SAFETY APPLIANCE ACT.

AUTOMOBILES. A vehicle for the carriage of passengers or freight, propelled by its own motor. It has been held to be a carriage, not a machine; Baker v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 53, 72 N. E. 336; but by the same court in a later case it was held that a statute enacted more than one hundred years ago providing that cities or towns should pay for the repairs of highways so as to make them reasonably safe for travellers with carriages could not be construed reasonably to include a heavy modern automobile; Doherty v. Inhabitants of Ager, 197 Mass. 241, 83 N. E. 677, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816, 125 Am. St. Rep. 355.

The legislature may, under the police power, regulate the driving of automobiles and motor cycles and provide for a registration fee, which is a license fee, not a tax; Com. v. Boyd, 188 Mass. 79, 74 N. E. 255, 108 Am. St. Rep. 464; see Com. v. Densmore, 29 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 217. A city may, under a charter conferring the power to regulate the use of its highways, enact an ordinance requiring the registering and numbering of automobiles or other motor vehicles and exacting a fee from the owner to pay for the license tag to be furnished by the city; People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L. R. A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790. It may regulate the speed of automobiles and require the use of reasonable safety appliances; City of Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94. It may prescribe different rates of speed in different parts of the city, according to the width of the streets, their use, and the density of population; Chittenden v. Columbus, 26 Ohio C. C. 531. An ordinance limiting speed within certain limits is not invalid because another ordinance permits street cars to run at a greater rate of speed; id. A provision in the charter of a city which empowered it to regulate the use of the streets and the speed of vehicles, and to license and regulate certain occupations, was held not to confer power to enact an ordinance requiring one who uses an automobile for his private business and pleasure only to submit to an examination and to be licensed; City of Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94; the ordinance was further held to impose a burden upon one class of citizens not imposed upon others.

There may be a recovery for common law negligence in operating an automobile, although the use of such vehicles has become a matter of statutory regulation; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487. The law does not denounce motor carriages as such on the public ways. So long as they are constructed and propelled in a manner consistent with the proper use of the highways and are calculated to subserve the public as a beneficial means of transportation, with reasonable safety to travellers by ordinary modes, they have an equal right with other vehicles in common use to occupy the streets and roads; Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1223, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402; Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656. There is nothing dangerous in their use when carefully managed. Their guidance, speed and noise are all subject to quick and easy regulation, and under the control of a competent and considerate manager it is as harmless on the road as other vehicles in common use; McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087. It is the manner of driving the vehicle, and that alone, which threatens the safety of the public. The ability to stop quickly, its quick response to guidance, its uncontrolled sphere of action, would seem to make the automobile one of the least dangerous of conveyances; Yale L. J. Dec. 1905. Because they are likely to frighten horses is no reason for prohibiting their use. In all human activities the law keeps up with improvement and progress brought about by discovery and invention; and in respect to highways, if the introduction of a new contrivance for transportation purposes, conducted with due care, is met with inconvenience and even accidental injury to those using ordinary modes, there can be no recovery, provided the contrivance is compatible with the general use and safety of the road. It is improper to say that the driver of a horse has rights in the road superior to the driver of the automobile; Hannigan v. Wright, 5 Pennewill (Del.) 537, 63 Atl. 234; Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508, 106 N. W. 71; and each is equally restricted in the exercise of his rights by the corresponding rights of the other; Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 522; Holland v. Bartch, 120 Ind. 46, 22 N. E. 83, 16 Am. St. Rep. 307. Each is required to use ordinary care, in order to avoid receiving injury as well as inflicting injury upon the other, and in this the degree of care required is to be estimated by the exigencies of the particular situation.

No operator of an automobile is exempt from liability for a collision in a public street by merely showing that at the time of the accident he did not run at a rate of speed exceeding the limit allowed by the law. He is bound to anticipate that he may meet persons at any point in a public street; Buscher v. Transp. Co., 106 App. Div. 493, 94 N. Y. Supp. 798; and he must keep a proper lookout for them; McFern v. Gardner, 121 Mo. App. 1, 97 S. W. 972; and keep his machine under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with another person also using care and caution; Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1223, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402; if necessary he must run slowly, and even stop; Thies v. Thomas, 77 N. Y. Supp. 276. No blowing of a horn or whistle, nor the ringing of a bell or gong, without an attempt to lessen the speed, is sufficient, if the circumstances demand that the speed should be lessened, or the machine be stopped, and such a course is practicable. The true test is that he should use all the care which a careful driver would have exercised under the same circumstances; Thies v. Thomas, 77 N. Y. Supp. 276. He has been held to the same degree of care as a motorman of an electric car; McFern v. Gardner, 121 Mo. App. 1, 97 S. W. 972. A pedestrian crossing a street is not bound to "stop, look and listen" for automobiles; Baker v. Close, 204 N. Y. 92, 97 N. E. 501, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 487. That a statute limiting speed on the highways applies only to horseless vehicles does not render it void as an unjust discrimination; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487.

The U. S. R. S. prohibiting passenger steamers from carrying as freight certain articles, including petroleum products or other like explosive fluids, except under certain conditions, were amended by the act of Feb. 21, 1901, which provides that "nothing in the foregoing or following sections of this act shall prohibit the transportation by steam vessels of gasoline or any of the products of petroleum when carried by motor vehicles (commonly known as automobiles) using the same as a source of motive power: provided however that all fire, if any, in such vehicles or automobiles be extinguished before entering the said vessel, and the same be not relighted until after said vehicle shall have left the same." Under this act it was held that gasoline contained in the tank of an automobile being transported on a steam vessel was carried as freight within the meaning of the statute, that an automobile in which the motive power was generated by passing an electric spark through a compressed mixture of gasoline and air in the cylinder, causing intermittent explosions, carried a fire while the vehicle was under motion from its own motive power; and that the carrying by a steam ferryboat of such a vehicle, which was run in and off the boat by its own power, was a violation of the statute; The Texas, 134 Fed. 909. In 1905, Congress amended the existing law by enacting that "nothing in the foregoing or following sections of this act shall prohibit the transportation by steam vessels of gasoline or any of the products of petroleum when carried by motor vehicles (commonly known as automobiles) using the same as a source of motive power: provided however, that all fire, if any, in such vehicles or automobiles be extinguished immediately after entering said vessels and the same be not relighted until immediately before said vehicle shall leave the vessel; provided further, that any owner, master, agent or other person having charge of passenger steam vessels shall have the right to refuse to transport automobile vehicles, the tanks of which contain gasoline, naphtha or other dangerous burning fluids"; 33 Stat. L. 720.

An absent owner of an automobile is not liable for the negligence of the chauffeur committed at a time when he was not engaged in the owner's business; Clark v. Buckmobile Co., 107 App. Div. 120, 94 N. Y. Supp. 771; Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Ia. 601, 103 N. W. 946; even though, as in the latter case, the automobile was decorated for the purpose of advertising the owner's business.

A statute providing that one operating a motor vehicle who has caused an accident to his knowledge and leaves the place without stopping or leaving his name is guilty of a felony, was held to be a simple police regulation. The driver who discloses his identity is not furnishing evidence of guilt, but rather of innocence; Ex parte Kneedler, 243 Mo. 632, 147 S. W. 983, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 622, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 923.

See Huddy, Automobiles.

AUTONOMY (Greek, αὐτονομία). The state of independence.

The autonomos was he who lived according to his own laws,—who was free. The term was chiefly used of communities or states, and meant those which were independent of others. It was introduced into the English language by the divines of the seventeenth century, when it and its translation—self-government—were chiefly used in a theological sense. Gradually its translation received a political meaning, in which it is now employed almost exclusively. Of late the word autonomy has been revived in diplomatic language in Europe, meaning independence, the negation of a state of political influence from without or foreign powers. See Lieber, Civ. Lib.

AUTOPSY. See DEAD BODY.

AUTRE VIE (Fr.). The life of another. See ESTATE PUR AUTRE VIE.

AUTREFOIS ACQUIT (Fr. formerly acquitted). A plea made by a defendant indicted for a crime or misdemeanor, that he has formerly been tried and acquitted of the same offence.

The constitution of the United States, Amend. art. 5, provides that no person shall be subject for the same offence to be put twice in jeopardy of life or limb. This is simply a re-enactment of the common-law. The same provision is to be found in the constitution of almost all if not of every state, and if not in the constitution the same principles are probably declared by legislative act; so that they must be regarded as fundamental doctrines in every state; 2 Kent 12. See U. S. v. Perez, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 579, 6 L. Ed. 165; U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 19. Fed. Cas. No. 15,204; Com. v. Bowden, 9 Mass. 494; People v. Goodwin, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 187, 9 Am. Dec. 203; State v. Hall, 9 N. J. L. 256. See, however, Com. v. Cook, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 577, 9 Am. Dec. 465; State v. Garrigues, 2 N. C. 241; Whart. Crim. Pl. § 490. This plea is founded upon the maxim, nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa; Broom, Leg. Max. 265.

The court, however, must have been competent, having jurisdiction and the proceedings regular; McNeil v. State, 29 Tex. App. 48, 14 S. W. 393; Blyew v. Com., 91 Ky. 200, 15 S. W. 356; but see Powell v. State, 89 Ala. 172, 8 South. 109.

To be a bar, the acquittal must have been after a trial; Marston v. Jenness, 11 N. H. 156; State v. Odell, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 156; State v. Tindal, 5 Harr. (Del.) 488; Hassell v. Nutt, 14 Tex. 260; and by verdict of a jury on a valid indictment; 4 Bla. Com. 335; People v. Barrett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 66; Heikes v. Com., 26 Pa. 513; State v. Wilson, 39 Mo. App. 187. In Pennsylvania and some other states, the discharge of a jury, even in a capital case, before verdict, except in case of absolute necessity, will support the plea; Com. v. Clue, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 498; State v. McGimsey, 80 N. C. 377, 30 Am. Rep. 90; but the prisoner's consent to the discharge of a previous jury is a sufficient answer; Peiffer v. Com., 15 Pa. 468, 53 Am. Dec. 605. In the United States courts and in some states, the separation of the jury when it takes place in the exercise of a sound discretion is no bar to a second trial; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 499; Clark, Cr. Law 373; Simmons v. U. S., 142 U. S. 148, 12 Sup. Ct. 171, 35 L. Ed. 968; as where the jury is discharged because of the sickness of a juror; People v. Ross, 85 Cal. 383, 24 Pac. 789; State v. Hazledahl, 2 N. D. 521, 52 N. W. 315, 16 L. R. A. 150; see Stocks v. State, 91 Ga. 831, 18 S. E. 847; or because they failed to agree; Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429; State v. Whitson, 111 N. C. 695, 16 S. E. 332.

There must be an acquittal of the offence charged in law and in fact; Com. v. Myers, 1 Va. Cas. 188; Wortham v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 669; Com. v. Goddard, 13 Mass. 457; McCreary v. Com., 29 Pa. 323; People v. March, 6 Cal. 543; Winn v. State, 82 Wis. 571, 52 N. W. 775; the plea will be bad if the offences charged in the two indictments be perfectly distinct in point of law, however clearly they may be connected in fact; Burton v. U. S., 202 U. S. 345, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 362, citing Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 502; but an acquittal is conclusive; Slaughter v. State, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 410; Com. v. Cummings, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 212, 50 Am. Dec. 732; State v. Brown, 16 Conn. 54; State v. Jones, 7 Ga. 422; State v. Johnson, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 533; State v. Wright, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 421; State v. Spear, 6 Mo. 644; Dillard's Adm'r v. Moore, 7 Ark. 169; State v. De Hart, 7 N. J. L. 172; State v. Anderson, 3 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 751; State v. Burris, 3 Tex. 118; Lawyer v. Smith, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 207. If a nolle prosequi is entered without the prisoner's consent after issue is joined and the jury sworn, it is a bar to a subsequent indictment for the same offence; Franklin v. State, 85 Ga. 570, 11 S. E. 876; but the jeopardy does not begin until the jury is sworn, prior to that a nol. pros. may be entered without prejudice; State v. Paterno, 43 L. Ann. 514, 9 South. 442; a nol. pros. of two of three indictments is no bar to a prosecution under the third; O'Brien v. State, 91 Ala. 25, 8 South. 560. In Missouri the conviction of murder in the second degree, under an indictment for murder in the first degree, constitutes no bar to trial and conviction for murder in the first degree, upon a new trial, when the first verdict has been set aside; State v. Anderson, 89 Mo. 312, 1 S. W. 135.

Proceedings by state tribunals are no bar to court-martial instituted by the military authorities of the United States; 3 Opin. Atty.-Genl. 750; Stiener's Case, 6 id. 413; but a judgment of conviction by a military court, established by law in an insurgent state, is a bar to a subsequent prosecution by a state court for the same offence; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. Ed. 1118. See COURTS-MARTIAL.

The plea must set out the former record, and show the identity of the offence and of the person by proper averments; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 36; Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 568; Wilson v. State, 24 Conn. 57.

The true test of whether a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict is a sufficient bar in any particular case is whether the evidence necessary to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction upon the first; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 1012; 3 B. & C. 502; Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 504; State v. Williams, 45 La. Ann. 936, 12 South. 932. Thus, if a prisoner indicted for burglariously breaking and entering a house and stealing therein certain goods of A is acquitted, he cannot plead this acquittal in bar of a subsequent indictment for burglariously breaking and entering the same house and stealing other goods of B; 2 Leach 718, 719;

Alexander v. State, 21 Tex. App. 406, 17 S. W. 139, 57 Am. Rep. 617.

The plea of autrefois acquit involves questions of mixed law and fact, and is properly referred to the jury when not demurrable on its face; State v. Williams, 45 La. Ann. 936, 12 South. 932.

The plea in the celebrated case of Regina v. Bird, 5 Cox Cr. Cas. 12, Templ. & M. 438, 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 224, is of peculiar value as a precedent.

See JEOPARDY.

AUTREFOIS ATTAINT (Fr. formerly attainted). A plea that the defendant has been attainted for one felony, and cannot, therefore, be criminally prosecuted for another; 4 Bla. Com. 336; 12 Mod. 109; R. & R. 268. This is not a good plea in bar in the United States, nor in England in modern law; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 692; Singleton v. State, 71 Miss. 782, 16 South. 295, 42 Am. St. Rep. 488; Gaines v. State (Tex.) 53 S. W. 623; contra, Ex parte Myers, 44 Mo. 279; State v. Jolly, 96 Mo. 435, 9 S. W. 897. See State v. McCarty, 1 Bay (S. C.) 334.

AUTREFOIS CONVICT (Fr. formerly convicted). A plea made by a defendant indicted for a crime or misdemeanor, that he has formerly been tried and convicted of the same.

This plea is substantially the same in form as the plea of autrefois acquit, and is grounded on the same principle, viz.: that no man's life or liberty shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 435; 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 651; State v. Cooper, 13 N. J. L. 361, 25 Am. Dec. 490; U. S. v. Keen, 1 McLean 429, Fed. Cas. No. 15,510; State v. Nelson, 7 Ala. 610; State v. Chaffin, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 493; State v. Parish, 43 Wis. 395.

A plea of autrefois convict, which shows that the judgment on the former indictment has been reversed for error in the judgment, is not a good bar to another indictment for the same offence; Cooley's Const. Lim. 326; Territory v. Dorman, 1 Ariz. 56, 25 Pac. 516; People v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 260, 30 Pac. 814; State v. Rhodes, 112 N. C. 857, 17 S. E. 164; otherwise, if the reversal were not for insufficiency in the indictment nor for error at the trial, but for matter subsequent, and dehors both the conviction and the judgment; Hartung v. People, 26 N. Y. 167. A prior conviction before a justice of the peace, and a performance of the sentence, constitute a bar to an indictment for the same offence, although the complaint on which the justice proceeded was so defective that his judgment might have been reversed for error; Com. v. Loud, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 328, 37 Am. Dec. 139. Where a person has been convicted for failing to support his wife and being disorderly, it is no bar to a second prosecution on a similar charge, where at the time of the second offence he was not in prison on account of his first sentence; People v. Hodgson, 126 N. Y. 647, 27 N. E. 378. Where one has been convicted of an assault but discharged without sentence on giving security for good behavior, he cannot afterwards be convicted on an indictment for the same assault; 24 Q. B. Div. 423. See AUTREFOIS ACQUIT.

AUXILIUM (Lat.). An aid; services paid by the tenant to his lord. Auxilium ad filium militem faciendum, vel ad filiam maritandam. (An aid for making the lord's son a knight, or for marrying his daughter.) Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 62.

AUXILIUM CURIÆ. An order of the court summoning one party, at the suit and request of another, to appear and warrant something. Kenn. Par. Ant. 477.

AUXILIUM REGIS. A subsidy paid to the king. Spelman.

AUXILIUM VICE COMITI. An ancient duty paid to sheriffs. Cowell.

AVAILABLE. Capable of being used; valid or advantageous.

Available means. That numerous class of securities which are known in the mercantile world as representatives of value easily converted into money, but not money. Brigham v. Tillinghast, 13 N. Y. 218.

AVAILS. Profits or proceeds, as the avails of a sale at auction. Webst. Dict.

With reference to wills it applies to the proceeds of an estate after the debts have been paid; McNaughton v. McNaughton, 34 N. Y. 201; Allen v. De Witt, 3 id. 276.

AVAL. In Canadian Law. A contract of suretyship or guarantee on a promissory note. 1 Low. C. 221; 9 id. 360.

In French Law. The guaranty of a bill of exchange; so called because usually placed at the foot or bottom (aval) of the bill. Sto. Bills §§ 394, 454. See 11 Harv. L. Rev. 55; INDORSEMENT.

AVARIA, AVARIE. Average; the loss and damage suffered in the course of a navigation. Pothier, Marit. Louage 105.

AVENAGE. A certain quantity of oats paid by a tenant to his landlord as a rent or in lieu of other duties. Jacob, L. Dict.

ADVENTURE. A mischance causing the death of a man, as by drowning, or being killed suddenly without felony. Co. Litt. 391; Whishaw.

AVER. To assert. See AVERTMENT.

To make or prove true; to verify.

The defendant will offer to aver. Cowell; Co. Litt. 362 b.

Cattle of any kind. Cowell, Averia; Kellham.

Aver et tenir. To have and to hold.

Aver corn. A rent reserved to religious houses, to be paid in corn. Corn drawn by the tenant's cattle. Cowell.

Aver-land. Land ploughed by the tenant for the proper use of the lord of the soil. Blount.

Aver-penny. Money paid to the king's averages to be free therefrom. Termes de la Ley.

Aver-silver. A rent formerly so called. Cowell.

AVERA. A day's work of a ploughman, formerly valued at eight pence. Jacob, L. Dict.

AVERAGE. In insurance law this is general, particular, or petty.

GENERAL AVERAGE (also called gross) consists of expense purposely incurred, sacrifice made, or damage sustained, for the common safety of the vessel, freight and cargo, or two of them, at risk, and is to be contributed for by the several interests in the proportion of their respective values exposed to the common danger, and ultimately surviving, including the amount of expense, sacrifice, or damage so incurred in the contributory value; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1269; and see Code de Com. tit. xi.; Aluzet, Trait. des Av. cxx.; Sturges v. Cary, 2 Curt. C. C. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 13,572; Greely v. Ins. Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 415; McLoon's Adm'r v. Cummings, 73 Pa. 98; Star of Hope v. Annan, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 203, 19 L. Ed. 638; Bailey, Gen. Av.; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, ch. xi.; Stevens, Av.; Benecke, Av.; Pothier, Av.; Lex Rhodia, Dig. 14. 2. 1.

General average is a comparatively modern expression. The early writers expressed the same idea by the words "averidge," or "contribution," which with them were synonymous terms; 21 L. Quart. Rev. 155. In the common memorandum which was added to marine policies about 1749, the words, general and average, occur for the first time; id.; Loundes, Mar. Ins. 206 (2d ed. 1885). By this time the word average had acquired the dual meaning still attaching to it: a particular, partial loss, and a contribution to the general loss; it was necessary to insert the words "unless general" in order to prevent the operation of the exception being extended to losses of the latter class. Lord Mansfield held that the word "unless" meant the same as "except"; 3 Burr. 1550. Lord Esher, M. R., said the true construction of the words "free from average unless general" was free from partial loss unless it be a general average loss; 22 Q. B. D. 580. The result of these decisions is that, while the assurer is to be excused from paying a loss of the nature of particular average, his pre-existing obligation to contribute to general average, though acknowledged, is left untouched; 21 L. Q. R. 155.

General average is recoverable for loss by jettison; 19 C. B. N. S. 563; for ship's stores used to fire the donkey-engine which worked the pumps; 7 L. R. Ex. 39; 2 Q. B. D. 91, 295; and for damage to a cargo caused by pouring on water to extinguish a fire; 8 Q. B. D. 653; The Roanoke, 46 Fed. 297; id., 53 Fed. 270; id., 59 Fed. 161, 8 C. C. A. 67.

Prior to the Harter Act, a common carrier

by sea could not, by any agreement in the bill of lading, exempt himself from responding to the owner of cargo for damages arising from the negligence of the master or crew of the vessel; Liverpool & Great Western Steam Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 409, 32 L. Ed. 788; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627. That act absolved the shipowner from responsibility for the negligence of the master and crew under certain circumstances. By its first and second sections shipowners are prohibited from inserting in their bills of lading agreements limiting their liability in certain respects. It was held under this act that if a vessel, seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage, is afterwards stranded by the negligence of her master, the shipowner, who has exercised due diligence to make his vessel seaworthy, properly manned, equipped and supplied, under its provisions has no right to general average contribution for sacrifices made and suffered by him subsequent to the stranding, in successful efforts to save vessel, freight, and cargo; The Irrawaddy, 171 U. S. 187, 18 Sup. Ct. 831, 43 L. Ed. 130. This case was distinguished in a later case where it was held that a general average agreement inserted in bills of lading providing that if the owner of a ship shall have exercised due diligence to make the ship in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped and supplied, the cargo shall contribute in general average with the shipowner even if the loss resulted from negligence in the management of the ship, is valid under the Harter Act, and entitles the shipowner to collect a general average contribution from the cargo owners in respect to sacrifices made and extraordinary expenses incurred by him for the common benefit and safety of ship, cargo, and freight subsequent to a negligent stranding; The Jason, 225 U. S. 32, 32 Sup. Ct. 560, 56 L. Ed. 969. That in view of the provisions of section 3 of the act and of the general average clause the cargo owners have a right to contribution from the shipowner for sacrifices made subsequent to negligent stranding in order to save the joint interests from common peril is held; The Roanoke, 46 Fed. 297; id., 59 Fed. 161; The Rapid Transit, 52 Fed. 320; The Santa Ana, 154 Fed. 800, 84 C. C. A. 312. There is a similar statute in England; 45 L. J. Q. B. 646; 8 Q. B. D. 653; [1908] 1 K. B. 51, affirmed [1908] App. Cas. 431.

Where a vessel was chartered to proceed to a foreign port and there take on a cargo, freight to be paid on the completion of the voyage home, and on the voyage out in ballast the vessel was grounded and a general average sacrifice made, it was held that, upon the subsequent completion of the voyage and the payment of the freight, such freight was liable to contribute to the general average sacrifice; [1901] 2 K. B. 861; and see 1 M. & S. 318; The Mary, 1 Sprague 17, Fed. Cas. No. 9,188; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 488.

If the peril is caused by a concealed defect in the shipment equally unknown to the shipper and shipowner, the shipper is entitled to the benefit of contribution; The Wm. J. Quillan, 180 Fed. 681, 103 C. C. A. 647.

The law of the destination, where ship and cargo separate, determines the right of general average; Monsen v. Amsinck, 166 Fed. 817.

Insurance is not a part of the owner's interest in a ship, and in case of general average, for the purpose of increasing the fund to be distributed, the insurance received by him should not be added to the value of what was saved; The Rapid Transit, 52 Fed. 320; The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468, 6 Sup. Ct. 1150, 30 L. Ed. 134; The Scotland, 118 U. S. 507, 6 Sup. Ct. 1174, 30 L. Ed. 153.

Average particular (also called partial loss) is a loss on the ship, cargo, or freight, to be borne by the owner of the subject on which it happens, and is so called in distinction from general average; and, if not total, it is also called a partial loss; 2 Phill. Ins. c. xvi.; Stevens, pt. 1, c. 2; Arnould, Mar. Ins. 953; Code de Com. l. 2, t. 11, a. 403; Pothier, Ass. 115; Benecke & S. Av., Phill. ed. 341.

It is insured against in marine policies in the usual forms on ship, cargo, or freight, when the action of peril is extraordinary, and the damage is not mere wear or tear; and, on the ship, covers loss by sails split or blown away, masts sprung, cables parted, spars carried away, planks started, change of shape by strain, loss of boat, breaking of sheathing or upper works or timbers, damage by lightning or fire, by collision or stranding, or in defence against pirates or enemies, or by hostile or piratical plunder; 2 Phill. Ins. c. xvi.; Orrok v. Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271; Sewall v. Ins. Co., 11 Pick. (Mass.) 90; 7 C. & P. 597; 3 id. 323; Sage v. Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 239; *Waller v. Ins. Particular average on freight may be by loss of the ship, or the cargo, so that full freight cannot be earned; but not if the goods, though damaged, could have been carried on to the port of destination; Coolidge v. Ins. Co., 15 Mass. 341; McGau v. Ins. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 405; Bork v. Norton, 2 McLean, 423, Fed. Cas. No. 1,659; Jordan v. Ins. Co., 1 Sto. 342, Fed. Cas. Particular average on goods is usually adjusted at the port of delivery on the basis of the value at which they are insured, viz.: the value at the place of shipment, unless it is otherwise stipulated in the policy; 2 Burr. 1167; 2 East 58; 12 id. 639; 3 B. & P. 308; Rankin v. Ins. Co., 1 Hall (N. Y.) 682; Newlin v. Ins. Co., 20 Pa. 312; 36 E. L. & Eq. 198; 3 Taunt. 162. See SALVAGE; LOSS.

A particular average on profits is, by the English custom, adjusted upon the basis of the profits which would have been realized at the port of destination. In the United States the adjustment is usually at the same rate as on the goods the profits on which are the subject of the insurance; 2 Pars. Ins. 399; Fosdick v. Ins. Co., 3 Day (Conn.) 108; Alsop v. Ins. Co., 1 Sumn. 451, Fed. Cas. No. 262; Evans v. Ins. Co., 6 R. I. 47.

PETTY AVERAGE consists of small charges which were formerly assessed upon the cargo, viz.: pilotage, towage, light-money, beachage, anchorage, bridge-toll, quarantine, pier-money. Le Guidon, c. 5, a. 13; Weyt, de A. 3, 4; Weskett, art. Petty Av.; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1269, n. 1; 2 Arnould, Mar. Ins. 927.

The doctrine of general average which has obtained in maritime insurance is not applicable to fire insurance; May, Ins. § 421 a.

AVERIA (Lat.). Cattle; working cattle. Averia carucae (draft-cattle) are exempt from distress; 3 Bla. Com. 9; 4 Term 566.

AVERIIS CAPTIS IN WITHERNAM. A writ which lies in favor of a man whose cattle have been unlawfully taken by another, and driven out of the country where they were taken, so that they cannot be replevied.

It issues against the wrong-doer to take his cattle for the plaintiff's use. Reg. Brev. 82.

AVERIUM (Lat.). Goods; property. A beast of burden. Spelman, Gloss.

AVERMENT. A positive statement of facts, as opposed to an argumentative or inferential one. Bacon, Abr. Pleas, B.

Averments were formerly said to be general and particular; but only particular averments are found in modern pleading. 1 Chit. Pl. 277.

Particular averments are the assertions of particular facts.

There must be an averment of every substantive material fact on which the party relies, so that it may be replied to by the opposite party.

Negative averments are those in which a negative is used.

Generally, under the rules of pleading, the party asserting the affirmative must prove it; but an averment of illegitimacy, 2 Selwyn, Nisi P. 709, or criminal neglect of duty, must be proven; U. S. v. Hayward, 2 Gall. 498, Fed. Cas. No. 15,336; Hartwell v. Root, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 345, 10 Am. Dec. 232; Com. v. Stow, 1 Mass. 54; 10 East 211; 3 Campb. 10; 3 B. & P. 302; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 80.

Immaterial and impertinent averments (which are synonymous, 5 D. & R. 209) are those which need not be made, and, if made, need not be proved. The allegation of deceit in the seller of goods in an action on the warranty is such an averment; 2 East 446; Pantou v. Holland, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 92, 8 Am. Dec. 369.

Unnecessary averments are statements of matters which need not be alleged, but which, if alleged, must be proved. Carth. 200.

General averments are almost always of the same form. The most common form of making particular averments is in express and direct words, for example: And the party averts, or in fact saith, or although, or because, or with this that, or being, etc. But they need not be in these words; for any words which necessarily imply the matter intended to be averred are sufficient.

AVERRARE. To carry goods in a wagon or upon loaded horses; a duty required of some customary tenants. Jacob L. Dict.

AVERSIO (Lat.). An averting; a turning away. A sale in gross or in bulk.

Letting a house altogether, instead of in chambers. 4 Kent 517.

Aversio periculi. A turning away of peril. Used of a contract of insurance. 3 Kent 263.

AVET. In Scotch Law. To abet or assist. Tomlin, Dict.

AVIATICUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A grandson.

AVIATION. The air space above the high seas and unoccupied territory is admittedly free to all nations and persons. It is with the air space above territorial lands and waters that conflicting views of the rights of nations are concerned. According to Hazel-tine (Law of the Air), there are the freedom-of-the-air theories, which comprise absolute and partial freedom either by lateral zone divisions or limited exercise of rights; and the sovereignty-of-the-air theories which may also be classified into absolute sovereignty and limited sovereignty groups. The zone and limited sovereignty theories are usually based on analogy to the three mile limit of sovereignty over the high seas. This analogy is obviously unsound both on account of the unsafe condition of states if alien and hostile air-craft were permitted to sail over them above a prescribed height, and the difficulty of calculating the exact or even approximate height of air-craft. The absolute sovereignty theory is probably better justified on reason and practicality. Rights of aliens to unhindered passage and rules for alighting could be settled by international agreement. See 4 Am. J. Int. L. 95; 45 L. J. 402; 126 L. T. 168. It is said to be clear that the territorial jurisdiction of a state must extend to the atmosphere above its soil if the state is to be able to protect itself from airships which would otherwise have it in their power to violate the laws of the state, or to inflict injury upon the citizens of the state in case of accident to the airship. On the other hand, it is reasonable that a state should allow the innocent passage of foreign airships through its territorial atmosphere, subject to the domestic regulations imposed upon the aerial traffic of its own citizens. In this respect the territorial atmosphere of a state may be considered as governed by the same rules as the territorial waters of the state. Hershey 232.

With regard to the rights of a landowner in the air space above his land, there are also divergent views of absolute and limited rights. The Roman Law regarded the air as res publica, free to all persons. The French Code, on the other hand, defines land as including everything above and below the surface. The German Imperial Code adopts this same theory but limits the landowner's right to exclude persons from using the air space, to his actual interest in such exclusion. The Swiss Code is similar.

At common law the old maxim of cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum has led to much confusion. In its origin it had reference to the right of the owner to have the air space above his land remain in its natural state and to have excluded therefrom anything which would detract from his enjoyment of the land. 4 Am. J. Int. L. 95; 71 Cent. L. J. 1; 46 Can. L. J. 480. The flying of fowls, the passage of smoke and of wireless messages over another's land have never suggested such a conflict with the maxim as would amount to a trespass. Even navigation by balloons and aeroplanes for a century or more has been tacitly permitted. See 4 Camp. 219; 3 Bengal L. R. 43. But such passage in every instance must not by its frequency amount to a nuisance. The degree of peril and inconvenience to the landowner defines his legal rights; 14 Law Notes 69; 16 Case and Comment 216.

Under the commerce clause in the United States constitution it would seem that Congress has power to regulate aerial navigation; in the absence of such regulation, the individual states may legislate for their own exclusive territorial air space.

As to the liability of aviators for accidents it has been held that they are liable for all damage both direct and consequential; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234; Conney v. Ass'n, 76 N. H. 60, 79 Atl. 517. This result is based on the view that all aërovehicles are dangerous devices and as such are operated at the aviator's peril. It is conceivable however that as aerial science develops, so that the present dangers and uncertainties are obviated, the stricter rule of liability will give way to one holding the aviator liable only for negligence. It has been urged that the more liberal rule would aid materially in the development of aerial science.

The intentional or negligent dropping and throwing articles overboard, which fall on private property and cause damage, is generally subjected to heavy liability. There is no inherent right to alight on private property without the consent of the owner, though an exception might possibly be allowed where an act of God or inevitable accident is the cause.

Every aeronaut shall be responsible for all damages suffered in this state by any person from injuries caused by any voyage in an airship directed by such aeronaut; and if he be the agent or employee of another in making such a voyage, his principal or employer shall be liable for such damage. Conn. Public Acts of 1911, p. 1351.

A Massachusetts act of May 7, 1913, regulates the use of air-craft; makes provision for the license of aviators after examination and registration; prescribes rules of the air for meeting and overtaking corresponding with the marine practice. Air machines are forbidden to fly over municipalities, except at prescribed altitudes, or to fly over crowds of people. Aviators are held liable for injuries resulting from flying unless they can demonstrate that they had taken every reasonable precaution to prevent injury. Dropping missiles without special permission is forbidden, and also landing on public property without permission.

AVOCAT. In French Law. A barrister or advocate.

AVOIDANCE. A making void, useless, or empty.

In Ecclesiastical Law. It exists when a benefice becomes vacant for want of an incumbent.

In Pleading. Repelling or excluding the conclusions or implications arising from the admission of the truth of the allegations of the opposite party. See CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

AVOIRDUPOIS (Fr.). The name of a system of weight.

This kind of weight is so named in distinction from the Troy weight. One pound avoirdupois contains seven thousand grains Troy; that is, fourteen ounces, eleven pennyweights, and sixteen grains Troy; a pound avoirdupois contains sixteen ounces; and an ounce sixteen drachms. Thirty-two cubic feet of pure spring-water, at the temperature of fifty-six degrees of Fahrenheit's thermometer, make a ton of two thousand pounds avoirdupois, or two thousand two hundred and forty pounds net weight. Dane, Abr. c. 211, art. 12, § 6. The avoirdupois ounce is less than the Troy ounce in the proportion of 72 to 79; though the pound is greater. Encyc. Amer. Avoirdupois. For the derivation of this phrase, see Barrington, Stat. 208. See the Report of Secretary of State of the United States to the Senate, February 22, 1821, pp. 44, 72, 76, 79, 81, 87, for a learned exposition of the whole subject. See WEIGHT.

AVOUCHER. See VOUCHER.

AVOUÉ. In French and Canadian Law. A solicitor or attorney.

AVOW. To acknowledge the commission of an act and claim that it was done with right. 3 Bla. Com. 150.

To make an avowry. For example, when replevin is brought for a thing distrained, and the party taking claims that he had a right to make the distress, he is said to avow. See Fleta, l. 1, c. 4; Cunningham, Dict.; AVOWRY; JUSTIFICATION.

AVOWANT. One who makes an avowry.

AVOWEE. An advocate of a church benefice.

AVOWRY. The answer of defendant in an action of replevin brought to recover property taken in distress, in which he acknowledges the taking, and, setting forth the cause thereof, claims a right in himself or his wife to do so. Lawes, Pl. 35.

A justification is made where the defendant shows that the plaintiff had no property by showing either that it was the defendant's or some third person's, or where he shows that he took it by a right which was sufficient at the time of taking though not subsisting at the time of answer. The avowry admits the property to have been the plaintiff's, and shows a right which had then accrued, and still subsists, to make such caption. See 2 W. Jones 25.

An avowry is sometimes said to be in the nature of an action or of a declaration, so that privity of estate is necessary; Co. Litt. 320 a; Blaine's Lessee v. Chambers, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 170. There is no general issue upon an avowry; and it cannot be traversed cumulatively; Hamilton v. Elliott, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 377. Alienation cannot be replied to it without notice; for the tenure is deemed to exist for the purposes of an avowry till notice be given of the alienation; Hamm. Part. 131.

The object of an avowry is to secure the return of the property, that it may remain as a pledge; see 2 W. Jones 25; and to this extent it makes the defendant a plaintiff. It may be made for rents, services, tolls; State v. Patrick, 14 N. C. 478; for cattle taken, damage feasant, and for heriots, and for such rights wherever they exist. See Gilbert, Distr. 176 et seq.; 1 Chlt. Pl. 436; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, 3 K.

AVOWTERER. In English Law. An adulterer with whom a married woman continues in adultery. Termes de la Ley.

AVOWTRY. In English Law. The crime of adultery.

AVULSION. The removal of a considerable quantity of soil from the land of one man and its deposit upon or annexation to the land of another, suddenly and by the perceptible action of water. 2 Washb. R. P. 452.

In such case the property belongs to the first owner; Bract. 221; Hargr. Tract. de Jure Mar.; Schultes, Aq. Rights 115; Bouvier v. Stricklett, 40 Neb. 792, 59 N. W. 550. Avulsion by the Missouri river, the middle of whose channel forms the boundary line between the states of Missouri and Nebraska, works no change in such boundary, but leaves it in the centre line of the old channel; Missouri v. Nebraska, 196 U. S. 23, 25 Sup. Ct. 155, 49 L. Ed. 372; Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U. S. 361, 12 Sup. Ct. 396, 36 L. Ed. 186.

See ACCRETION; ALLUVION; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; RELICTON.

AVUNCULUS. In Civil Law. A mother's brother. 2 Bla. Com. 230.

AWARD. The decision of arbitrators or referees of a case submitted for arbitration under agreement of the parties or rule of court. See ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

AWAY-GOING CROP. A crop sown before the expiration of a tenancy, which cannot ripen until after its expiration, to which, however, the tenant is entitled. Broom, Max. 306. See EMBLEMENTS.

AWN-HINDE. See THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE.

AYANT CAUSE. This term, which is used in Louisiana, signifies one to whom a right has been assigned, either by will, gift, sale, exchange, or the like; an assignee. An ayant cause differs from an heir who acquires the right by inheritance. 8 Toullier, n. 245.

AYUNTAMIENTO. In Spanish Law. A congress of persons; the municipal council of a city or town. 1 White, Rec. 416; 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, notes.

B

B. The second letter of the alphabet.

It is used to denote the second page of a folio, and also as an abbreviation. See A.

BABY ACT. A term of reproach originally applied to the disability of infancy when pleaded by an adult in bar of recovery upon a contract made while he was under age, but extends to any plea of the statute of limitations. Anderson's Dict. L.

BACHELERIA. The commonalty as distinguished from the baronage. Cunningham, L. Dict.

BACHELOR. In modern use, one who has taken the first degree (baccalaureate) in the liberal arts and sciences, or in law, medicine, or divinity, in a college or university.

BACK-BOND. A bond of indemnification given to a surety.

In Scotch Law. A declaration of trust; a defeasance; a bond given by one who is apparently absolute owner, so as to reduce his right to that of a trustee or holder of a bond and disposition in security. Paterson, Comp.

BACK CARRY. In forest law, the crime of having, on the back, game unlawfully killed.

BACK-WATER. That water in a stream which, in consequence of some obstruction below, is detained or checked in its course, or re-flows.

The term is usually employed to designate the water which is turned back, by a dam erected in the stream below, upon the wheel of a mill above, so as to retard its revolution.

Every riparian proprietor is entitled to the benefit of the water in its natural state. Another such proprietor has no right to alter the level of the water, either where it enters or where it leaves his property. If he claims either to throw the water back above, or to diminish the quantity which is to descend below, he must, in order to maintain his claim, either prove an actual grant or license from the proprietors affected by his operations, or an uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years. If he cannot maintain his claim in either of these ways, he is liable for damages in favor of the injured party, or to an injunction to restrain his unlawful use of the water; 1 B. & Ad. 258, 874; 9 Coke 59; Brown v. Mfg. Co., 5 Gray (Mass.) 460; Mertz v. Dorney, 25 Pa. 519; Butz v. Ihrie, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 218; Sherwood v. Burr, 4 Day (Conn.) 244, 4 Am. Dec. 211; Noyes v. Stillman, 24 Conn. 15; Gardner v. Wilkinson, 4 Mas. 400, Fed. Cas. No. 14,312; Lincoln v. Chadbourne, 56 Me. 197; De Vaughn v. Minor, 77 Ga. 809, 1 S. E. 433. But he must show some actual, appreciable damage; Garrett v. McKie, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 444, 44 Am. Dec. 263; Chalk v. McAlilly, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 153; contra, Hendrick v. Cook, 4 Ga. 241; Graver v. Sholl, 42 Pa. 67.

A riparian owner who obstructs a stream, impeding the usual flow of water or that caused by ordinary freshets and causing land to be overflowed, becomes liable; Bierer v. Hurst, 155 Pa. 523, 26 Atl. 742. Where a railroad company maintains a dam which causes water to overflow adjacent land, it is liable, although the dam was originally constructed by the county under authority of the legislature; Payne v. R. Co., 112 Mo. 6, 20 S. W. 322, 17 L. R. A. 628. At common law a railroad company must construct and maintain its road across a watercourse so as not to injure adjacent lands; Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Thillman, 43 Ill. App. 78; Fick v. R. Co., 157 Pa. 622, 27 Atl. 783.

An action to recover damages for flowing land is local, and must, therefore, be brought in the county where the land lies; Worster v. Winnipiseogee Lake Co., 25 N. H. 525; Watts' Adm'rs v. Kinney, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 484; 2 East 497.

In Massachusetts and other states, acts have been passed giving to the owners of mills the right to flow the adjoining lands, if necessary to the working of their mills, subject only to such damages as shall be ascertained by the particular process prescribed, which process is substituted for all other judicial remedies; Leland v. Woodbury, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 245; Nutting v. Page, 4 Gray (Mass.) 581; Waddy v. Johnson, 27 N. C. 333; Knox v. Chaloner, 42 Me. 150; Pratt v. Brown, 3 Wis. 603; Anderson v. R. Co., 86 Ky. 44, 5 S. W. 49, 9 Am. St. Rep. 263. These statutes, however, confer no authority to flow back upon existing mills; Baird v. Wells, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 312. See DAMAGES; INUNDATION; WATERCOURSE.

BACKADATION. A consideration given to keep back the delivery of stock when the price is lower for time than for ready money. Whart. Dict.; Lewis, Stocks. Sometimes called Backwardation.

BACKBERENDE (Sax). Bearing upon the back or about the person.

Applied to a thief taken with the stolen property in his immediate possession, Bracton, l. 3, tr. 2, c. 32. Used with handhabend, having in the hand.

BACKING. Indorsement. Indorsement by a magistrate.

Backing a warrant becomes necessary when it is desired to serve it in a county other than that in which it was first issued. In such a case the indorsement of a magistrate of the new county authorizes its service there as fully as if first issued in that county. The custom prevails in England, Scotland, and some of the United States. See 2 N. Y. R. S. 590.

BACKSIDE. A yard at the back part of or behind a house, and belonging thereto.

The term was formerly much used both in conveyances and in pleading, but is now of infrequent occurrence except in conveyances which repeat an ancient description. Chitty, Pr. 177.

BACKWARDATION. See BACKADATION.

BAD. Vicious, evil, wanting in good qualities; the reverse of good. See Riddell v. Thayer, 127 Mass. 487; Tobias v. Harland, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 537.

BADGE. A mark or sign worn by some persons, or placed upon certain things, for the purpose of designation.

Some public officers, as watchmen, policemen, and the like are required to wear badges that they may be readily known. It is used figuratively when we say that retention of possession of personal property by the seller is a badge of fraud.

Under its police power a legislature may forbid persons who are not members of societies from wearing the badge of such societies; Hammer v. State, 173 Ind. 199, 89 N. E. 850, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, 140 Am. St. Rep. 248, 21 Ann. Cas. 1034; Com. v. Martin, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 241; contra, State v. Holland, 37 Mont. 393, 96 Pac. 719. One who wears a badge of a society without being a member holds himself out to the public and to actual members as guilty of a false personation. It is a deceit and a false pretense, and its object could be nothing else than deception, which it is in itself, with possibly ulterior motives; Hammer v. State, 173 Ind. 199, 89 N. E. 850, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, 140 Am. St. Rep. 248, 21 Ann. Cas. 1034; an association may obtain injunctive relief against the use by another association of its emblems; Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks v. Improved & Protective Order of Elks of the World, 60 Misc. 223, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1067, affirmed id., 133 App. Div. 918, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1094.

BADGE OF FRAUD. A term used in the law of conveyances made to hinder and defraud creditors. It is defined as a fact tending to throw suspicion upon a transaction, and calling for an explanation. Bump, Fr. Conv. 31.

When such a fact appears, its effect is to require more persuasive proof of the payment of the consideration and the good faith of the parties than would ordinarily be required; Terrell v. Green, 11 Ala. 207. It is not fraud of itself, but evidence to establish a fraudulent intent; Wilson v. Lott, 5 Fla. 305; Pilling v. Otis, 13 Wis. 495.

The following have been held to be badges of fraud: Indebtedness on the part of the grantor; Callan v. Statham, 23 How. (U. S.) 477, 16 L. Ed. 532; Jackson v. Mather, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 301; Cox v. Fraley, 26 Ark. 20; the expectation of a suit; Glenn v. Glenn, 17 Ia. 498; Hughes v. Roper, 42 Tex. 116; Schaferman v. O'Brien, 28 Md. 565, 92 Am. Dec. 708; Redfield & Rice Mfg. Co. v. Dysart, 62 Pa. 62; Godfrey v. Germain, 24 Wis. 410; false recitals in the deed; McKinster v. Babcock, 26 N. Y. 378; inadequacy of consideration; Monell v. Scherrick, 54 Ill. 269; Burke v. Murphy, 27 Miss. 167; Bray v. Hussey, 24 Ind. 228; Jaeger v. Kelley, 52 N. Y. 274; Gibson v. Hill, 23 Tex. 77; Craver v. Miller, 65 Pa. 456; Wheeler v. Kirtland, 23 N. J. Eq. 14; Kempner v. Churchill, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 362, 19 L. Ed. 461; false statement of the consideration; McKinster v. Babcock, 26 N. Y. 378; Peebles v. Horton, 64 N. C. 374; Edders v. Swayne, 8 Dana (Ky.) 103; secrecy; Barrow v. Bailey, 5 Fla. 9; Warner v. Norton, 20 How. (U. S.) 448, 15 L. Ed. 950; concealment of the deed, not recording it and leaving it in the hands of the grantor; Sands v. Hildreth, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 493; Coates v. Gerlach, 44 Pa. 43; Beecher v. Clark, 12 Blatchf. 256, 10 N. B. R. 385, Fed. Cas. No. 1,223; Hildeburn v. Brown, 17 B. Monr. (Ky.) 779; failure to record a mortgage by agreement; Hutchinson v. Bank, 133 Ind. 271, 30 N. E. 952, 36 Am. St. Rep. 537; Day v. Goodbar, 69 Miss. 687, 12 South. 30; a secret trust between the grantor and grantee; 3 Co. 80; McCulloch v. Hutchinson, 7 Watts (Pa.) 434, 32 Am. Dec. 776; retention of possession of land by the grantor; Jackson v. Mather, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 301; King v. Moon, 42 Mo. 551; Hartshorn v. Eames, 31 Me. 93; Lukins v. Aird, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 78, 18 L. Ed. 750; Purkitt v. Polack, 17 Cal. 327; Johnson v. Lovelace, 51 Ga. 18; mere delay to record a deed executed for a good consideration by an insolvent to his son, where there is no evidence that the son knew of the insolvency, is not a badge of fraud; Second Nat. Bank of Beloit v. Merrill, 81 Wis. 142, 50 N. W. 503, 29 Am. St. Rep. 870; but in general anything in the transaction out of the usual course of such transactions is held to be such; Danjean v. Blacketer, 13 La. Ann. 595; Bump, Fr. Conv. 50.

BADGER. (From the French bagage, a bundle, and thence is derived bagagier, a carrier of goods). One who buys corn and victuals in one place and carries them to another to sell and make a profit by them. A badger was exempted from the punishment of an engrosser by the statute 5 & 6 Ed. VI. c. 14. Jacob.

BAG. An uncertain quantity of goods and merchandise, from three to four hundred. Jacob.

BAGAVEL. The citizens of Exeter had granted to them by charter from Edward I.

the collection of a certain tribute or toll upon all manner of wares brought to that city to be sold, toward the paving of the streets, repairing of the walls, and maintenance of the city, which was commonly called bagavel, bethugavel and chippinggavel. Antiq. of Exeter.

BAGGAGE. Such articles of apparel, ornament, etc., as are in daily use by travellers, for convenience, comfort, or recreation. "It includes whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or ultimate purpose of the journey;" per Cockburn, C. J., in L. R. 6 Q. B. 612; only such articles of necessity or convenience as are generally carried by passengers for their personal use; Glovinsky v. Steamship Co., 6 Misc. 388, 26 N. Y. Supp. 751.

It is said that the decisions and text-books give us but one definite limitation to the term "baggage," and that is that it must be something for the personal use of the traveller; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 119; but that which one traveller would consider indispensable would be deemed superfluous by another; 19 C. B. N. S. 321; so that his station in life must be taken into consideration; Coward v. R. Co., 16 Lea (Tenn.) 225, 57 Am. Rep. 227; New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24, 25 L. Ed. 531. What may be necessary for a voyage on land is unfit for a voyage at sea; and the length of the journey must be considered in determining the quantity of baggage necessary for it; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 119, and cases cited. The traveller is entitled to have carried with him whatever is essential to the ultimate purpose of his journey; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 262, 20 L. Ed. 423; unless his requirements are unreasonable; Oakes v. R. Co., 20 Or. 392, 26 Pac. 230, 12 L. R. A. 318, 23 Am. St. Rep. 126; Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y. 594. It has been held that a bicycle is not baggage under a statute allowing 100 pounds of "ordinary baggage"; State v. R. Co., 71 Mo. App. 385; but in several states they are expressly declared baggage and in New York they must be carried free of charge if the owner travels on the same train.

In [1899] 1 Q. B. 243, it is said there are certain requirements which articles must meet in order that they may be regarded as "personal luggage": 1. They must be for the personal use of the passenger. 2. They must be for use in connection with the journey, i. e., something habitually taken by a person when travelling for his own use, not merely during the actual journey, but for use during the time he may be away from home. It was further considered that the word luggage involves the idea of a package, and that the law does not recognize as baggage the things contained, as distinct from the receptacle which contains them, and does not cast any duty on the carrier to receive personal baggage until it had been placed in a position of reasonable security for handling.

This term has been held to include jewelry carried as baggage, which formed a part of female attire, the plaintiff being on a journey with his family; 4 Bingh. 218; McGill v. Rowand, 3 Pa. 451, 45 Am. Dec. 654. A watch, carried in one's trunk, is proper baggage; Jones v. Voorhees, 10 Ohio 145; Walsh v. Wright, 1 Newb. 494, Fed. Cas. No. 17,115; but see Bomar v. Maxwell, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 621, 51 Am. Dec. 682; the surgical instruments of an army surgeon; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 262, 20 L. Ed. 423; valuable laces carried by a foreign woman of rank, for which the jury found in $10,000 damages; New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24, 25 L. Ed. 531; one revolver, but not two; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Collins, 56 Ill. 212; an opera glass; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Hammond, 33 Ind. 379, 5 Am. Rep. 221; bedding of a poor man moving with his family; Quimit v. Henshaw, 35 Vt. 604, 84 Am. Dec. 646; Glovinsky v. Steamship Co., 4 Misc. 266, 24 N. Y. Supp. 136; such articles as are ordinarily carried by travellers in valises; Hampton v. Car Co., 42 Mo. App. 134; books for reading or amusement; Doyle v. Kiser, 6 Ind. 242; a harness maker's tools, valued at $10; a rifle; Davis v. R. Co., 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 330; Porter v. Hildebrand, 14 Pa. 129; a rifle, revolver, two gold chains, two gold rings and a silver pencil case; 32 U. C. Q. B. 66; a carpet; Minter v. R. R., 41 Mo. 503, 97 Am. Dec. 288; an illustrated catalogue, the individual property of a travelling salesman, prepared by himself at his own expense, necessary for use in his business; Staub v. Kendrick, 121 Ind. 226, 23 N. E. 79, 6 L. R. A. 619.

The following have been held not to be baggage: Jewelry bought for presents; Nevins v. Steamboat Co., 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 225; Metz v. R. Co., 85 Cal. 329, 24 Pac. 610, 9 L. R. A. 431, 20 Am. St. Rep. 228; a stock of jewelry carried by a salesman to be sold (checked, without saying anything as to its contents, and there being nothing to indicate its contents, and railroad company's agent having checked it without inquiries); Humphreys v. Perry, 148 U. S. 627, 13 Sup. Ct. 711, 37 L. Ed. 587; a feather-bed not intended for use on the journey; Connolly v. Warren, 106 Mass. 146, 8 Am. Rep. 300; a lawyer's papers and bank notes to be used by him in conducting a case; 19 C. B. N. S. 321; trunks containing stage properties, costumes, paraphernalia, and advertising matters of a theatrical company, unless accepted as baggage, but the carrier, though without fault, is liable for the destruction of the trunks where its agent checked them as baggage with full knowledge that they contained, besides personal apparel, stage costumes and properties; Oakes v. R. Co., 20 Or. 392, 26 Pac. 230, 12 L. R. A. 318, 23 Am. St. Rep. 126. Samples of merchandise are not baggage; 13 C. B. N. S. 818; Stimson v. R. Co., 98 Mass. 83, 93 Am. Dec. 140; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 586, 41 Am. Dec. 767; Talcott v. R. Co., 66 Hun 456, 21 N. Y. Supp. 318; Alling v. R. Co., 126 Mass. 121, 30 Am. Rep. 667; Pennsylvania Co. v. Miller, 35 Ohio St. 541, 35 Am. Rep. 620; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Clark, 52 Kan. 398, 34 Pac. 1054; nor a trunk deposited with the carrier without being accompanied by the passenger; Wright v. Caldwell, 3 Mich. 51; nor money even to a reasonable amount; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 586, 41 Am. Dec. 767; Davis v. R. Co., 22 Ill. 278, 74 Am. Dec. 151; intended for trade, business or investment, or for transportation and not intended for the passenger while travelling; Pfister v. R. Co., 70 Cal. 169, 11 Pac. 686, 59 Am. Rep. 404; Bomar v. Maxwell, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 621, 51 Am. Dec. 682; contra, Dunlap v. Steamboat Co., 98 Mass. 371; Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y. 594.

If a carrier knows that merchandise is included among baggage, and does not object, he is liable to the same extent as for other goods taken in the due course of his business; Butler v. R. Co., 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 571; 8 Exch. 30; but he must have actual knowledge; L. R. 6 Q. B. 612; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Carrow, 73 Ill. 348, 24 Am. Rep. 248; Mississippi Cent. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 41 Miss. 671; Stoneman v. R. Co., 52 N. Y. 429; Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Milinery Co. (Tex.) 29 S. W. 196. Where trunks containing merchandise were checked as baggage by a salesman (whose intention was to follow them to the same place) and through the negligence of the carrier were burnt soon after they had reached their destination, the carrier was held liable; McKibbin v. R. Co., 100 Minn. 270, 110 N. W. 964, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489, 117 Am. St. Rep. 689; so where a carrier accepted as baggage trunks of samples belonging to the employer of the passenger, the owner was entitled to recover for their loss; Talcott v. R. Co., 159 N. Y. 461, 54 N. E. 1; but see 5 Q. B. D. 241; [1895] 2 Q. B. D. 387.

The general rule seems to be that where a railroad company has given an agent authority to receive and check baggage, he must be deemed to have authority to determine what class of articles come within the description of baggage, and when he accepts as baggage what is not strictly so, with knowledge or means of knowledge of its character, the company is held responsible for his acceptance of it; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Berry, 60 Ark. 433, 30 S. W. 764, 28 L. R. A. 501, 46 Am. St. Rep. 212; Waldron v. R. Co., 1 Dak. 357, 46 N. W. 456; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Conklin, 32 Kan. 55, 3 Pac. 762; Bergstrom v. R. Co., 134 Ia. 223, 111 N. W. 818, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119, 13 Ann. Cas. 239; Sherlock v. R. Co., 85 Mo. App. 49; Trimble v. R. Co., 162 N. Y. 84, 56 N. E. 532, 48 L. R. A. 115; but see Blumantle v. R. Co., 127 Mass. 322, 34 Am. Rep. 376; and see Bergstrom v. R. Co., 134 Ia. 223, 111 N. W. 818, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119, 13 Ann. Cas. 239; COMMON CARRIERS.

A railroad's liability for baggage is not affected by the fact that the passenger did not travel on the same train; Larned v. R. Co., 81 N. J. L. 571, 79 Atl. 289. In the supreme court of Michigan it was held that one who purchases a ticket for the sole purpose of checking his baggage upon it, and with the intention of travelling to his destination in his private conveyance, can hold the carrier liable only as a gratuitous bailee, if it be stolen without negligence on the carrier's part; 55 L. R. A. 650, where in a note the cases are considered and the conclusion is reached that the Michigan case is in conflict with the current of opinion and should not be accepted as a precedent, and that the purchase of a ticket is a contract which gives the passenger two distinct rights, one to be carried as a passenger, and the other to have his baggage transported; and that having paid for two privileges, there is no reason why he should be compelled to avail himself of both, unless the carrier's burden in respect of one of them is increased by his failure to exercise the other; and see Warner v. R. Co., 22 Ia. 166, 92 Am. Dec. 389, where it is held that, whether on the same, the preceding, or the next train, if the baggage is sent pursuant to an agreement, and as part of the consideration for the fare paid by the passenger, the same rules apply as to care.

Where a passenger bought a through ticket and checked his baggage to go by a certain route, and the first carrier by mistake delivered the baggage to another carrier, which lost it, the second carrier was held to have assumed the responsibility of a common carrier, as it should have known by the checks that the baggage was to be carried by another route; Fairfax v. R. Co., 73 N. Y. 167, 20 Am. Rep. 119.

Where a passenger in second-class car delivered a dog to the baggage-master and declined to pay for carrying it, and at the plaintiff's destination, the baggage-master refused to deliver the dog, without the payment of money, and it was carried past the destination and lost, by the negligence of the baggage-master, held, that plaintiff could recover because of his ignorance of a rule as to a payment for conveying his dog on the train; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Higdon, 94 Ala. 286, 10 South. 282, 14 L. R. A. 515, 33 Am. St. Rep. 119.

The carrier may establish reasonable regulations as to baggage and is not liable if they are violated; Gleason v. Transp. Co., 32 Wis. 85, 14 Am. Rep. 716.

Limitations upon the liability of carriers are taken most strongly against them; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 4 Ind. App. 119, 30 N. E. 424, 51 Am. St. Rep. 206. A stipulation exempting the carrier from liability for "any loss or damage" to baggage was held not to extend to loss arising from negligence; Saunders v. R. Co., 128 Fed. 15; and one limiting liability to $100; Prentice v. Decker, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 21; and one exempting the company from liability for its servants' negligence would not cover a loss arising from the company's negligence; Wefenberg v. S. S. Co., 8 N. Y. Supp. 195; but a provision inserted in a steamship ticket limiting the liability of a carrier for loss of baggage to a certain amount, unless the true value is declared and excess paid for at regular freight rates, will operate to relieve the carrier from liability for such loss, even when due to his own negligence; Tewes v. S. S. Co., 186 N. Y. 151, 78 N. E. 864, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 199, 9 Ann. Cas. 909.

Limitations as to the value of baggage are said not to apply to hand baggage carried by a passenger on a car; 15 Yale L. J. 428. A provision in a ticket, limiting liability for loss of baggage to $100, where goods of the value of $300 were stolen from the baggage while in company's possession, held not to relate to loss or damage from any particular cause, but to the amount of loss only, and if the jury found negligence on the part of the railroad company, the carrier would be liable for the full amount lost; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Nicholas, 4 Ind. App. 119, 30 N. E. 424, 51 Am. St. Rep. 206. Baggage carried by a woman, not a pauper, coming from Germany to the U. S., consisting of clothing for herself and her two children, together with some bed feathers and covering of the value of $285, is reasonable in quantity and value, and therefore a provision in the transportation ticket, limiting the carrier's liability for loss of baggage to $50, is invalid, and will not defeat a recovery for loss of such baggage; Glovinsky v. Steamship Co., 4 Misc. 266, 24 N. Y. Supp. 136.

A baggage check merely indicating designation of baggage beyond terminus of issuing carrier's route does not prove a contract to carry to such destination; Marmonstein v. R. Co., 13 Misc. 32, 34 N. Y. Supp. 97. The issuance of a baggage check by a carrier to a passenger is not a contract by the carrier to deliver the baggage at such a point, but simply a means of identification of the baggage at the end of the route; Hyman v. R. Co., 66 Hun 202, 21 N. Y. Supp. 119.

Unless negligence is shown, a steamship company is not liable for baggage stolen from a passenger's stateroom; The Humboldt, 97 Fed. 656; Clark v. Burns, 118 Mass. 275, 19 Am. Rep. 456; American S. S. Co. v. Bryan, 83 Pa. 446. The contrary rule in New York is based on the idea that a passenger steamboat is subject to the liability of an inn-keeper; Adams v. Steamboat Co., 151 N. Y. 163, 45 N. E. 369, 34 L. R. A. 682, 56 Am. St. Rep. 616.

It was formerly held that carriers were not liable as such for baggage unless a distinct price be paid for its carriage; 1 Salk. 2821; and see 3 H. & C. 135; but the rule is now otherwise; L. R. 6 Q. B. 612; Powell v. Myers, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 591; Parmelee v. McNulty, 19 Ill. 556; McGregor & Co. v. Kilgore, 6 Ohio 358, 27 Am. Dec. 260; Dill v. R. Co., 7 Rich. 158, 62 Am. Dec. 407; Bonar v. Maxwell, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 621, 51 Am. Dec. 682; they may limit their common-law liability by express contract, and by reasonable regulations made known to the public, but they cannot relieve themselves from liability from loss occasioned by negligence; Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 234, 32 Am. Dec. 455; Cole v. Goodwin, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 251, 32 Am. Dec. 470; Laing v. Colden, 8 Pa. 479, 49 Am. Dec. 533; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Selby, 47 Ind. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 719; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 41 Ala. 488, 94 Am. Dec. 607. See L. R. 10 Q. B. 437. The carrier may make reasonable regulations for the checking, custody, and carriage of baggage; Najac v. R. Co., 7 Allen (Mass.) 329, 83 Am. Dec. 686. It is liable as a carrier until the passenger has had a reasonable time to remove his baggage after its arrival; Burgevin v. R. Co., 69 Hun 479, 23 N. Y. Supp. 415.

The carrier is not liable for loss of baggage occasioned by "act of God" (Johnstown flood) and not by his own negligence; Long v. R. Co., 147 Pa. 343, 23 Atl. 459, 14 L. R. A. 741, 30 Am. St. Rep. 732.

As to what may be carried as baggage in a sleeping car, see note 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407.

As to an innkeeper's liability for baggage of a guest, see INNKEEPER.

BAIL (Fr. bailier, to deliver). One who becomes surety for the appearance of the defendant in court.

To deliver the defendant to persons who, in the manner prescribed by law, become security for his appearance in court.

The word is used both as a substantive and a verb, though more frequently as a substantive, and in civil cases, at least, in the first sense given above. In its more ancient signification, the word includes the delivery of property, real or personal, by one person to another. Bail in actions was first introduced in favor of defendants, to mitigate the hardships imposed upon them while in the custody of the sheriff under arrest, the security thus offered standing to the sheriff in the place of the body of the defendant. Taking bail was made compulsory upon the sheriffs by the statute 23 Hen. VI. c. 9, and the privilege of the defendant was rendered more valuable and secure by successive statutes, until by statute 12 Geo. I. c. 29, made perpetual by 21 Geo. II. c. 3, and 19 Geo. III. c. 70, it was provided that arrests should not be made unless the plaintiff make affidavit as to the amount due, and this amount be endorsed on the writ; and for this sum and no more the sheriff might require bail.

In the King's Bench, bail above and below were both exacted as a condition of releasing the defendant from the custody in which he was held from the time of his arrest till his final discharge in the suit. In the Common Bench, however, the origin of bail above seems to have been different, as the capias on which bail might be demanded was of effect only to bring the defendant to court, and after appearance he was theoretically in attendance, but not in custody. The failure to file such bail as the emergency requires, although no arrest may have been made, is, in general, equivalent to a default.

In some states the defendant when arrested gives bail by bond to the sheriff, conditioned to appear and answer to the plaintiff and abide the judgment and not to avoid, which thus answers the purpose of bail above and below; Hale v. Russ, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 336; Hamilton v. Dunklee, 1 N. H. 172; Pierce v. Read, 2 N. H. 360; Champion v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 484; Broaders v. Welsh, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) 569; Harwood v. Robertson, 2 Hill (S. C.) 336; West v. Ratledge, 15 N. C. 40; Liceth v. Cobb, 18 Ga. 314. In criminal law the term is used frequently in the second sense given, and bail is allowed except in cases where the defendant is charged with the commission of the more heinous crimes.

Bail above. Sureties who bind themselves either to satisfy the plaintiff his debt and costs, or to surrender the defendant into custody, provided judgment be against him in the action and he fail to do so; Sellon, Pr. 137.

Bail to the action. Bail above.

Bail below, or bail to the sheriff. Sureties who bind themselves to the sheriff to secure the defendant's appearance, or his putting in bail to the action on the return-day of the writ. It may be demanded by the sheriff whenever he has arrested a defendant on a bailable process, as a prerequisite to releasing the defendant.

Civil bail. That taken in civil actions.

Common bail. Fictitious sureties formally entered in the proper office of the court.

It is a kind of bail above, similar in form to special bail, but having fictitious persons, John Doe and Richard Roe, as sureties. Filing common bail is tantamount to entering an appearance. 3 Bla. Com. c. xix. See BILL OF MIDDLESEX.

Special bail. Responsible sureties who undertake as bail above.

Requisites of. A person to become bail must, in England, be a freeholder or housekeeper; 2 Chitt. Bail 96; 5 Taunt. 174; Lofft 148; must be subject to process of the court, and not privileged from arrest either temporarily or permanently; 1 D. & R. 127; Coster v. Watson, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 535; Brown v. Lord, Kirb. (Conn.) 209; must be competent to enter into a contract; must be able to pay the amount for which he becomes responsible, but the property may be real or personal if held in his own right; 2 Chit. Bail 97; 11 Price 158; and liable to ordinary legal process; 4 Burr. 2526.

Persons not excepted to as appearance bail cannot be objected to as bail above; Dunlops v. Laporte, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 22; and bail, if of sufficient ability, should not be refused on account of the personal character or opinions of the party proposed; 4 Q. B. 468; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 236.

When it may be given or required. In civil actions the defendant may give bail in all cases where he has been arrested; Richards v. Porter, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 137; and bail below, even, may be demanded in some cases where no arrest is made; Coward v. Bohun, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 538; Mickle v. Baker, 2 McCord (S. C.) 250; but where a statute forbids the taking of bail, an order of court authorizing it will not entitle a party thereto or make it valid; Swanson v. Matson, 31 Ill. App. 594.

Bail above is required under some restrictions in many of the states in all actions for considerable amounts; Cheshire v. Edson, 2 McCord (S. C.) 385; either common; Bernbridge v. Turner, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 429; Anonymous, 20 N. J. L. 494; Morrison v. Silverburgh, 13 Ill. 551; which may be filed by the plaintiff, and judgment taken by default against the defendant if he neglects to file proper bail, after a certain period; Lane v. Cook, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 359; Corse v. Colfax, 2 N. J. L. 684; or special, which is to be filed of course in some species of action and may be demanded in others; Peareson v. Pickett, 1 McCord (S. C.) 472; Whiting v. Putnam, 17 Mass. 176; Purcell v. Hartness, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 303; Douglass v. Wight, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 218; but in many cases only upon special cause shown; Coxe 277; Brookfield v. Jones, 8 N. J. L. 311; Clason v. Gould, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 47; Jack v. Shoemaker, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 283; Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Rand. (Va.) 152.

The existence of a debt and the amount due; Nevins v. Merrie, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 499; Lewis v. Brackenridge, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 112; Jennings v. Sledge, 3 Ga. 128; in an action for debt, and, in some forms of action, other circumstances, must be shown by affidavit to prevent a discharge on common bail; Brooks v. McLellan, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 247; Lewis v. Brackenridge, 1 Blackf. 112; Hockspringer v. Ballenburg, 16 Ohio 304; Mustin v. Mustin, 13 Ga. 357. It is a general rule that a defendant who has been once held to bail in a civil case cannot be held a second time for the same cause of action; Tidd, Pr. 184; Clark v. Weldo, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 206; President, etc., of Bank of South Carolina v. Green, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 336; but this rule does not apply where the second holding is in another state; Peck v. Hozier, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 346; Hubbard v. Wentworth, 3 N. H. 43; Parasset v. Gautier, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 330, 1 L. Ed. 402; Man v. Lowden, 4 McCord (S. C.) 485. And see also James v. Allen, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 188, 1 L. Ed. 93; Read v. Chapman, 1 Pet. C. C. 404, Fed. Cas. No. 11,605; Woodbridge v. Wright, 3 Conn. 523; as to the effect of a discharge in insolvency.

In criminal cases the defendant may in general claim to be set at liberty upon giving bail, except when charged with the commission of a capital offence; 4 Bla. Com. 297; Ex parte Alexander, 59 Mo. 599, 21 Am. Rep. 393; State v. Arthur, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 456; State v. Holmes, 3 Strobb. (S. C.) 272;

Ex parte Richardson, 96 Ala. 110, 11 South. 316; Ready v. Com., 9 Dana (Ky.) 38; Ex parte White, 9 Ark. 222. One charged with murder should not be discharged on habeas corpus, unless the evidence before the committing magistrate was so insufficient that a verdict thereon requiring capital punishment would be set aside; In re Troia, 64 Cal. 152, 28 Pac. 231; Ex parte King, 86 Ala. 620, 5 South. 863; Ex parte Hamilton, 65 Miss. 147, 3 South. 241; and even in capital offences a defendant may be bailed in the discretion of the court, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions to the contrary; Archer's Case, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 705; Com. v. Semmes, 11 Leigh (Va.) 665; State v. Summons, 19 Ohio 139; People v. Van Horne, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 158; Ex parte Croom, 19 Ala. 561; *People v. Y.) 480; Ex parte Ezell, 40 Tex. 451, 19 Am. Rep. 32; Corbett v. State, 24 Ga. 391. Where one is indicted for a capital offence, the burden rests on him to show that the proof of his guilt is not evident, on an application for bail; Ex parte Jones, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 422, 20 S. W. 983.

For any crime or offence against the United States, not punishable by death, any judge of the United States, or commissioner of a district court to take bail, or any chancellor, judge of the supreme or superior court, or first judge of any court of common pleas, or mayor of any city of any state, or any justice of the peace or magistrate of any state, where the offender may be found, may take bail; Act Sept. 24, 1789, § 33, Mar. 2, 1793, § 4; and, after commitment by a justice of the supreme or judge of district court of the United States, any judge of the supreme or superior court of any state (there being no judge of the United States in the district to take such bail) may admit the person to bail if he offer it.

When the punishment by the laws of the United States is death, bail can be taken only by the supreme or district court.

As to the principle on which bail is granted or refused in cases of capital offences in the King's Bench, see 1 E. & B. 1, 8; Dears v. Cr. Cas. 51, 60.

The proceedings attendant on giving bail are substantially the same in England and the United States. An application is made to the proper officer; Gilliam v. Allen, 4 Rand. (Va.) 498, and the bond or the names of the bail proposed filed in the proper office, and notice is given to the opposite party, who must except within a limited time, or the bail justify and are approved. If exception is taken, notice is given, a hearing takes place, the bail must justify, and will then be approved unless the other party oppose successfully; in which case other bail must be added or substituted. A formal application is, in many cases, dispensed with, but a notification is given at the time of filing to the opposite party, and, unless exceptions are made and notice given within a limited time, the bail justify and are approved. If the sum in which the defendant is held is too large, he may apply for mitigation of bail.

The bail are said to enter into a recognizance when the obligation is one of record, which it is when government or the defendant is the obligee; when the sheriff is the obligee, it is called a bail bond. See BAIL BOND; RECOGNIZANCE.

Unless authorized by statute, it is illegal for an officer or magistrate to receive money in lieu of bail for the appearance of a person accused of a crime; Reinhard v. City, 49 Ohio St. 257, 31 N. E. 35.

Mitigation of excessive bail may be obtained by simple application to the court; Bunting v. Brown, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 425; Keppele v. Zantzinger, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 83; and in other modes; Jones v. Kelly, 17 Mass. 116; Evans v. Foster, 1 N. H. 374. Exacting excessive bail is against the constitution of the United States, and was a misdemeanor at common law; U. S. Const. Amend. art. 8; Alexander v. Winn, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 14; U. S. v. Lawrence, 4 Cra. C. C. 518, Fed. Cas. No. 15,577.

The liability of bail is limited by the bond; Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 329, 9 L. Ed. 145; Fetterman v. Hopkins, 5 Watts (Pa.) 539; by the ac etiam; Mumford v. Stocker, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 601; by the amount for which judgment is rendered; Longstreet v. Lafitte, 2 Speers (S. C.) 664; and special circumstances in some cases; Morton v. Bryce, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 64; Murden v. Perman, 1 McCord (S. C.) 128; Kinsler v. Kyzer, 4 McCord (S. C.) 315. See BAIL BOND; RECOGNIZANCE.

The powers of the bail over the defendant are very extensive. As they are supposed to have the custody of the defendant, they may, when armed with the bail piece, arrest him, though out of the jurisdiction of the court where they became bail, and in a different state; Parker v. Bidwell, 3 Conn. 84; Ruggles v. Corey, id. 421; Com. v. Brickett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 138; Nicolls v. Ingersoll, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 145; State v. Lingerfelt, 109 N. C. 775, 14 S. E. 75, 14 L. R. A. 605; may take him while attending court as a suitor, or at any time, even on Sunday; Broome v. Hurst, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 123; Read v. Case, 4 Conn. 170, 10 Am. Dec. 110; may break open a door if necessary; Nicolls v. Ingersoll, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 145; Read v. Case, 4 Conn. 166, 10 Am. Dec. 110; may command the assistance of the sheriff and his officers; Com. v. Brickett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 138; and may depute their power to others; State v. Ma- hon, 3 Harr. (Del.) 568. He has been looked upon as the principal's gaoler, and the principal, when bailed, has been deemed as truly imprisoned as if he were still confined; 11 Harv. L. Rev. 541. "The bail have their principal on a string and may pull the string whenever they please and render him in their discharge;" 6 Mod. 231. Where the defendant has been surrendered by his sureties pending an appeal, a reasonable time and opportunity should be given him to get another bond; In re Bauer, 112 Mo. 231, 20 S. W. 488.

To refuse or delay to bail any person is an offence against the liberty of the subject, both at common law and by statute, but does not entitle the person refused to an action unless malice be shown; 4 Q. B. 468; 13 id. 240; Evans v. Foster, 1 N. H. 374.

In extradition cases bail is held not to be a question of practice; it is dependent on statute; although the United States statute in respect to procedure in extradition does not forbid bail in such cases, that is not enough, as the authority must be expressed; and as there is no provision for bail in the act, bail cannot be allowed; In re Carrier, 57 Fed. 578. In In re Wright, 123 Fed. 463, bail was denied in an extradition case for want of power. On appeal in Wright v. Henkel, 190 U. S. 40, 23 Sup. Ct. 781, 47 L. Ed. 948, it was said: "We are unwilling to hold that the circuit court possesses no power in respect of admitting to bail other than as specifically vested by statute, or that while bail should not ordinarily be granted in cases of foreign extradition, those courts may not in any case, and whatever the special circumstances, extend that relief." In [1898] 2 Q. B. 615, it was held that the King's Bench had at common law jurisdiction to admit to bail.

In Canadian Law. A lease. See Merlin, Répert. Bail.

Bail emphyteotique. A lease for years, with a right to prolong indefinitely; 5 Low. C. 381. It is equivalent to an alienation; 6 Low. C. 58.

BAIL BOND. A specialty by which the defendant and other persons become bound to the sheriff in a penal sum proportioned to the damages claimed in the action, and which is conditioned for the due appearance of such defendant to answer to the legal process therein described, and by which the sheriff has been commanded to arrest him.

The defendant usually binds himself as principal with two sureties; but sometimes the bail alone bind themselves as principals, and sometimes also one surety is accepted by the sheriff. The bail bond may be said to stand in the place of the defendant so far as the sheriff is concerned, and, if properly taken, furnishes the sheriff a complete answer to the requirement of the writ, directing him to take and produce the body of the defendant. A bail bond is given to the sheriff, and can be taken only where he has custody of the defendant on process other than final, and is thus distinguished from recognizance, which see.

The sheriff can take the bond only when he has custody of the defendant's body on process other than final.

When a bail bond, with sufficient securities and properly prepared, is tendered to the sheriff, he must take it and discharge the defendant; Stat. 23 Hen. VI. c. 10, § 5.

The requisites of a bail bond are that it should be under seal; 1 Term 418; Walker v. Lewis, 3 N. C. 16; Peyton v. Moseley, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 80; Payne v. Britton's Ex'r., 6 Rand. (Va.) 101; should be to the sheriff by the name of the office; 1 Term 422; Loker v. Antonio, 4 McCord (S. C.) 175; Handley's Adm'r v. Ewings, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 505; Conant v. Sheldon, 4 Gray (Mass.) 300; conditioned in such manner that performance is possible; 3 Campb. 181; Fanshor v. Stout, 4 N. J. L. 319; for a proper amount; Oxley v. Turner, 2 Va. Cas. 334; Ellis v. Robinson, 3 N. J. L. 707; for the defendant's appearance at the place and day named in the writ; 1 Term 418; Holmes v. Chadbourne, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 10; Robeson v. Thompson, 9 N. J. L. 97; Carter v. Cockrill, 2 Munf. (Va.) 448; Blanding v. Rogers, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 394, 4 Am. Dec. 595; see BAIL; and should describe the action in which the defendant is arrested with sufficient accuracy to distinguish it; Ralston v. Love, Hard. (Ky.) 501; Colburn v. Downes, 10 Mass. 20; Kelly v. Com., 9 Watts (Pa.) 43; but need not disclose the nature of the suit; 6 Term 702. A bail bond which fails to specify the charge which the principal is to answer is void and the defect cannot be remedied by testimony; People v. Gillman, 58 Hun 368, 12 N. Y. Supp. 40. The sureties must be two or more in number to relieve the sheriff; 2 Bingh. 227; Long v. Billings, 9 Mass. 482; Seymour v. Curtiss, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 108; and he may insist upon three, or even more, subject to statutory provisions on the subject; 5 M. & S. 223; but the bond will be binding if only one be taken; Glezen v. Rood, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 490; Caines v. Hunt, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 358; Johnson's Assignee v. Williams, 2 Over. (Tenn.) 178; Lane v. Smith, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 284.

Putting in bail to the action; 5 Burr. 2683; and waiver of his right to such bail by the plaintiff; Phillips v. Oliver, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 419; Flack v. Eager, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 185; Culpeper Agricultural & Mfg. Soc. v. Digges, 6 Rand. (Va.) 165, 18 Am. Dec. 708; Hubbard v. Shaler, 2 Day (Conn.) 199; or a surrender of the person of the defendant, constitute a performance or excuse from the performance of the condition of the bond; 1 B. & P. 326; Stockton v. Throgmorton, 1 Baldw. 148, Fed. Cas. No. 13,463; Strang v. Barber, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 329; Ellis v. Hay, id. 334; McClurg v. Bowers, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 24; Coolidge v. Cary, 14 Mass. 115; Moyers v. Center, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 439; Thorn v. Delany, 6 Ark. 219; see State v. Lingerfelt, 109 N. C. 775.

14 S. E. 75, 14 L. R. A. 605; as do many other matters which may be classed as changes in the circumstances of the defendant abating the suit; Treasurers of State v. Moore's Ex'rs, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 215; Champion v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 485; including a discharge in insolvency; Saunders v. Bobo, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 492; Kane v. Ingraham, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 403; Champion v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 481; Sergeant v. Stryker, 16 N. J. L. 466, 32 Am. Dec. 404; Richmond v. De Young, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 64; matters arising from the negligence of the plaintiff; 2 B. & P. 558; or from irregularities in proceeding against the defendant; 3 Bla. Com. 292; Boggs v. Chichester, 13 N. J. L. 209; Waples v. Derrickson, 1 Harr. (Del.) 134. Where the recognizance is for the appearance of a prisoner, and he does appear and pleads guilty, it cannot be forfeited for failure to appear subsequently to answer the sentence; State v. Cobb, 44 Mo. App. 375.

In those states in which the bail bond is conditioned to abide the judgment of the court as well as to appear, some of the acts above mentioned will not constitute performance. See RECOGNIZANCE. The plaintiff may demand from the sheriff an assignment of the bail bond, and may sue on it for his own benefit; Stat. 4 Anne, c. 16, § 20; Roop v. Meek, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 545; Higgins v. Glass, 47 N. C. 353; unless he has waived his right so to do; Huguet v. Hallet, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 55; or has had all the advantages he would have gained by entry of special bail; Priestman v. Keyser, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 344; Union Bank of New York v. Kraft, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 284.

The remedy is by scire facias in some states; Pierce v. Read, 2 N. H. 359; Hunter v. Hill, 3 N. C. 223; Harvey v. Goodman, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 273; Usher v. Frink, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 84; Belknap v. Davis, 21 Vt. 409; Waughhopp v. State, 6 Tex. 337. The United States is not restricted to the remedies provided by the laws of a state in enforcing a forfeited bond taken in a criminal case, but may proceed according to the common law; U. S. v. Insley, 54 Fed. 221, 4 C. C. A. 296. See JUSTIFICATION.

BAIL COURT. A court auxiliary to the court of King's Bench at Westminster, wherein points connected more particularly with pleading and practice were argued and determined. Wharton, Law Dict. 2d Lond. ed. It has been abolished.

BAIL PIECE. A certificate given by a judge or the clerk of a court, or other person authorized to keep the record, in which it is certified that the bail became bail for the defendant in a certain sum and in a particular case. It was the practice, formerly, to write these certificates upon small pieces of parchment, in the following form:—

In the court of ———, of the Term of ———, in the year of our Lord ———,

City and County of ———, ss.

Thcunis Thew is delivered to bail, upon the taking of his body, to Jacobus Vanzant, of the city of ———, merchant, and to John Doe, of the same city, yeoman.

SMITH, JR. { At the suit of Att'ny for Deft. { PHILIP CARSWELL.

Taken and acknowledged the — day of —, A. D. —, before me. D. H.

See 3 Bla. Com. App.; 1 Sellon, Pr. 139.

BAILABLE ACTION. An action in which the defendant is entitled to be discharged from arrest only upon giving bond to answer.

BAILABLE PROCESS. Process under which the sheriff is directed to arrest the defendant and is required by law to discharge him upon his tendering suitable bail as security for his appearance. A capias ad respondendum is bailable; not so a capias ad satisfaciendum.

BAILEE. One to whom goods are bailed; the party to whom personal property is delivered under a contract of bailment.

His duties are to act in good faith, and perform his undertaking, in respect to the property intrusted to him, with the diligence and care required by the nature of his engagement.

When the bailee alone receives benefit from the bailment, as where he borrows goods or chattels for use, he is bound to exercise extraordinary care and diligence in preserving them from loss or injury; Bennett v. O'Brien, 37 Ill. 250; Ross v. Clark, 27 Mo. 549; but he is not an insurer; 9 C. & P. 383.

When the bailment is mutually beneficial, as where chattels are hired or pledged to secure a debt, the bailee is bound to exercise ordinary care in preserving the property; Petty v. Overall, 42 Ala. 145, 94 Am. Dec. 634; Dearbourn v. Bank, 58 Me. 275; Erie Bank v. Smith, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 9; St. Losky v. Davidson, 6 Cal. 643.

When the bailee receives no benefit from the bailment, as where he accepts chattels or money to keep without recompense, or undertakes gratuitously the performance of some commission in regard to them, he is answerable only for the use of the ordinary care which he bestows upon his own property of a similar nature; Edw. Bailm. § 43. It has been held that such a bailee would be liable only for gross neglect or fraud; McKay v. Hamblin, 40 Miss. 472; Gulledge v. Howard, 23 Ark. 61; Edson v. Weston, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 278; Burk v. Dempster, 34 Neb. 426, 51 N. W. 976; Hibernia Bldg. Ass'n

v. McGrath, 154 Pa. 296, 26 Atl. 377, 35 Am. St. Rep. 828. The case must have relation to the nature of the property bailed; Jenkins v. Motlow, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 248, 60 Am. Dec. 154.

These differing degrees of negligence have been doubted. See BAILMENT.

The bailee is bound to redeliver or return the property, according to the nature of his engagement, as soon as the purpose for which it was bailed shall have been accomplished. Nothing will excuse the bailee from delivery to his bailor, except by showing that the property was taken from him by law, or by one having a paramount title, or that the bailor's title had terminated; Bliven v. R. Co., 36 N. Y. 403; Burton v. Wilkinson, 18 Vt. 186, 46 Am. Dec. 145; Bliven v. R. Co., 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 191.

He cannot dispute his bailor's title; Edw. Bailm. § 73; Dougherty v. Chapman, 29 Mo. App. 233; nor can he convey title as against the bailor, although the purchaser believes him to be the true owner; Hendricks v. Evans, 46 Mo. App. 313.

The bailee has a special property in the goods or chattels intrusted to him, sufficient to enable him to defend them by suit against all persons but the rightful owner. The depositary and mandatary acting gratuitously, and the finder of lost property, have this right; Edw. Bailm. § 245; Garlick v. James, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 147, 7 Am. Dec. 294.

A bailee with a mere naked authority, having a right to remuneration for his trouble, but coupled with no other interest, may support trespass for any injury amounting to a trespass done while he was in the actual possession of the thing; Edw. Bailm. 37; Faulkner v. Brown, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 63; Moran v. Packet Co., 35 Me. 55. A bailee may recover in trover for goods wrongfully converted by a third person; McGraw v. Paterson, 47 Ill. App. 87.

A bailee for work, labor, and services, such as a mechanic or artisan who receives chattels or materials to be repaired or manufactured, has a lien upon the property for his services; 2 Pars. Contr. 145, 146; 3 id. 270-273; Wheeler v. McFarland, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 318. Other bailees, innkeepers, common carriers, and warehousemen, also, have a lien for their charges.

The responsibilities of a bailee cannot be thrust upon one without his knowledge and against his consent; they must be voluntarily assumed by him or his agents; First Nat. Bank of Lyons v. Bank, 60 N. Y. 278, 19 Am. Rep. 181; Story, Bailm. 60. A constructive acceptance is sufficient; Rodgers v. Stophel, 32 Pa. 111, 12 Am. Dec. 775; as where one comes into possession by mistake; 1 Str. 505; Morris v. R. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 202; or fortuitously; Preston v. Neale, 12 Gray (Mass.) 222, citing Story, Bailm. § 44 a; or where it is a custom of trade; Westcott v. Thompson, 18 N. Y. 363. Where property is consigned to a person as bailee, with specific directions as to its disposal, he may refuse to accept; Kansas Elevator Co. v. Harris, 6 Kan. App. 89, 49 Pac. 674; since a person has the same right to decline becoming a bailee as he has to decline becoming a purchaser; King v. Richards, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 418, 37 Am. Dec. 420; but innkeepers, common carriers, wharfingers or warehousemen, as persons exercising a public employment, are not within this rule. See those titles.

BAILIE. In Scotch Law. An officer appointed to give infeftment.

In certain cases it is the duty of the sheriff, as king's bailie, to act; generally, any one may be made bailie, by filling in his name in the precept of sasine.

A magistrate possessing a limited criminal and civil jurisdiction. Bell, Dict.

BAILIFF. A person to whom some authority, care, guardianship, or jurisdiction is delivered, committed, or intrusted. Spelman, Gloss.

A sheriff's officer or deputy. 1 Bla. Com. 344.

A court attendant, sometimes called a tipstaff.

A magistrate, who formerly administered justice in the parliaments or courts of France, answering to the English sheriffs as mentioned by Bracton.

There are still bailiffs of particular towns in England; as, the bailiff of Dover Castle, etc.; otherwise, bailiffs are now only officers or stewards, etc.; as, bailiffs of liberties, appointed by every lord within his liberty, to serve writs, etc.; bailiffs errant or itinerant, appointed to go about the country for the same purpose; sheriff's bailiffs, sheriff's officers to execute writs; these are also called bound bailiffs, because they are usually bound in a bond to the sheriff for the due execution of their office; bailiffs of court-baron, to summon the court, etc.; bailiffs of husbandry, appointed by private persons to collect their rents and manage their estates; water bailiffs, officers in port towns for searching ships, gathering tolls, etc. Bacon, Abr.

A person acting in a ministerial capacity who has by delivery the custody and administration of lands or goods for the benefit of the owner or bailor, and is liable to render an account thereof. Co. Litt. 271; Story, Eq. Jur. § 446; Barnum v. Landon, 25 Conn. 149.

The word is derived from the old French bailler, to deliver, and originally implied the delivery of real estate, as of land, woods, a house, a part of the fish in a pond; Ow. 20; 2 Leon. 194; 37 Edw. III. c. 7; 10 Hen. VII. c. 30; but was afterwards extended to goods and chattels. Every bailiff is a receiver, but every receiver is not a bailiff. Hence it is a good plea that the defendant never was receiver, but was bailiff. 18 Edw. III. 16. See Cro. Eliz. 82, 83; Fitzh. N. B. 134 F; 8 Coke 48 a, b.

From a bailiff are required administration, care, management, skill. He is entitled to allowance for the expense of administration, and for all things done in his office according to his own judgment without the special direction of his principal, and also for casu-all things done in the common course of business; Co. Litt. 89 a; Com. Dig. E, 12; Brooke, Abr. Acc. 18; but not for things foreign to his office; Brooke, Abr. Acc. 26, 88; Plowd. 282 b, 14; Com. Dig. Acc. E, 13; Co. Litt. 172. Whereas a mere receiver, or a receiver who is not also a bailiff, is not entitled to allowance for any expenses; 1 Rolle, Abr. 119; Com. Dig. E, 13; James v. Browne, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 340, 1 L. Ed. 165.

A bailiff may appear and plead for his principal in an assize; "and his plea commences" thus: "J. S., bailiff of T. N., comes," etc., not "T. N., by his bailiff J. S., comes," etc. Co. 2d Inst. 415; Keilw. 117 b. As to what matters he may plead, see Co. 2d Inst. 414.

BAILIWORK. The jurisdiction of a sheriff or bailiff. 1 Bla. Com. 344.

A liberty or exclusive jurisdiction which was exempted from the sheriff of the county, and over which the lord appointed a bailiff, with such powers within his precinct as the under-sheriff exercised under the sheriff of the county. Whishaw, Lex.

BAILLEW DE FONDS. In Canadian Law. The unpaid vendor of real estate.

His claim is subordinate to that of a subsequent hypothecary creditor claiming under a conveyance of prior registration; 1 Low. C. 1, 6; but is preferred to that of the physician for services during the last illness; 9 Low. C. 497.

BAILLI. In Old French Law. One to whom judicial authority was assigned or delivered by a superior. Black, L. Dict.

BAILMENT. A delivery of something of a personal nature by one party to another, to be held according to the purpose or object of the delivery, and to be returned or delivered over when that purpose is accomplished. Prof. Joel Parker, MS. Lect. Harvard Law School, 1851.

The right to hold may terminate, and a duty of restoration may arise, before the accomplishment of the purpose; but that does not necessarily enter into the definition, because such duty of restoration was not the original purpose of the delivery, but arises upon a subsequent contingency. The party delivering the thing is called the bailor; the party receiving it, the bailee.

Various attempts have been made to give a precise definition of this term, upon some of which there have been elaborate criticisms, see Story, Bailm. 4th ed. § 2, n. 1, exemplifying the maxim, Omnis definitio in lege periculosa est; but the one above given is concise, and sufficient for a general definition.

Some other definitions are here given as illustrating the elements considered necessary to a bailment by the different authors cited.

A delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose, and upon a contract, express or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust. Story, Bailm. § 2. See Merlin, Répert. Bail.

A delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, either expressed or implied, that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee. 2 Bla. Com. 451. See id. 395.

A delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods restored by the bailee as soon as the purposes of the bailment shall be answered. 2 Kent 559.

A delivery of goods on a condition, express or implied, that they shall be restored by the bailee to the bailor, or according to his directions, as soon as the purpose for which they are bailed shall be answered. Jones, Bailm. 1.

A delivery of goods in trust on a contract, either expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods redelivered as soon as the time or use for which they were bailed shall have elapsed or be performed. Jones, Bailm. 117.

According to Story, the contract does not necessarily imply an undertaking to redeliver the goods; and the first definition of Jones here given would seem to allow of a similar conclusion. On the other hand, Blackstone, although his definition does not include the return, speaks of it in all his examples of bailments as a duty of the bailee; and Kent says that the application of the term to cases in which no return or delivery or redelivery to the owner or his agent is contemplated, is extending the definition of the term beyond its ordinary acceptance in the English law. A consignment to a factor would be a bailment for sale, according to Story; while according to Kent it would not be included under the term bailment.

Sir William Jones has divided bailments into five sorts, namely: depositum, or deposit; mandatum, or commission without recompense; commodatum, or loan for use without pay; pignus, or pawn; locatum, or hiring, which is always with reward. This last is subdivided into locatio rei, or hiring, by which the hirer gains a temporary use of the thing; locatio operis faciendi, when something is to be done to the thing delivered; locatio operis mercium vehendarum, when the thing is merely to be carried from one place to another. Jones, Bailm. 36. See these several titles.

A better general division, however, for practical purposes, is into three kinds. First, those bailments which are for the benefit of the bailor, or of some person whom he represents. Second, those for the benefit of the bailee, or some person represented by him. Third, those which are for the benefit of both parties.

A radical distinction between a bailment and a chattel mortgage is that, by a mortgage, the title is transferred to the mortgagee, subject to be revested by performance of the condition, but, in case of a bailment, the bailor retains the title and parts with the possession for a special purpose; Walker v. Staples, 5 Allen (Mass.) 34. See MORTGAGE.

A hiring of property for a specific term is a bailment, though the hirer has an option to purchase before the expiration of the term; Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198; Collins v. R. Co., 171 Pa. 243, 33 Atl. 331; Bailey v. Colby, 34 N. H. 29, 66 Am. Dec. 752. A telegraph company receiving a message is said to be a bailee for hire and not a common carrier; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Fontaine, 58 Ga. 433; and to be governed by the law applicable to that class of bailments called locatio operis faciendi; Pinckney v. Telegraph Co., 19 S. C. 71, 45 Am. Rep. 765. See TELEGRAPH.

An agreement by which A is to let B have a horse, in consideration that B will let A have another horse, creates an exchange, not a bailment; King v. Fuller, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 152; and where a jeweler's sweepings were delivered under an option to return either the product or its equivalent in value, the transaction was held to be either an exchange or a sale; Austin v. Seligman, 21 Blatchf. 506, 18 Fed. 519.

Where animals are delivered to be taken care of for a certain time, and at the expiration of that time the same number of animals is to be returned, and any increase is to be enjoyed by both parties, there is a bailment, not a partnership; Robinson v. Haas, 40 Cal. 474; so one who hired a boat, paying its running expenses out of the earnings and dividing what was left with the owner, was held a bailee, prior to paying the expenses and striking a balance; Ward v. Thompson, Fed. Cas. No. 17,162.

A contract for hiring teams and carriages for a certain time at a certain price, which, by its terms, is one of bailment, is not converted into one of service, so as to render the owner liable for the acts of the hirer, because the contract provides for the rates to be charged upon sub-letting the property and limits the territory in which it can be used and the kind of work that can be done, and because the owner employs an agent to supervise this branch of his business, to secure men to undertake the work and to make contracts with them; McCulligan v. R. Co., 214 Pa. 229, 63 Atl. 792, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 544, 112 Am. St. Rep. 739, distinguishing L. R. 7 C. P. 272; L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 281; [1902] 2 K. B. 38.

When the identical article is to be returned in the same or in some altered form, the contract is one of bailment and the title to the property is not changed; but when there is no obligation to return the specific article and the receiver is at liberty to return another thing of equal value, then the transaction is a sale; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093. This distinction or test of a bailment is recognized in Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Burkhardt, 97 U. S. 116, 24 L. Ed. 973; Walker v. Butterick, 105 Mass. 237; Middleton v. Stone, 111 Pa. 589, 4 Atl. 523.

There are three degrees of care and diligence required of the bailee, and three degrees of the negligence for which he is responsible, according to the purpose and object of the bailment, as shown in those three classes; and the class serves to designate the degree of care, and of the negligence for which he is responsible. Thus, in the first class the bailee is required to exercise only slight care, and is responsible, of course, only for gross neglect. In the second he is required to exercise great care, and is responsible even for slight neglect. In the third he is required to exercise ordinary care, and is responsible for ordinary neglect. See BAILEE.

It has been held in some cases that there are, properly speaking, no degrees of negligence (though the above distinctions have been generally maintained in the cases; Edw. Bailm. § 61); 11 M. & W. 113; The New World v. King, 16 How. (U. S.) 474, 14 L. Ed. 1019; Perkins v. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 207, 82 Am. Dec. 281; L. R. 1 C. P. 612.

When a person receives the goods of another to keep without recompense, and he acts in good faith, keeping them as his own, he is not answerable for their loss or injury. As he derives no benefit from the bailment, he is responsible only for bad faith or gross negligence; Smith v. Bank, 99 Mass. 605, 97 Am. Dec. 59; 2 Ad. & E. 256; Griffith v. Zipperwick, 28 Ohio St. 388; Laforge v. Morgan, 11 Mart. (O. S.) La. 462; Knowles v. R. Co., 38 Me. 55, 61 Am. Dec. 234; Tracy v. Wood, 3 Mas. 132, Fed. Cas. No. 14,130; 2 C. B. 877; Burk v. Dempster, 34 Neb. 426, 51 N. W. 976; Kincheloe v. Priest, 89 Mo. 240, 1 S. W. 235, 58 Am. Rep. 117. But this obligation may be enlarged or decreased by a special acceptance; 2 Kent 565; Story, Bailm. § 33; 2 Ld. Raym. 910; Ames v. Belden, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 515; and a spontaneous offer on the part of the bailee increases the amount of care required of him; 2 Kent 565. Knowledge by the bailee of the character of the goods; Jones, Bailm. 38; and by the bailor of the manner in which the bailee will keep them; Knowles v. R. Co., 38 Me. 55, 61 Am. Dec. 234; are important circumstances.

A bank (national or otherwise) accustomed to keep securities, whether authorized to do so by its charter or not, is liable for their loss by gross carelessness; First Nat. Bank v. Graham, 79 Pa. 106, 21 Am. Rep. 49; Turner v. Bank, 26 Ia. 562; Chattahoochee Nat. Bank v. Schley, 58 Ga. 369; Gray v. Merriam, 148 Ill. 179, 35 N. E. 810, 32 L. R. A. 769, 39 Am. St. Rep. 172; Preston v. Prather, 137 U. S. 604, 11 Sup. Ct. 162, 34 L. Ed. 788; see First Nat. Bank v. Bank, 60 N. Y. 278, 19 Am. Rep. 181; contra, Whitney v. Bank, 50 Vt. 389, 28 Am. Rep. 503. A national bank has power to receive such deposits; National Bank v. Graham, 100 U. S. 699, 25 L. Ed. 750.

So when a person receives an article and undertakes gratuitously some commission in respect to it, as to carry it from one place to another, he is only liable for its injury or loss through his gross negligence. It is enough if he keep or carry it as he does his own property; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 141; Tracy v. Wood, 3 Mas. 132, Fed. Cas. No. 14,130; and cases above. A treasurer of an association who receives no compensation is only liable for gross negligence in paying out funds, as he is a gratuitous bailee; Hibernia

Building Ass'n v. McGrath, 154 Pa. 296, 26 Atl. 377, 35 Am. St. Rep. 828. See MANDATE.

As to the amount of skill such bailee must possess and exercise, see 2 Kent 509; Story, Bailm. § 174; Fellowes v. Gordon, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 415; Beardslee v. Richardson, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 25, 25 Am. Dec. 596; Ferguson v. Porter, 3 Fla. 27; 11 M. & W. 113; and more skill may be required in cases of voluntary offers or special undertakings; 2 Kent 573.

The borrower, on the other hand, who receives the entire benefit of the bailment, must use extraordinary diligence in taking care of the thing borrowed, and is responsible for even the slightest neglect; Niblett v. White's Heirs, 7 La. 253; Moore v. Westervelt, 27 N. Y. 234; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Ross v. Clark, 27 Mo. 549; Green v. Hollingsworth, 5 Dana (Ky.) 173, 30 Am. Dec. 680. See Hagebush v. Ragland, 78 Ill. 40.

He must apply it only to the very purpose for which it was borrowed; 2 Ld. Raym. 915; Story, Bailm. § 232; cannot permit any other person to use it; 1 Mod. 210; Wilcox v. Hogan, 5 Ind. 546; Sarjeant v. Blunt, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 76; cannot keep it beyond the time limited; Wheelock v. Wheelwright, 5 Mass. 104; and cannot keep it as a pledge for demands otherwise arising against the bailor; 2 Kent 574. See 9 C. & P. 383; Chamberlin v. Cobb, 32 Ia. 161.

A borrower cannot recover for injuries caused by a defect in the thing borrowed, where such defect is hidden and the bailor had no knowledge of it; [1899] 1 Q. B. D. 145. In a bailment for hire it is said to be the duty of the bailor to use due care to find hidden defects; 6 Q. B. Div. 685. The obligation of the lender goes no further than to make known to the borrower a defect in the subject matter of the bailment should he know of the existence of such defect; he is not liable for an injury caused by a defect, even if he might have known of it; 6 H. & N. 329; 8 El. & Bl. 1035; Gagnon v. Dana, 69 N. H. 264, 39 Atl. 982, 41 L. R. A. 389, 76 Am. St. Rep. 170; but if he knows of a defect and by gross negligence omits to inform the borrower of it, an action may be maintained; 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 147.

When the property has been lost or destroyed without fault on his part, he is not responsible to the owner; Clark v. U. S., 95 U. S. 539, 24 L. Ed. 518; Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n v. Moore, 183 U. S. 653, 22 Sup. Ct. 240, 46 L. Ed. 366; but when he contracts either expressly or by fair implication to return the thing even though it has been lost or destroyed without negligence on the bailee's part, such contract must be enforced according to its terms; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093; Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n v. Moore, 183 U. S. 654, 22 Sup. Ct. 240, 46 L. Ed. 366.

In the third class of bailments under the division here adopted, the benefits derived from the contract are reciprocal: it is advantageous to both parties. In the case of a pledge given on a loan of money or to secure the payment of a debt, the one party gains a credit and the other security by the contract. And in a bailment for hire, one party acquires the use of the thing bailed and the other the price paid therefor: the advantage is mutual. So in a bailment for labor and services, as when one person delivers materials to another to be manufactured, the bailee is paid for his services and the owner receives back his property enhanced in value by the process of manufacture. In these and like cases the parties stand upon an equal footing: there is a perfect mutuality between them. And therefore the bailee can only be held responsible for the use of ordinary care and common prudence in the preservation of the property bailed; Knapp v. Curtis, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 60; 5 Bingh. 217; Bakwell v. Talbot, 4 Dana (Ky.) 217; Fulton v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 148; Mayor and Council of Columbus v. Howard, 6 Ga. 213; Brown v. Waterman, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 117. A bailee for hire is supposed to take such care of property as a reasonably prudent man would of his own; Cloyd v. Steiger, 139 Ill. 41, 28 N. E. 987.

The common law does not recognize the rule of the civil law that the bailor for hire is bound to keep the thing in repair, and in the absence of provision the question as to which party is bound to repair depends largely on custom and usage; Central Trust Co. of New York v. Ry. Co., 50 Fed. 857.

The depository or mandatary has a right to the possession as against everybody but the true owner; Story, Bailm. § 93; Pitt v. Albritton, 34 N. C. 74; 4 E. L. & Eq. 438; see McMahon v. Sloan, 12 Pa. 229, 51 Am. Dec. 601; but is excused if he delivers it to the person who gave it to him, supposing him the true owner; Nelson v. Iverson, 17 Ala. 216; and may maintain an action against a wrong-doer; 1 B. & Ald. 59; Chamberlain v. West, 37 Minn. 54, 33 N. W. 114.

It is contended by Story that a mere depository has no special property in the deposit, but a custody only; Story, Bailm. §§ 93, 133, citing Norton v. People, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 137; Com. v. Morse, 14 Mass. 217; and that there is a clear distinction between the custody of a thing and the property, whether general or special, in a thing; 1 Term 658. If a depository has a special property in the deposit, it must be equally true that every other bailee has, and indeed that every person who lawfully has the custody of a thing, with the assent of the owner, has a special property in it. Under such circumstances, the distinction between a special property and a mere custody would seem to be almost, if not entirely, evanescent; Story, Bailm. § 93 a, citing the leading case of Hartop v. Hoare, 3 Atk. 44, where certain jewels enclosed in a sealed paper and sealed bag had been placed by the owner with a jeweller for safe custody, and the latter afterwards broke the seals and pledged the jewels to Hoare for an advance of money. The owner brought suit against the pledgee and the court held, first, that the delivery to the jeweller was a mere naked bailment for the use of the bailor, and the jeweller was a mere depository, having no general or special property in the jewels, and no right to dispose of them; secondly, that as the pledge by the jeweller was wrongful, the refusal by the defendant to deliver the jewels to the owner was a tortious conversion. In a criticism on this view, it has been said that that case does not constitute a sufficient authority for denying the bailee's right to a special property in the bailment; that although the jeweller came into possession of the jewels by right originally, yet when he broke the seals and took them out of the bag, he was possessor mala fide; and that from this it might be inferred that the principle was admitted that, as respects third persons, a depository has a special property, as otherwise there is no pertinency in resting the want of it on the circumstances of his breaking the seals and taking the jewels out of the envelopes, and thereby divesting himself of the special property he originally had, and in fact ceasing to be a bailee; 16 Am. Jur. 280. Sir William Jones says: "The general bailee has unquestionably a limited property in the goods entrusted to his care;" Jones, Bailm. 80; and Lord Coke says: "Bailment maketh a privity. If one has goods as bailee where he hath only a possession, and no property, yet he shall have an action for them;" 2 Bulst. 306. If his possession be violated he may maintain trespass or trover; Waterman v. Robinson, 5 Mass. 303, where it was held that he had no special property by which he could maintain replevin.

A bailee of an officer in cases of an attachment of property has a sufficient property to maintain an action against a stranger for any dispossession or injury to the goods attached; Odiorne v. Colley, 2 N. H. 70, 9 Am. Dec. 39; Bender v. Manning, 2 N. H. 289.

A borrower has no property in the thing borrowed, but may protect his possession by an action against the wrong-doer; 2 Bingh. 173; Hurd v. West, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 752. As to the property in case of a pledge, see PLEDGE.

In bailments for storage the bailee acquires a right to defend the property as against third parties and strangers, and is answerable for loss or injury occasioned through his failure to exercise ordinary care. See WAREHOUSEMAN; TROVER.

As to the lien of warehousemen and wharfingers for their charges on the goods stored with them, see LIEN.

The hire of things for use transfers a special property in them for the use agreed upon. The price paid is the consideration for the use: so that the hirer becomes the temporary proprietor of the things bailed, and has the right to detain them from the general owner for the term or use stipulated for. It is a contract of letting for hire, analogous to a lease of real estate for a given term. Edw. Bailm. § 325. See HIRE.

In a general sense, the hire of labor and services is the essence of every species of bailment in which a compensation is to be paid for care and attention or labor bestowed upon the things bailed. The contracts of warehousemen, carriers, forwarding and commission merchants, factors, and other agents who receive goods to deliver, carry, keep, forward, or sell, are all of this nature, and involve a hiring of services. In a more limited sense, a bailment for labor and services is a contract by which materials are delivered to an artisan, mechanic, or manufacturer to be made into some new form. The title to the property remains in the party delivering the goods, and the workman acquires a lien upon them for services bestowed upon the property. Cloth delivered to a tailor to be made up into a garment, a gem or plate delivered to a jeweller to be set or engraved, a watch to be repaired, may be taken as illustrations of the contract. The owner, who does not part with his title, may come and take his property after the work has been done; but the workman has his lien upon it for his reasonable compensation.

Where property is temporarily in charge of an incidental bailee such as a shopkeeper, restaurant keeper, barber, bathhouse proprietor, or the like, as an incident to his general business, the liability of the bailee does not differ in any respect from that of other bailees for hire; Tombler v. Koelling, 60 Ark. 62, 28 S. W. 795, 27 L. R. A. 502, 46 Am. St. Rep. 146; Dilberto v. Harris, 95 Ga. 571, 23 S. E. 112; Donlin v. McQuade, 61 Mich. 275, 28 N. W. 114; Bunnell v. Stern, 122 N. Y. 539, 25 N. E. 910, 10 L. R. A. 481, 19 Am. St. Rep. 519; Buttman v. Dennett, 9 Misc. 462, 30 N. Y. Supp. 247; Woodruff v. Painter, 150 Pa. 91, 24 Atl. 621, 16 L. R. A. 451, 30 Am. St. Rep. 786; Goff v. Wanamaker, 25 W. N. C. (Pa.) 358; Walpert v. Bohan, 126 Ga. 532, 55 S. E. 181, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828, 115 Am. St. Rep. 114, 8 Ann. Cas. 89; but see Powers v. O'Neill, 89 Hun 129, 34 N. Y. Supp. 1007; and contributory negligence on the part of the bailor in such cases may relieve the bailee from liability; Powers v. O'Neill, 89 Hun 129, 34 N. Y. Supp. 1007. An innkeeper who conducts a public bath house as an incident to his business is not liable to a guest as an innkeeper, but as a bailee for hire; Walpert v. Bohan, 126 Ga. 532, 55 S. E. 181, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828, 115 Am. St. Rep. 114, 8 Ann. Cas. 89; Minor v. Staples, 71 Me. 316, 36 Am. Rep. 318. It is said that the implied contract on the part of a shop-keeper (the consideration for which is the chance of profit) that, if customers come to the store, no harm that can reasonably be averted shall overtake them, must be held to extend to the safety of such property as the customers necessarily or habitually carry with them; Woodruff v. Painter, 150 Pa. 91, 24 Atl. 621, 16 L. R. A. 451, 30 Am. St. Rep. 786; and that the proprietor should provide a safe place for the keeping of such property when the customer while trying on apparel must necessarily lay aside his own; Bunnell v. Stern, 122 N. Y. 539, 25 N. E. 910, 10 L. R. A. 481, 19 Am. St. Rep. 519; but see Wamser v. Browning, King & Co., 187 N. Y. 87, 79 N. E. 861, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, where the customer knowing the clerks to be busy, proceeded to wait on himself, knowing there was no one but himself to watch the garments he laid aside.

When the business of the bailee implies skill, a want of such skill as is customary in his calling will render him liable as for gross negligence; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299, 45 Am. Rep. 480; Stanton v. Bell, 9 N. C. 145, 11 Am. Dec. 744; even though the bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailor and the bailee receives no compensation; Conner v. Winton, 8 Ind. 315, 65 Am. Dec. 761.

As to the duties and liabilities of common carriers and innkeepers, see those titles. As to warehouse receipts, see that title. See DEPOSIT; MANDATE; HIRE; AGISTOR; SALE; ROLLING STOCK; LIEN.

BAILOR. He who bails a thing to another.

The bailor must act with good faith towards the bailee; Story, Bailm. § 74; permit him to enjoy the thing bailed according to contract; and in some bailments, as hiring, warrant the title and possession of the thing hired, and, probably, keep it in suitable order and repair for the purpose of the bailment; Story, Bailm. § 388.

BAIRN'S PART. See LEGITIM.

BAITING. To bait is to attack with violence; to provoke and harass. 2 A. & E. Encyc. 63; L. R. 9 Q. B. 380.

BALÆNA. A large fish, called by Blackstone a whale. Of this the king had the head and the queen the tail as a perquisite whenever one was taken on the coast of England. Prynne, Ann. Reg. 127; 1 Bla. Com. 221.

BALANCE. The amount which remains due by one of two persons, who have been dealing together, to the other, after the settlement of their accounts.

In the case of mutual debts, the balance only can be recovered by the assignee of an insolvent or the executor of a deceased person. But this mutuality must have existed at the time of the assignment by the insolvent, or at the death of the testator.

It is often used in the sense of residue or remainder; Lopez v. Lopez, 23 S. C. 269; Skinner v. Lamb, 25 N. C. 155.

The term general balance is sometimes used to signify the difference which is due to a party claiming a lien on goods in his hands for work or labor done, or money expended in relation to those and other goods of the debtor; 3 B. & P. 485; 3 Esp. 268; McWilliams v. Allan, 45 Mo. 573.

The phrase "net balance" as applied to the proceeds of the sale of stock means in commercial usage the balance of the proceeds after deducting the expenses incident to the sale; Evans v. Waln, 71 Pa. 74.

Cowell. Occurring in the return of the sheriff, non est inventus in balliva mea (he has not been found in my bailiwick); afterwards abbreviated to the simple non est inventus; 3 Bla. Com. 283.

BALLAST. That which is used for trimming a ship to bring it down to a draft of water proper and safe for sailing. Great Western Ins. Co. v. Thwing, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 674, 20 L. Ed. 607.

The act of voting by balls or tickets. Webster.

A ballot or ticket is a single piece of paper containing the names of the candidates and the offices for which they are running. People v. Holden, 28 Cal. 136. See ELECTION.

BAN. In Old English and Civil Law. A proclamation; a public notice; the announcement of an intended marriage. Cowell. An excommunication; a curse, publicly pronounced. A proclamation of silence made by a crier in court before the meeting of champions in combat. Cowell. A statute, edict, or command; a fine, or penalty.

An open field; the outskirts of a village; a territory endowed with certain privileges.

A summons; as arriere ban. Spelman, Gloss.

In French Law. The right of announcing the time of moving, reaping, and gathering the vintage, exercised by certain seignorial lords. Guyot, Rép. Univ.

BANALITY. In Canadian Law. The right by virtue of which a lord subjects his vassals to grind at his mill, bake at his oven, etc. Used also of the region within which this right applied. Guyot, Rép. Univ. It prevents the erection of a mill within the seignorial limits; 1 Low. C. 31; whether steam or water; 3 Low. C. 1.

BANE. A malefactor. Bracton, l. 1, t. 8, c. 1.

In Commercial Law. A place for the deposit of money; Oulton v. Institution, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 118, 21 L. Ed. 618. See Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 166; Pratt v. Short, 79 N. Y. 440, 35 Am. Rep. 531; People v. R. Co., 12 Mich. 389, 86 Am. Dec. 64.

The business of banking, as defined by law and custom, consists in the issue of notes payable on demand intended to circulate as money when the banks are banks of issue; in receiving deposits payable on demand; in discounting commercial paper; making loans of money on collateral security; buying and selling bills of exchange; negotiating loans, and dealing in negotiable securities issued by the government, state and national, and municipal and other corporations. Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 156, 7 Sup. Ct. 826, 30 L. Ed. 895.

Banks are said to be of thr   kinds, viz.: of deposit, of discount, and of circulation, they generally exercise all these functions; Oulton v. Sav. Soc., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 118, 21 L. Ed. 618.

It was the custom of the early money-changers to transact their business in public places, at the doors of churches, at markets, and, among the Jews, in the temple (Mark xl. 15). They used tables or benches for their convenience in counting and as-sorting their coins. The table so used was called banche, and the traders themselves, bankers or benchers. In times still more ancient, their benches was called cambii, and they themselves were called cambiators. Du Cange, Cambii.

The issue of paper in the similitude of bank notes and intended to circulate is an act of banking; People v. R. Co., 12 Mich. 389, 86 Am. Dec. 64; so is keeping an office to discount notes; People v. Bartow, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 290; but not if the party only lends his own money; People v. Brewster, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 498; nor is merely receiving money on deposit; State v. Ins. Co., 14 Ohio 6; contra, Com. v. Sponsler, 16 Co. Ct. (Pa.) 116.

A corporation loaning its own money on mortgages is not a banking corporation; Oregon & W. Trust Inv. Co. v. Rathburn, 5 Sawy. 32, Fed. Cas. No. 10,555; nor a firm which does not lend money (except on landed security), discount paper or buy or sell drafts; Scott v. Burnham, 56 Ill. App. 30. An unincorporated bank owned by a private individual is not a legal entity, though it is conducted by a so-called president and cashier; Longfellow v. Barnard, 59 Neb. 455, 81 N. W. 307; to the same effect, In re Purl's Estate, 147 Mo. App. 105, 125 S. W. 849.

See NATIONAL BANKS; BANK NOTE; DISCOUNT; GUARANTEE FUND; CHECK; CASHIER; DIRECTOR; DEPOSIT; OFFICER; SAVINGS BANK.

BANK ACCOUNT. A fund which merchants, traders, and others have deposited into the common cash of some bank, to be drawn out by checks from time to time as the owner or depositor may require.

BANK CHARGES. This term in an action on a bill of exchange is equivalent to expenses of noting and may be especially endorsed as a liquidated demand; [1893] 1 Q. B. 318.

BANK CREDIT. A credit with a bank by which, on proper security given to the bank, a person receives liberty to draw to a certain extent agreed upon. In Scotland also called a cash account. Such credits were long a distinctive feature of Scotch banking. Cent. Dict.

BANK NOTE. A promissory note, payable on demand to the bearer, made and issued by a person or persons acting as bankers and authorized by law to issue such notes. The definition is confined to notes issued by incorporated banks in 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1664. See 2 Pars. Bills & N. 88. Bank bills and bank notes are equivalent terms, even in criminal cases; Eastman v. Com., 4 Gray (Mass.) 416. The power thus to issue is not inherent or essential in banking business, and is not necessarily implied from the conference of a general power to do banking business. It must be distinctly, and in terms conferred in the incorporating act, or it will not be enjoyed. Morse, Banking, c. viii.; 11 Op. Att.-Gen. 334.

The notes of national banks have supplanted those of state banks at the present time.

For many purposes they are not looked upon as common promissory notes, and as mere evidences of debt. In the ordinary transactions of business they are recognized by general consent as cash. The business of issuing them being regulated by law, a certain credit attaches to them, that renders them a convenient substitute for money; Smith v. Strong, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 241. They may be reissued after payment; Chalm. Bills of Exch. 267.

The practice is, therefore, to use them as money; and they are a good tender, unless objected to; Snow v. Perry, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 542; Jefferson County Bank v. Chapman, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 322; Felter v. Weybright, 8 Ohio 169; Hoyt v. Byrnes, 11 Me. 475; Ball v. Stanley, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 199, 26 Am. Dec. 263; Seawell v. Henry, 6 Ala. 226; 5 Dowl. & R. 289. They pass under the word "money" in a will, and, generally speaking, they are treated as cash; Mechanics' & Farmers' Bank v. Smith, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 115; but see Armstrong v. Scotten, 29 Ind. 495, as to their receipt by a sheriff in payment of an execution. When payment is made in bank notes, they are treated as cash and receipts are given as for cash; Morris v. Edwards, 1 Ohio 189; Edwards v. Morris, 1 Ohio 524; Morrill v. Brown, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 177; Bradley v. Hunt, 5 G. & J. (Md.) 54, 23 Am. Dec. 597; Governor v. Carter, 10 N. C. 328, 14 Am. Dec. 588; Scott v. Com., 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 643; 1 Sch. & L. 318, 319; Tancil v. Seaton, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 605, 26 Am. Rep. 380; 1 Burr. 452. It has been held that the payment of a debt in bank notes discharges the debt; Bayard v. Shunk, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 92, 37 Am. Dec. 441; Pearson v. Gayle, 11 Ala. 280; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1676; Edmunds v. Digges, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 359, 42 Am. Dec. 561; but not when the payer knew the bank was insolvent. The weight of authority is against the doctrine of the extinguishment of a debt by the delivery of bank notes which are not paid, when duly presented, in reasonable time. But it is undoubtedly the duty of the person receiving them to present them for payment as soon as possible; Gilman v. Peck, 11 Vt. 516, 34 Am. Dec. 702; Fogg v. Sawyer, 9 N. H. 365; President, etc., of Bank of U. S. v. Bank, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 333, 6 L. Ed. 334; Young v. Adams, 6 Mass. 182; Houghton v. Adams, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 545; Westfall, Stewart & Co. v. Braley, 10 Ohio St. 188, 75 Am. Dec. 509; Frontier Bank v. Morse, 22 Me. 88, 38 Am. Dec. 284; Townsend v. Bank, 7 Wis. 185; 6 B. & C. 373.

Bank notes are governed by the rules applicable to other negotiable paper. They are assignable by delivery; Rep. t. Hard. 53; President, etc., of Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 236, 41 Am. Dec. 549. The holder of a note is entitled to payment, and cannot be affected by the fraud of a former holder, unless he is proved privy to the fraud; 1 Burr. 452; Sylvester v. Girard, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 185; Worcester County Bank v. Bank, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 488, 57 Am. Dec. 120; 2 Dan. Neg. Instr. § 1680; Olm- stead v. Bank, 32 Conn. 278, 85 Am. Dec. 260. The bona fide holder who has received them for value is protected in their possession even against a real owner from whom they have been stolen. Payment in forged bank notes is a nullity; Pindall's Ex'rs v. Bank, 7 Leigh (Va.) 617; Hargrave v. Dusenberry, 9 N. C. 326; Ramsdale v. Horton, 3 Pa. 330; Eagle Bank of New Haven v. Smith, 5 Conn. 71, 13 Am. Dec. 37; but the taker of such must give prompt notice that they are counterfeit, and offer to return them; Simms v. Clark, 11 Ill. 137. But where the bank itself receives notes purporting to be its own, and they are forged, it is otherwise; President, etc., of Bank of U. S. v. Bank, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 333, 6 L. Ed. 334. See 6 B. & C. 373. If a note be cut in two for transmission by mail, and one half be lost, the bona fide holder of the other half can recover the whole amount of the note; Hinsdale v. Bank, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 378; Bank of Virginia v. Ward, 6 Munf. (Va.) 166; Farmers' Bank of Virginia v. Reynolds, 4 Rand. (Va.) 186; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1696.

At common law, as choses in action, bank notes could not be taken in execution; 9 Cro. Eliz. 746. The statute laws of the several states, or custom, have modified the common law in this respect, and in many of them they can be taken on execution; Spencer v. Blaisdell, 4 N. H. 198, 17 Am. Dec. 412; Morrill v. Brown, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 173; Lovejoy v. Lee, 35 Vt. 430.

BANK STOCK. The capital of a bank. In England the sum is applied chiefly to the stock of the Bank of England.

BANKABLE. Bank notes, checks, and other securities for money received as cash by banks in the place where the word is used.

In the United States, the notes issued by the national banks have taken the place of those formerly issued by banks incorporated under state laws. The circulation of these notes being secured by United States bonds deposited with the treasurer of the United States, they are received as bankable money without regard to the locality of the bank issuing them. See U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5133; Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 533, 19 L. Ed. 482.

BANKER'S NOTE. A promissory note given by a private banker or banking institution, not incorporate, but resembling a bank note in all other respects. 6 Mod. 29; 3 Chit. Comm. Law 590.

BANKRUPT. Originally and strictly, a trader who secretes himself or does certain other acts tending to defraud his creditors. 2 Bla. Com. 471.

A broken-up or ruined trader. Everett v. Stone, 3 St. 453, Fed. Cas. No. 4,577.

By modern usage, an insolvent person.

A person who has done or suffered to be done some act which is by law declared to be an act of bankruptcy.

The word is from the Italian banca rota, the custom being in the middle ages to break the benches or counters of merchants who failed to pay their debts. Voltaire, Dict. Phil. voc. sig. Banqueroute; Saint Bennet Dict. Faillite.

In the English law there were two characteristics which distinguished bankrupts from insolvents: the former must have been a trader and the object of the proceedings against, not by, him. Originally the bankrupt was considered a criminal; 2 Bla. Com. 471; and the proceedings were only against fraudulent traders; but this distinction has been abolished by the later English bankruptcy acts, although in some respects traders and non-traders continued to be put on a different footing; Mozl. & W. Law Dict. As used in American law, the distinction between a bankrupt and an insolvent is not generally regarded. Act of Congress of March 2, 1867, and Act of June 22, 1874 (both now repealed). On the continent of Europe the distinction between bankrupt and insolvent still exists; Holtz. Encyc. voc. sig. Bankerott. Under the constitution of the United States the Federal government has power to pass a uniform bankrupt law. The meaning of bankrupt as used in the constitution was not the technical early English one, but was commensurate with insolvent; Kunzler v. Kohaus, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 317. In the first bankrupt law of Apr. 4, 1800, repealed Dec. 19, 1803, the word bankrupt was used in the old English sense. The distinction, however, became less observed; Marshall, C. J., in Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; 2 Kent 390; and was finally abandoned and broken down by the act of Aug. 19, 1841, which was a union of both species of laws, including "all persons whatsoever." The constitutionality of the voluntary part of the act was much contested, but was fully sustained; Kunzler v. Kohaus, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 317; McCormick v. Pickering, 4 N. Y. 283. (For the reasons assigned contra, see Sackett v. Andross, 5 Hill [N. Y.] 327.)

The only substantial difference between a strictly bankrupt law and an insolvent law lies in the circumstance that the former affords relief upon the application of the creditor, and the latter upon the application of the debtor. In the general character of the remedy there is no difference, however much the modes by which the remedy may be administered may vary. But even in the respect named there is no difference in this instance. The act of congress (1867) was both a bankrupt act and an insolvent act by definition, for it afforded relief upon the application of either the debtor or the creditor, under the heads of voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy; Martin v. Berry, 37 Cal. 222.

A state has authority to pass a bankrupt law, provided such law does not impair the obligation of contracts, and provided there be no act of congress in force to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, conflicting with such law; McMillan v. McNeill, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 209, 4 L. Ed. 552; Odgen v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606.

A state bankrupt law so far as it attempts to discharge the contract is unconstitutional; McMillan v. McNeill, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 209, 4 L. Ed. 552; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Smith, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 131, 5 L. Ed. 224; whether passed before or after the debt was created; McMillan v. McNeill, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 209, 4 L. Ed. 552; or where the suit was in a state of which both parties were citizens, and in which they resided until suit, and where the contract was made; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Smith, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 131, 5 L. Ed. 224; but a bankrupt or insolvent law of a state which discharges the person of the debtor and his further acquisitions of property is valid, though a discharge under it cannot be pleaded in bar of an action by a citizen of another state in the courts of the United States or of any other state; Odgen v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606. Every state law is a bankrupt law in substance and fact, that causes to be distributed by a tribunal the property of a debtor among his creditors; and it is especially such if it causes the debtor to be discharged from his contracts, so far as it can do so; Nelson v. Carland, 1 How. (U. S.) 265, and note, 11 L. Ed. 126. When the United States statute is also an insolvent law acting upon the same persons and cases as the state insolvent law, the latter is suspended when the United States statute goes into operation; Nelson v. Carland, 1 How. (U. S.) 265, 11 L. Ed. 126; Ex parte Eames, 2 Sto. 326, Fed. Cas. No. 4,237, but the state law may be still in force as to a class of insolvents not included in the Federal act; Herron Co. v. Superior Court, 136 Cal. 279, 68 Pac. 814, 89 Am. St. Rep. 124. If the state court has acquired jurisdiction under a state statute, and is actually settling the debts and distributing the assets of the insolvent before or at the date at which the Federal law takes effect, it may proceed to a final conclusion of the case; Judd v. Ives, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 401; Martin v. Berry, 37 Cal. 208. A voluntary assignment made by the debtor within four months of being adjudged a bankrupt is void although it was made in conformity to the laws of his state; In re Gutwillig, 90 Fed. 475. See INSOLVENCY.

BANKRUPT LAWS.

Bankruptcy laws, as now understood, were not known to the common law. Certain acts in England, beginning with the statute 34 & 35 Henry VIII. c. 4, were first mainly directed against the criminal frauds of traders. The bankrupt was treated as a criminal offender; and, formerly, the not duly surrendering his property under a commission of bankruptcy, when summoned, was a capital felony. The bankrupt laws are now, and have for some time past been, regarded as a connected system of civil legislation, having the double object of enforcing a complete discovery and equitable distribution of the property of an insolvent trader, and of conferring on the trader the reciprocal advantage of security of person and a discharge from all claims of his creditors.

By the Act 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, the former statutes were consolidated and many important alterations introduced. All business under the earlier statutes was entrusted to commissioners appointed by the Lord Chancellor for each case. A subsequent statute, 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56, changed the mode of proceeding by constituting a Court of Bankruptcy, and removing the jurisdiction of bankrupt cases in the first instance from the Court of Chancery to that of Bankruptcy, reserving only an appeal from that court to the lord chancellor as to matters of law and equity and questions of evidence; and other important alterations were introduced. This was followed by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 29. In 1869, bankruptcies in the counties were transferred to the county courts and in London to the London Court of Bankruptcy. Its jurisdiction was transferred in 1883 to the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. The bankrupt laws were codified in 1883 and in 1890.

Bankrupt laws were passed in the United States in 1800, 1841, and 1867, but they were repealed after a brief existence.

The act of 1867 was repealed by act of June 7, 1878 (taking effect September 1, 1878) but not to affect pending cases.

A bankruptcy act was passed July 1, 1898. It extends not only to corporations ordinarily speaking, but to limited or other partnership associations whose capital alone is responsible for the debts of the association.

The act is not unconstitutional, though it provides that others than traders may be adjudged bankrupts on voluntary petition, though it allows the exemptions of the local laws, and though it provides that the discharge of the debtor under proceedings at his domicile shall be valid throughout the United States; Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 186 U. S. 181, 22 Sup. Ct. 857, 46 L. Ed. 1113.

A person shall be deemed insolvent 'within the act "whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts." Wage-earner shall include any person who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding one thousand five hundred dollars per year.

The courts of bankruptcy are the district courts of the United States and of the territories, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of the Indian Territory and of Alaska. They are invested with such jurisdiction in law and at equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings, in vacation in chambers and during their respective terms; to adjudge persons bankrupt who have had their principal place of business, resided, or had their domicile for the preceding six months, or the greater portion thereof, within their respective territorial jurisdictions, or who do not have their principal place of business, reside, or have their domicile within the United States, but have property within the jurisdiction of the court or have been adjudged bankrupts by competent courts of jurisdiction without the United States, and have property within their jurisdictions.

Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference, vacated or discharged such preference; or (4) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or (5) admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground. See PREFERENCE.

A petition may be filed against a person who is insolvent and who has committed an act of bankruptcy within four months. Such time shall not expire until four months after (1) the date of the recording of the transfer, when the act consists in having made a transfer of any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or for the purpose of giving a preference as in the act provided, or a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, if by law such recording is required or permitted; (2) or, if it is not, from the date when the beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive, or continuous possession of the property, unless the petitioning creditor have received actual notice of such transfer or assignment.

It would be a defence to prove that the party was not insolvent as defined in the act at the time the petition was filed against him, and upon such proof the proceedings shall be dismissed. The burden of proof is on the alleged bankrupt. He must appear in court with books and accounts, and submit to an examination in respect to his insolvency.

The petitioner in involuntary proceedings is required to give bond with two good and sufficient sureties who shall reside in the jurisdiction to be approved by the court, in such sums as the court shall direct, conditioned on the payment of damages and costs in case the petition is dismissed. If the petition is dismissed the respondent is allowed all costs, counsel fees, expenses, and damages, to be fixed by the court and covered by the bond.

"Any person who owes debts, except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act as a voluntary bankrupt."

"Any natural person, except a wage-earner or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, any unincorporated company and any corporation engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, or mercantile pursuits, owing debts to the amount of one thousand dollars or over, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt upon default or an impartial trial, and shall be subject to the provisions and entitled to the benefits of this act. Private bankers, but not national banks or banks incorporated under state or territorial laws, may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts." Mining corporations were added by the act of Feb. 5, 1903.

A partnership during its continuance or after its dissolution and before its final settlement may be adjudged a bankrupt. The court which has jurisdiction of one of the partners may have jurisdiction of all the partnership assets, but separate accounts of the partnership and individual property should be kept and expenses divided between them as the court shall determine. The net proceeds of partnership property goes to partnership debts, and those of the individual estates to individual debts. Any surplus in either case to the other class of debts. Proof of claims of partnership debts may be allowed against individual estates and vice versa, and the court may marshal the assets of both estates so as to prevent preferences and secure an equitable distribution.

If one or more but not all of the partners are adjudged bankrupt the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy unless by consent of the partners not adjudged bankrupts. The latter shall settle the partnership business as expeditiously as possible and account for the interest of the bankrupt partners. Any exemptions in force when the petition was filed in the state where the bankrupt had his domicile for six months or the greater portion thereof immediately preceding the filing of the petition are preserved.

Provision is made for a composition with creditors, but not until the bankrupt has been examined in open court or at a meeting of creditors and has filed his schedule of assets and list of creditors. If the application therefor has been accepted in writing by a majority in number and amount of proved creditors, and the consideration thereof and money to pay all prior debts and costs have been deposited subject to the order of the court, it may be presented to the court, which, after notice and a hearing, may confirm it.

A discharge may be applied for, but not until one month after, and within the ensuing twelve months from the adjudication of bankruptcy (with a further extension, by order of court for cause, of six months). No discharge shall be granted if the bankrupt has committed an offence punishable by imprisonment under the act; or, with fraudulent intent to conceal his condition, etc., has destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep proper books of account.

A discharge releases all debts except taxes due the United States or the state, county, district, or municipality in which the bankrupt resides; judgments on claims for fraud or for obtaining property by false pretences and wilful injuries to the person or property of another; and debts not scheduled (unless the creditor was unknown to the bankrupt or the creditor had knowledge of the proceedings); or created by fraud, embezzlement, etc., as an officer or trustee; does not release a judgment obtained by a husband against the bankrupt for criminal conversation with his wife; Tinker v. Colwell, 193 U. S. 473, 24 Sup. Ct. 505, 48 L. Ed. 754; nor a contract made by a divorced bankrupt by which he agreed to pay his wife a sum annually for her support and that of their child; Dunbar v. Dunbar, 190 U. S. 340, 23 Sup. Ct. 757, 47 L. Ed. 1084. A discharge in bankruptcy will be withheld if the bankrupt is shown to have obtained property on credit upon false representations in writing, and any creditors may avail themselves of this right; In re Harr, 143 Fed. 421.

The right to a trial by jury is given in respect of the fact of insolvency and of the commission of an act of bankruptcy, upon the application of the alleged bankrupt. The right is absolute and cannot be withheld at the court's discretion; Elliott v. Toepfner, 187 U. S. 327, 23 Sup. Ct. 133, 47 L. Ed. 200.

The district court now has jurisdiction of all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy, Jud. Code, § 24, including controversies between the trustee and any adverse claimant of his property. Suits by the trustee must be brought in the court where the bankrupt might have brought them, unless by consent of the proposed defendant.

The circuit court of appeals (Judicial Code, § 130) has appellate and supervisory jurisdiction which is to be exercised in the manner provided in the bankruptcy act. By § 25, appeals may be taken to the circuit court of appeals: 1. From a judgment adjudging or refusing to adjudge the defendant a bankrupt; 2. From a judgment granting or denying a discharge; 3. From a judgment allowing or rejecting a debt or claim of $500 or over. Such appeal must be taken within ten days and may be heard by the appellate court in term time or in vacation.

The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction of controversies in bankruptcy from which it has appellate jurisdiction in other cases; and it exercises a like jurisdiction from courts of bankruptcy not within any organized circuit of the United States and from the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

An appeal may be taken to the supreme court from the final decision of the circuit court of appeals allowing or rejecting a claim, under such rules as may be prescribed by the supreme court in the following cases: 1. Where the amount in controversy exceeds $2,000 and the question involved is one which might have been taken on appeal or writ of error from the highest court of the state to the supreme court; 2. Where some justice of the supreme court shall certify that in his opinion the determination of the question involved is essential to the uniform construction of the bankruptcy laws.

Controversies may be certified to the supreme court from other United States courts and the supreme court may exercise jurisdiction thereof, and may issue writs of certiorari pursuant to the laws now in force.

In the computation of time the first day is excluded and the last included.

The act provides for the appointment for two years of a reasonable number of referees, to whom all matters may be referred. Referees in bankruptcy exercise much of the judicial authority of the court; Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 269, 46 L. Ed. 405.

The creditors appoint one or three trustees at their first meeting, failing which, the court shall do so.

A trustee holds the bankrupt's property subject to all the equities against it; Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 206 U. S. 423, 27 Sup. Ct. 720, 51 L. Ed. 1117, 11 Ann. Cas. 789; he gets no better title than the bankrupt had; Hewitt v. Mach. Works, 194 U. S. 296, 24 Sup. Ct. 690, 48 L. Ed. 986. Section 70 gives the trustee title to all property which, prior to the bankruptcy, could have been transferred or levied upon or sold under judicial proceedings against the bankrupt. The filing of a petition places all the bankrupt property in the custody of the court; Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 269, 46 L. Ed. 405; but it has no jurisdiction against persons to whom the bankrupt made a sale or conveyance before the proceedings in bankruptcy, where it appears that the vendee acted in good faith; Wall v. Cox, 181 U. S. 244, 21 Sup. Ct. 642, 45 L. Ed. 845; but where the bankrupt made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, and the assignee sold the property after a petition in bankruptcy was filed, it was held that the purchaser had no title superior to that of the trustee, although he bought the property in good faith; Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 21 Sup. Ct. 557, 45 L. Ed. 814. A contingent remainder does not pass in bankruptcy; In re Hoadley, 101 Fed. 233. A bankrupt trustee takes only the surrender value of the insurance policies on the bankrupt's life, or if the company has loaned on it, only the excess of surrender value. The bankrupt is entitled to the policy by paying for it the cash surrender value or the excess over loans made on it at the date of filing the petition; and if the policy matures before the adjudication he or his legal representative is entitled to the proceeds of the policy over and above such amount; and this even though the bankrupt committed suicide prior to adjudication; Everett v. Judson, 228 U. S. 474, 33 Sup. Ct. 568, 57 L. Ed. —; Andrews v. Partridge, 228 U. S. 479, 33 Sup. Ct. 570, 57 L. Ed. —.

The first meeting of creditors shall be held not less than ten nor more than thirty days after the adjudication. Subsequent meetings may be held when all creditors whose claims are allowed sign a written consent thereto. The court shall call a meeting whenever one-fourth of those who have proved their claims apply in writing. A final meeting shall be held when the estate is ready to be closed.

Adjudication in bankruptcy terminates the relation of landlord and tenant, and a claim for rent accruing after such adjudication will not be allowed, though the tenant executed promissory notes therefor; In re Hays, Foster & Ward Co., 117 Fed. 879. A sworn proof of claim against a bankrupt is prima facie evidence of its allegations; Whitney v. Dresser, 200 U. S. 532, 26 Sup. Ct. 316, 50 L. Ed. 584; and a creditor who knowingly received a preference and gave it up only when compelled by the trustee cannot thereafter prove his claim; In re Owings, 109 Fed. 623. An attorney is not entitled to a preferential claim out of the estate for professional services in preparing a general assignment for the bankrupt within the four months' period; Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 23 Sup. Ct. 710, 47 L. Ed. 1165; nor for services in resisting an adjudication in voluntary bankruptcy; id.; but he may prove as an unsecured claim his services in the preparation of a deed of trust; id. Three or more creditors whose provable claims aggregate, above any securities, $500, or if all the creditors are less than twelve in number, then one whose claim exceeds such amount may petition in involuntary bankruptcy.

BANKRUPTCY. The state or condition of a bankrupt. See INSOLVENCY.

BANLEUCA. A certain space surrounding towns or cities, distinguished by peculiar privileges. Spelman, Gloss. It is the same as the French banlieue.

BANLIEU. In Canadian Law. See BANLEUCA.

BANNER. A small flag bearing a device or symbol and intended to be carried or waved. L. R. 2 P. C. 387. A canvas, part-colored or bearing party words and stretched across a street is a banner; 4 O'M. & H. 179.

BANNERET. A degree of honor next after a baron's, when conferred by the king; otherwise, it ranks after a baronet. 1 Bla. Com. 403.

BANNITUS. One outlawed or banished. Calvinus, Lex.

BANNS OF MATRIMONY. Public notice or proclamation of a matrimonial contract, and the intended celebration of the marriage of the parties in pursuance of such contract, to the end that persons objecting to the same may have an opportunity to declare such objections before the marriage is solemnized. Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 439; Pothier, Du Mariage p. 2, c. 2.

BANNUM. A ban.

BAR. To Actions. A perpetual destruction of the action of the plaintiff.

It is the exceptio peremptoria of the ancient authors. Co. Litt. 303 b; Steph. Pl. App. xxviii. It is always a perpetual destruction of the particular action to which it is a bar, Doctrina Plac. xxiii. § 1, p. 129; and it is set up only by a plea to the action, or in chief. But it does not always operate as a permanent obstacle to the plaintiff's right of action. He may have good cause for an action, though not for the action which he has brought; so that, although that particular action, or any one like it in nature and based on the same allegations, is forever barred by a well-pleaded bar, and a decision thereon in the defendant's favor, yet where the plaintiff's difficulty really is that he has misconceived his action, and advantage thereof be taken under the general issue (which is in bar), he may still bring his proper action for the same cause; Gould, Pl. c. v. § 137; 6 Coke 7, 8. Nor is final judgment on a demurrer, in such a case, a bar to the proper action, subsequently brought; Gould, Pl. c. ix. § 46. And where a plaintiff in one action fails on demurrer, from the omission of an essential allegation in his declaration, which allegation is supplied in the second suit, the judgment in the first is no bar to the second; for the merits shown in the second declaration were not decided in the first; Gould, Pl. c. ix. § 45; c. v. § 158.

Another instance of what is called a temporary bar is a plea (by executor, etc.) of plene administravit, which is a bar until it appears that more goods have come into his hands, and then it ceases to be a bar to that suit, if true before its final determination, or to a new suit of the same nature: Doctrina Plac. c. xxiii. § 1, p. 130; 4 East 508.

Where a person is bound in any action, real or personal, by judgment on demurrer, confession, or verdict, he is barred, that is, debarred, as to that or any other action of the like nature or degree, from the same thing forever. But the effect of such a bar is different in personal and real actions.

In personal actions, as in debt or account, trover, replevin, and for torts generally (and all personal actions), a recovery by the plaintiff is a perpetual bar to another action for the same matter. He has had one recovery; Doctr. Plac. c. lxxviii. § 1, p. 412. So where a defendant has judgment against the plaintiff, it is a perpetual bar to another action of like nature for the same cause (like nature being here used to save the cases of misconceived action or an omitted averment, where, as above stated, the bar is not perpetual). And inasmuch as, in personal actions, all are of the same degree, a plaintiff against whom judgment has passed cannot, for the subject thereof, have an action of a higher nature; therefore he generally has in such actions no remedy (no manner of avoiding the bar of such a judgment) except by taking the proper steps to reverse the very judgment itself (by writ of error, or by appeal, as the case may be), and thus taking away the bar by taking away the judgment; 6 Coke 7, S. (For occasional exceptions to this rule, see authorities above cited.)

In real actions, if the plaintiff be barred as above by judgment on a verdict, demurrer, confession, etc., he may still have an action of a higher nature, and try the same right again; Lawes, Plead. 39; Stearns, Real Act. See, generally, Bacon, Abr. Abatement, n.; Plea in bar; 3 East 346.

A particular part of the court-room.

As thus applied, and secondarily in various ways, it takes its name from the actual bar, or enclosing rail, which originally divided the bench from the rest of the court-room, as well as from that bar, or rail, which then divided, and now usually divides, the space including the bench and the place which lawyers occupy in attending on and conducting trials, from the body of the court-room.

Those who are authorized to appear before the court and conduct the trial of causes.

Those who, as advocates or counsellors, appeared as speakers in court, were said to be "called to the bar," that is, called to appear in presence of the court, as barristers, or persons who stay or attend at the bar of court. Richardson, Dict. Barrister. By a natural transition, a secondary use of the word was applied to the persons who were so called, and the advocates were, as a class, called "the bar." And in this country, since attorneys, as well as counsellors, appear in court to conduct causes, the members of the legal profession, generally, are called the bar, and in this sense are employed the terms "members of the bar" and "admission to the bar."

The court, in its strictest sense, sitting in full term.

Thus, a civil case of great consequence was not left to be tried at nisi prius, but was tried at the "bar of the court itself," at Westminster; 3 Bla. Com. 352. So a criminal trial for a capital offence was had "at bar," 4 id. 351; it is still used in a criminal trial before three judges in the King's Bench Division. It is also used in this sense, with a shade of difference (as not distinguishing nisi prius from full term, but as applied to any term of the court), when a person indicted for crime is called "the prisoner at the bar," or is said to stand at the bar to plead to the indictment. See Merlin, Répert. Barreau; 1 Dupin, Prof. d'Av. 461.

An obstacle or opposition. Thus, relationship within the prohibited degrees, or the fact that a person is already married, is a bar to marriage.

BAR ASSOCIATIONS. Associations of members of the bar have been organized in most of the states. The first of them was in Mississippi in 1825, but it is not known to have had a continued existence. One was formed in Boston for the state of Massachusetts in 1849, but it does not appear to have had any real life. An association of Grafton and Coös counties in New Hampshire had an existence before 1800, and probably a more or less continuous life since then, having finally merged into a state association. A state association was formed in Iowa in 1875, and existed for not more than five years. All printed reports relating to these associations are in the collection of the Harvard Law School. Similar associations exist in many of the counties in various states, especially in Pennsylvania, where they are chiefly Library Associations. The oldest association of the kind, certainly the oldest that has had a continuous life, is the Law Association of Philadelphia, organized in 1802. The American Bar Association was organized at Saratoga, in August, 1878, and has held annual meetings ever since. The National Bar Association, based upon representation from state and local associations, was organized in May, 1888, and held its last meeting in December, 1891.

BAR FEE. A fee taken by the sheriff, time out of mind, for every prisoner who is acquitted. Bacon, Abr. Extortion. Abolished by stats. 14 Geo. III. c. 26; 55 Geo. III. c. 50; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 114.

BAR ROOM. See SALOON.

BARBER. Barbers were incorporated with the surgeons of London, but not to practice surgery, except the drawing of teeth; 32 Hen. VIII. c. 42.

The business of a barber involves the public health and interest to such an extent that the requirement of a license is a valid exercise of legislative power; State v. Zeno, 79 Minn. 80, 81 N. W. 748, 48 L. R. A. 88, 79 Am. St. Rep. 422. Within the meaning of a civil rights act a barber shop is not a place of public accommodation; Faulkner v. Solazzi, 79 Conn. 541, 65 Atl. 947, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 9 Ann. Cas. 67.

Shaving on Sunday is not a work of necessity, charity or mercy; 4 Cl. & F. 234. A barber's work is a worldly labor in the course of the ordinary calling; State v. Frederick, 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555. In Com. v. Waldman, 140 Pa. 89, 21 Atl. 248, 11 L. R. A. 563, the court refused to say as a matter of law that the keeping open his place of business on Sunday by a barber was a matter of necessity. Shaving an aged or infirm person in his own home on Sunday is not, as a matter of law, a work of necessity; Stone v. Graves, 145 Mass. 353, 13 N. E. 906. A statute declaring that keeping open a barber shop is not deemed a work of necessity or charity does not exceed constitutional bounds, though as to other kinds of labor, that question is left to be determined as one of fact; State v. Petit, 74 Minn. 376, 77 N. W. 225; affirmed in Pettit v. Minnesota, 177 U. S. 164, 20 Sup. Ct. 666, 44 L. Ed. 716.

Where a state constitution forbids the passage of special or local laws for the punishment of crimes, a law making it a misdemeanor for a barber to work on Sunday after 12 noon was held unconstitutional; Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468, 44 Pac. 803, 32 L. R. A. 664; and see Eden v. People, 161 Ill.

296, 43 N. E. 1108, 32 L. R. A. 659, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365; State v. Granneman, 132 Mo. 326, 33 S. W. 784; Armstrong v. State, 170 Ind. 188, 84 N. E. 3, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646; so where a law prohibited barbers from opening their bath rooms on Sunday, but did not prohibit other persons from doing so; Ragio v. State, 86 Tenn. 272, 6 S. W. 401; but see contra, State v. Bergfeldt, 41 Wash. 234, 83 Pac. 177, 6 Ann. Cás. 979; People v. Havuor, 149 N. Y. 195, 43 N. E. 541, 31 L. R. A. 689, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707, the latter case by a divided court, three of seven judges dissenting on the ground that the act (making it a misdemeanor for a barber to work on Sunday, except in the cities of New York and Saratoga Springs, and there only until one o'clock) was vicious class legislation; and that the result necessarily leads to the conclusion that the legislature, by permitting barber shops to remain open for a portion of Sunday in two cities necessarily proceeded upon the theory that the business is a work of necessity. Where a general law prohibits all labor on Sunday, an act prohibiting barbers from working on that day is not class legislation; Breyer v. State, 102 Tenn. 103, 50 S. W. 769.

BARE. Naked; absence of a covering; unaccompanied. A bare trustee is one whose trust is to convey, and the time has arrived for a conveyance by him; or a trustee to whose office no duties were originally attached, or who, although such duties were originally attached to his office, would, on the requisition of his cestuis que trust, be compellable in equity to convey the estate to them or by their direction. 1 Ch. Div. 281.

BAREBONES PARLIAMENT. A parliament summoned by Cromwell in 1653.

BARGAIN. It signifies a contract or agreement between two parties, the one to sell goods or lands, and the other to buy them. Hunt v. Adams, 5 Mass. 358, 4 Am. Dec. 68.

BARGAIN AND SALE. A contract or bargain by the owner of land, in consideration of money or its equivalent paid, to sell land to another person, called the bargainee, whereupon a use arises in favor of the latter, to whom the seisin is transferred by force of the statute of uses. 2 Washb. R. P. 128; Bisp. Eq. 419.

Upon principles of equity, any agreement, supported by a valuable consideration, to the effect that an estate or interest in land should be conveyed, as it might be specially enforced in the court of chancery, was held to entitle the purchaser to the use or beneficial ownership according to the terms and intent of the agreement, without any legal conveyance; and accordingly the vendor was held to be or stand seised to the use of the purchaser. Such transaction, as creating a use executed by the statute, became technically known as a bargain and sale. As a bargain and sale thus would have been effectual to convey a legal estate under the statute by mere force of the agreement without any writing or, formality, it was thought expedient to add some formal conditions to the operation of the statute upon it; and it was enacted by a statute of the same session of parliament, 27 Hen. VIII. c. 16, to the effect that no estate of freehold shall pass by reason only of a bargain and sale, unless made by writing indented, sealed, and enrolled in manner and place therein provided. This statute applied only to estates of freehold, and a use for a term of years might still be created within the statute of uses by mere bargain and sale without deed or enrolment. Leake, Land Laws 108.

This is a very common form of conveyance in the United States. In consequence of the consideration paid, and the bargain made by the vendor, of which the conveyance was evidence, a use was raised at once in the bargainee. To this use the statute of uses transferred and annexed the seisin, whereby a complete estate became vested in the bargainee; 2 Washb. R. P. 128.

All things, for the most part, that may be granted by any deed may be granted by bargain and sale, and an estate may be created in fee, for life, or for years; 2 Coke 54; Dy. 309.

There must have been a valuable consideration; Springs v. Hanks, 27 N. C. 30; Wood v. Beach, 7 Vt. 522; Hanrick v. Thompson, 9 Ala. 410; Cheney's Lessee v. Watkins, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 527, 2 Am. Dec. 530; Okison v. Patterson, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 395; Jackson v. Sebring, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 515, 8 Am. Dec. 357; Cro. Car. 529; Tiedem. R. P. § 776; but its adequacy is immaterial; thus a rent of one peppercorn was held sufficient; 2 Mod. 249; see Leake, Land Laws 109; the consideration need not be expressed; Jackson v. Fish, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 456. See Washb. R. P.; Hayes v. Kershow, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 259; Jackson v. Leek, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 339; Wood v. Beach, 7 Vt. 522; Eckman v. Eckman, 68 Pa. 460; Trafton v. Hawes, 102 Mass. 533, 3 Am. Rep. 494; Perry v. Price, 1 Mo. 553; Jackson v. Dillon's Lessee, 2 Over. (Tenn.) 261.

The proper and technical words to denote a bargain and sale are bargain and sell; Mitch. R. P. 425; but any other words that are sufficient to raise a use upon a valuable consideration are sufficient; 2 Wood, Conv. 15; as, for example, make over and grant; Jackson v. Alexander, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 484, 3 Am. Dec. 517; release and assign; Lynch v. Livingston, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 463. See 2 Washb. R. P. 620; Shepp. Touchst. 222.

An estate in futuro may be conveyed by deed of bargain and sale; Rogers v. Eagle Fire Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 611; 4 H. & N. 277; Drown v. Smith, 52 Me. 141; Trafton

v. Hawes, 102 Mass. 533, 3 Am. Rep. 491; Fisher v. Strickler, 10 Pa. 348, 51 Am. Dec. 488; Mellichamp v. Mellichamp, 28 S. C. 125, 5 S. E. 333; contra, Sowle v. Sowle, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 376; Marden v. Chase, 32 Me. 329; 2 Washb. R. P. *417; but not at common law; note to Doe v. Tranmar, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 473, where the cases are discussed.

Consult Gilbert on Uses, Sugden's edition; Tiedem. R. P.

BARGAINEE. The grantee of an estate in a deed of bargain and sale. The person to whom property is tendered in a bargain.

BARGAINOR. The person who makes a bargain; he who is to deliver the property and receive the consideration.

BARGE. Lighters or a flat bottom boat for loading or unloading ships; or a boat used for pleasure. See The Mamie, 5 Fed. 813.

BARMOTE. See BERGMOTH.

BARO. A man, whether slave or free.

Si quis homicidium perpetraverit in barone libro seu servo, if any one shall have perpetrated a murder upon any man, slave or free. A freeman or freedman; a strong man; a hired soldier; a vassal; a feudal client.

Those who held of the king immediately were called barons of the king.

A man of dignity and rank; a knight.

A magnate in the church.

A judge in the exchequer (baro scaccarii). The first-born child.

A husband.

The word is said by Spelman to have been used more frequently in its latter sense; Spelman, Gloss.

It is quite easy to trace the history of baro, from meaning simply man, to its various derived significations. Denoting a man, one who possessed the manly qualities of courage and strength would be desirable as a soldier, or might misuse them as a robber. One who possessed them in an eminent degree would be the man; and hence baro, in its sense of a title of dignity or honor, particularly applicable in a warlike age to the best soldier. See, generally, Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig.; Spelman, Gloss. Baro.

BARON. A general title of nobility. 1 Bla. Com. 398; a particular title of nobility, next to that of viscount. The lowest title in Great Britain. Originally barons comprehended all the nobility, being the feudatories of provinces. At present barons may be by prescription, because they and their ancestors have immemorially sat in the House of Lords; by patent; or by tenure, holding the title as annexed to land.

A judge of the exchequer. 1 Bla. Com. 44.

A husband. See BARON ET FEME.

A freeman.

It has essentially the same meanings as Baro, which see.

BARON ET FEME. Man and woman; husband and wife.

It is doubtful if the words had originally in this phrase more meaning than man and woman. The vulgar use of man and woman for husband and wife suggests the change of meaning which might naturally occur from man and woman to husband and wife. Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Bla. Com. 442.

BARONAGE. A term used to designate the entire nobility of England of all ranks.

BARONES SCACCARII. See BARONS OF THE EXCHEQUER.

BARONET. A British title of hereditary rank next below that of a baron; it is the only title of hereditary knighthood. It is given by patent, not by investiture. The order was founded in 1611. They rank above all knights except those of the Garter. The order of Baronets of Ireland was founded in 1619 with the same privileges. The order of Baronets of Scotland was founded in 1625; after the Union (1707) they became Baronets of the United Kingdom. None have been created since. The usual abbreviation after the name is Bart. Cent. Dict.

BARONS OF THE CINQUE PORTS. See CINQUE PORTS.

BARONS OF THE EXCHEQUER. The judges of the exchequer. See EXCHEQUER.

BARONY. The dignity of a baron; a species of tenure; the territory or lands held by a baron. Spelman, Gloss. It is possible that this tenure was distinct from that of knight service. 2 Holdsw. Hist. Eng. L. 159. In Scotland a large freehold estate even though the proprietor is not a baron.

BARRATOR. One who commits barratry.

BARRATRY (Fr. barat, baraterie, robbery, deceit, fraud). Sometimes written Barretry. The offence of frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law or otherwise. 4 Bla. Com. 134; Co. Litt. 368. See 1 Cowp. 154, by Lord Mansfield.

An indictment for this offence must charge the offender with being a common barrator; 1 Sid. 282; Train & H. Prec. 55; and the proof must show at least three instances of offending; Com. v. McCulloch, 15 Mass. 227; State v. Simpson, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 379; Com. v. Mohn, 52 Pa. 243, 91 Am. Dec. 153; Lucas v. Pico, 55 Cal. 126; Voorhees v. Dorr, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 580.

An attorney is not liable to indictment for maintaining another in a groundless action; State v. Simpson, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 379. See 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 63; 2 id. § 57; Lambert v. People, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 587; Com. v. McCulloch, 15 Mass. 229; State v. Simpson, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 379; 2 Saund. 308 and note.

The purchase of a single claim, with the intention of suing upon it, does not amount to barratry; to constitute the offence there must be a practice of fomenting suits; Chase's Bla. Com. 905, n. 7; Voorhees v. Dorr, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 580.

In Maritime Law and Insurance. An unlawful or fraudulent act, or very gross and culpable negligence, of the master or mariners of a vessel in violation of their duty as such, and directly prejudicial to the owner, and without his consent; Roccus, h. t.; Abbott, Ship. 167, n.; 2 Ld. Raym. 349; Kendrick v. Delafield, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 67; Suckley v. Delafield, id. 222; McIntire v. Bowne, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 229; Grim v. Ins. Co., 13 id. 451; Brown v. U. S., 8 Cra. (U. S.) 139, 3 L. Ed. 504; Greene v. Ins. Co., 9 Allen (Mass.) 217; Brown v. Ins. Co., 5 Day (Conn.) 1, 5 Am. Dec. 123; Hughes v. Ins. Co., 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 163, 4 L. Ed. 357; Crousillat v. Ball, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 294, 1 L. Ed. 840, 2 Am. Dec. 375; 5 B. & Ald. 597; Lawton v. Ins. Co., 2 Cush. (Mass.) 511; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 230, 7 L. Ed. 659. It is said that the term implies an intentional injury; it does not embrace cases of negligence; Atkinson v. Ins. Co., 4 Daly (N. Y.) 1. A part owner of a ship who is its master may be guilty of barratry towards his co-owners; Hutchins v. Ford, 82 Me. 363, 19 Atl. 832; Voisin v. Ins. Co., 62 Hun 4, 16 N. Y. Supp. 410. It extends, in addition to grosser cases of barratry, to the following:—sailing out of a port without paying port dues, whereby the cargo is forfeited; 6 Term 379; disregarding an embargo; 1 Term 127; or a blockade; 6 Taunt. 375; and when a master was directed to make purchases, and went into an enemy's settlement to trade (though it could be done there to better advantage), whereby the ship was seized, it was held barratry; L. R. 1 Q. B. 162; even though he thought thereby to benefit the owner. When a master is entitled to use his discretion, his conduct will not constitute barratry, unless he goes against his better judgment; 1 Stark. 240. See L. R. 3 C. P. 476. The grossest barratries, as piratically or feloniously seizing or running away with the vessel or cargo, or voluntarily delivering the vessel into the hands of pirates, or mutiny, are capital offences by the laws of the United States; Act of Congress, April 30, 1790, 1; Story's Laws U. S. 84. Barratry is one of the risks usually insured against in marine insurance; 3 Kent, Lacy's ed. 305, n. 50. See INSURABLE INTEREST.

BARREL. A measure of capacity, equal to thirty-six gallons.

BARREN MONEY. A debt which bears no interest.

BARRENNESS. The incapacity to produce a child.

This, when arising from impotence which existed at the time the relation was entered into, is a cause for dissolving a marriage; 1 Foderé, Méd. Leg. § 254; where a woman, by an operation, had been rendered incapable of bearing children, known to the husband before marrying, it was not ground of divorce; Jorden v. Jorden, 83 Ill. App. 633.

BARRISTER. In English Law. A counsellor admitted to plead at the bar. It did not become a usual name until the 16th century. As a popular name it meant an utter barrister; 21 L. Q. R. 253.

Inner barrister. A serjeant or king's counsel who pleads within the bar.

Outer or Utter barrister. One who pleads without the bar. Because they sat "uttermost on the forms of the benchers which they call the bar." 29 L. Q. R. 25. They are distinguished from benchers, or those who have been readers, and are allowed to plead within the bar, as are the king's counsel. See UTTER BARRISTER.

Vacation barrister. A counsellor newly called to the bar, who is to attend for several long vacations the exercises of the house.

In the old books, barristers are called apprentices, apprentiti ad legem, or ad barras (from which the term barrister was derived), being looked upon as learners, and not qualified until they obtain the degree of serjeant. Edmund Plowden, the author of the Commentaries, a volume of reports in the reigns of Edward VI., Mary, Philip and Mary, and Elizabeth, describes himself as an apprentice of the common law. See generally, Weeks on Attys. § 29.

Barristers are now either "utter barristers," now more frequently called "junior barristers," or king's counsel. The former is a person who was formerly a student at an Inn of Court and who has been "called to the bar" by the benchers of his Inn and at his Inn. A recent writer insists that the judges, by statute, alone have the right to call to the bar, i. e. alone can give the "right of audience"; the judges have constituted the benchers of the Inns of Court their deputies for that purpose; W. C. Bolland, 24 L. Q. R. 397; 23 id. 438. The Inns of Court only call to the bar of their societies and not to the bar itself; 29 L. Q. R. 23. See DISBAR.

A king's counsel is a barrister whom the judges have "called within the bar" at the Royal Courts of Justice; Odger, C. L. 1425.

See INNS OF COURT; SERJEANTS-AT-LAW.

Barristers have an exclusive right of audience as advocates in the House of Lords, Privy Council, Supreme Court of Judicature, Central Criminal Court and Assizes; also in Courts of County and Borough Quarter Sessions whenever a sufficient number regularly attend the court. They have no exclusive right in County Courts, Sheriffs' Courts, Coroners' Courts, Ecclesiastical Courts and Courts of Petty Sessions; Odger C. L. 1427. They are obliged to accept any brief (accompanied by a suitable fee) except under special circumstances.

BARTER. A contract by which parties exchange goods for goods.

It differs from a sale in that a barter is always of goods for goods; a sale is of goods for money, or for money and goods. In a sale there is a fixed price; in a barter there is not. See Benj. Sales 1; Speigle v. Meredith, 4 Biss. 120, Fed. Cas. No. 13,227; Com. v. Davis, 12 Bush (Ky.) 241; Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 418.

There must be delivery of goods to complete the contract.

If an insurance be made upon returns from a country where trade is carried on by barter, the valuation of the goods in return shall be made on the cost of those given in barter, adding all charges; Weskett, Ins. 42. See 3 B. & Ald. 616; 3 Campb. 351; Cowp. 118; 1 Dougl. 24, n.; 4 B. & P. 151; Troplong, De l'Echange.

BARTON. In Old English Law. The demesne land of a manor; a farm distinct from the mansion.

Sometimes it is used for the manor house itself; and in some places for out houses and fold yards. In the statute 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 12, Barton lands and demesne lands are used as synonymous. Cowell.

BAS CHEVALIERS. Knights by tenure of a base military fee, as distinguished from bannerets, who were the chief or superior knights. Kennett, Paroch. Ant.; Blount.

BASE BALL. It is a game of skill within the criminal offense of betting on such a game; Mace v. State, 58 Ark. 79, 22 S. W. 1108. Prohibition of base ball playing on Sunday does not violate the right of conscience in matters of religion secured to the individual by the Ohio Bill of Rights; State v. Powell, 58 Ohio St. 324, 50 N. E. 900, 41 L. R. A. 854; nor does imposing a larger penalty on persons who play base ball on Sunday in violation of a statute than upon those who are engaged in hunting, fishing, rioting or quarrelling, and in acts of common labor, violate the constitutional right of citizens to equal privileges and immunities; State v. Hogreiver, 152 Ind. 652, 53 N. E. 921, 45 L. R. A. 504.

Under a contract of hiring for a definite time, which is silent as to the degree of skill to be possessed, the ordinary skill, knowledge and efficiency of base ball players is all that is required; Baltimore Baseball Club & Exhibition Co. v. Pickett, 78 Md. 375, 28 Atl. 279, 22 L. R. A. 690, 44 Am. St. Rep. 304.

See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF NEGATIVE COVENANTS; INJUNCTION.

BASE COIN. Debased coin. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 333, 5 L. Ed. 257.

BASE COURT. An inferior court, that is, not of record, as the court baron. Cunningham.

BASE FEE. A fee which has a qualification annexed to it, and which must be determined whenever the annexed qualification requires.

A grant to A and his heirs, tenants of Dale, continues only while they are such tenants; 2 Bla. Com. 109. See Wiggins Ferry Co. v. R. Co., 94 Ill. 93.

The proprietor of such a fee has all the rights of the owner of a fee-simple until his estate is determined. Plowd. 557; 1 Washb. R. P. 62; 1 Prest. Est. 431; Co. Litt. 1 b.

BASE SERVICES. Such services as were unworthy to be performed by the nobler men, and were performed by the peasants and those of servile rank. 2 Bla. Com. 62; 1 Washb. R. P. 25.

BASEMENT. A floor partly beneath the surface of the ground but distinguished from a cellar by being well lighted and fitted for living purposes. In England the ground floor of a city house.

BASILICA. An abridgment of the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, translated into Greek and first published in the ninth century.

The emperor Basilus, finding the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian too long and obscure, resolved to abridge it, and under his auspices the work was commenced A. D. 867, and proceeded to the fortieth book, which at his death remained unfinished. His son and successor, Leo Philosophus, continued the work, and published it, in sixty books, about the year 880. Constantine Porphyro-genitus, younger brother of Leo, revised the work, rearranged it, and republished it, A. D. 947. From that time the laws of Justinian ceased to have any force in the eastern empire, and the Basilica were the foundation of the law observed there till Constantine XIII., the last of the Greek emperors, under whom, in 1453, Constantinople was taken by Mahomet the Turk, who put an end to the empire and its laws. Histoire de la Jurisprudence; Etienne, Intr. à l'Etude du Droit Romain, § 53. The Basilica were translated into Latin by J. Cujas (Cujacius), Professor of Law in the University of Bourges, and published at Lyons, 22d of January, 1566, in one folio volume.

BASOCHE (Fr.). An association of the "Clercs du Parlement" of Paris, supposed to have been instituted in 1302. It judged all civil and criminal matters that arose among the clerks and all actions brought against them. Hist. for Ready Reference.

BASSA TENURA. See BASE FEE.

BASTARD (bas or bast, abject, low, base, aerâ, nature).

One born of an illicit connection, and before the lawful marriage of its parents.

One begotten and born out of lawful wedlock. 2 Kent 208.

One born of an illicit union. La. Civ. Code, arts. 29, 199.

The second definition, which is substantially the same as Blackstone's, is open to the objection that it does not include with sufficient certainty those cases where children are born during wedlock but are not the children of the mother's husband.

The term is said to include those born of parties under disability to contract marriage, as slaves. Timmins v. Lacy, 30 Tex. 115.

A child is a bastard if born before the marriage of his parents, but he is not a bastard if born after marriage, although begotten before; 1 Bla. Com. 455, 456; 8 East 210; State v. Herman, 35 N. C. 502. By the civil law and by the statute law of many of the states, a subsequent marriage of the parents legitimates children born prior thereto. The rule prevails substantially in Arkansas, Alabama, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, Vermont, and Virginia, with somewhat varying provisions in the different states; 2 Kent 210; but under the common law this is not so; Brock v. State, 85 Ind. 397; Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 321. See HEIR.

A child is a bastard if born during coverture under such circumstances as to make it impossible that the husband of his mother can be his father; Nich. Adult. Bast. 249; Hall v. Com., Hard. (Ky.) 479; Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. (U. S.) 550, 12 L. Ed. 553; 2 M. & K. 349; State v. Britt, 78 N. C. 439; Herring v. Goodson, 43 Miss. 392; Busson v. Forsyth, 32 N. J. Eq. 277; Kleinert v. Ehlers, 38 Pa. 439; Caujolle v. Ferrié, 23 N. Y. 90; but in England the presumption of legitimacy holds if the husband had any opportunity of sexual access during the natural period of gestation, and the question for the jury is not—was the husband the father, but could he have been; 1 Broom & H. Com. 562; and such is the rule in the United States; Van Aernam v. Van Aernam, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 375; Dennison v. Page, 29 Pa. 420, 72 Am. Dec. 644; Watts v. Owen, 62 Wis. 512, 22 N. W. 720; Chase's Bla. Com. 172, n. 13. If there were opportunities for intercourse, evidence is generally not allowed to establish illegitimacy; 2 Gr. Ev. §§ 150, 151 and n.; Inhabitants of Abington v. Inhabitants of Duxbury, 105 Mass. 287. See 9 Beav. 552; 1 Whart. Ev. § 608; 2 id. 1298; 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 1170, 1179. It is, however, held that a strong moral impossibility, or such improbability as to be beyond a reasonable doubt is sufficient; Stegall v. Stegall, 2 Brock. 256, Fed. Cas. No. 13,351; Cross v. Cross, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 139, 23 Am. Dec. 778; Wright v. Hicks, 15 Ga. 160, 60 Am. Dec. 687; State v. Herman, 35 N. C. 502. The presumption of legitimacy of a child born in wedlock is so strong that it cannot be overcome by proof of the adultery of the wife while cohabiting with her husband, much less by the mere admission of the adulterer; Grant v. Mitchell, 83 Me. 23, 21 Atl. 178; [1903] P. 141; 1 Moo. & Rob. 269, where Alderson, B., said: "The law will not under such circumstances, allow a balance of evidence, as to who is most likely to have been the father."

As to who may be admitted to prove non-access, see 3 E. L. & Eq. 100; Bowles v. Bingham, 2 Munf. (Va.) 442, 5 Am. Dec. 497; People v. Overseers of Poor, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 286; Parker v. Way, 15 N. H. 45; Dennison v. Page, 29 Pa. 420, 72 Am. Dec. 644; 1 Bla. Com. 458; Gardner Peerage Case, Le Marchant's report; 5 C. & F. 163; Dejol v. Johnson, 12 La. Ann. 853. Neither husband nor wife are competent for this purpose; Mink v. State, 60 Wis. 583, 19 N. W. 445, 50 Am. Rep. 386; Tiogo County v. South Creep Tp., 75 Pa. 436; Corson v. Corson, 44 N. H. 587; 1 Q. B. 444; 5 Ad. & E. 180; but see State v. McDowell, 101 N. C. 734, 7 S. E. 785, and see ACCESS.

The child may be exhibited to the jury to show resemblance to the putative father; Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. L. 490, 14 Atl. 600; Finnegan v. Dugan, 14 Allen (Mass.) 197; Warlick v. White, 76 N. C. 175; 15 Yale L. J. 96; contra, Clark v. Bradstreet, 80 Me. 454, 15 Atl. 56, 6 Am. St. Rep. 221. See 14 Harv. L. Rev. 545.

A child is a bastard if born beyond a competent time after the coverture has determined; Co. Litt. 123 b; Hargrave & B. note; 2 Kent 210. See GESTATION.

The principal right which a bastard child has is that of maintenance from his parents; 1 Bla. Com. 458; La. Civ. Code § 254; (though not from his father at common law; Schoul. Dom. Rel. *384); which may be secured by the public officers who would be charged with the support of the child, by a peculiar process, or in some cases by the mother; 2 Kent 215. A bastard has no inheritable blood at common law; but he may take by devise if described by the name he has gained by reputation; 1 Ves. & B. 423; Stover v. Boswell's Heir, 3 Dana (Ky.) 233; Cooley v. Dewey, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 93, 16 Am. Dec. 326; Barwick v. Miller, 4 Des. Eq. (S. C.) 434. In many of the states, by statute, bastards can inherit from and transmit to their mothers real and personal estate under some modifications; 2 Kent 213; Schoul. Dom. Rel. *381; Pettus v. Dawson, 82 Tex. 18, 17 S. W. 714; see Stoltz v. Doering, 112 Ill. 234; Cox v. Rash, 82 Ind. 519; and in Utah it can inherit from its father; Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682, 11 Sup. Ct. 222, 34 L. Ed. 832. Whether a person claiming an inheritance in real estate is the lawful child of the last owner is to be determined by the lex rei sitæ; Ross v. Ross, 129 Ma.s. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 321.

Nearly all of the states have statutory provisions relative to bastardy proceedings and as to the liability of the father criminally as well as to the care of the child.

In bastardy proceedings, evidence of improper relations of the prosecutrix with other men than the defendant, but not during the period of gestation, is incompetent; Olson v. Peterson, 33 Neb. 358, 50 N. W. 155.

Bastardy complaints are civil actions; 85 Me. 285; they abate on the death of the respondent before trial and during the pendency of the proceedings; McKenzie v. Lombard, 85 Me. 224, 27 Atl. 110. See HEIR.

BASTARD EIGNÉ. Bastard elder.

By the old English law, when a man had a bastard son, and he afterwards married the mother, and by her had a legitimate son, the first was called a bastard eigné, or, as it is now spelled, ainé, and the second son was called puisné, or since born, or sometimes he was called mulier puisné. 2 Bla. Com. 248.

BASTARDA. A female bastard. Calvinus, Lex.

BASTARDY. The offence of begetting a bastard child. The condition of a bastard.

BASTARDY PROCESS. The statutory mode of proceeding against the putative father of a bastard to secure a proper maintenance for the bastard.

BASTON. In Old English Law. A staff or club.

In some old English statutes the servants or officers of the wardens of the fleet are so called, because they attended the king's courts with a red staff. See JUSTICES OF TRAIL BASTON.

BATTEL. See WAGER OF BATTEL.

BATTERY. Any unlawful beating, or other wrongful physical violence or constraint, inflicted on a human being without his consent. 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 71; Clark, Cr. L. 199; Long v. Rogers, 17 Ala. 540; Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491.

An unlawful touching the person of another by the aggressor himself, or any other substance put in motion by him; Kirland v. State, 43 Ind. 153, 13 Am. Rep. 386. The slightest touching of another in anger is a battery; Goodrum v. State, 60 Ga. 511.

It must be either wilfully committed, or proceed from want of due care; Stra. 596; Plowd. 19; Bullock v. Babcock, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 391. Hence an injury, be it ever so small, done to the person of another in an angry, spiteful, rude, or insolent manner; Com. v. Wing, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 1, 19 Am. Dec. 347; as by spitting in his face; 6 Mod. 172; or on his body; 1 Swint. 597; or any way touching him in anger; 1 Russell, Cr. 751; Johnson v. State, 17 Tex. 515; or throwing water on him; 3 N. & P. 564; or violently jostling him; see 4 H. & N. 481; or where one riding a bicycle recklessly runs against a person standing with his back partially towards him, when by the exercise of slight care it could be avoided; Mercer v. Corbin, 117 Ind. 450, 20 N. E. 132, 3 L. R. A. 221, 10 Am. St. Rep. 76; is a battery in the eye of the law; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 263. And anything attached to the person partakes of its inviolability: if, therefore, A strikes a cane in the hands of B, it is a battery; Republica v. De Longchamps, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 114, 1 L. Ed. 59; State v. Davis, 1 Hill (S. C.) 46; Rich v. Hogeboom, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 453; United States v. Ortega, 4 Wash. C. C. 534, Fed. Cas. No. 15,971. Whether striking a horse is striking the driver, see Kirland v. State, 43 Ind. 146, 13 Am. Rep. 386.

A battery may be justified on various accounts.

As a salutary mode of correction. A parent may correct his child (though if done to excess, it is battery); Com. v. Coffey, 121 Mass. 66; Neal v. State, 54 Ga. 281; Smith v. Slocum, 62 Ill. 354; a guardian his ward; Stanfield v. State, 43 Tex. 167; a master his apprentice; 24 Edw. IV.; Com. v. Randall, 4 Gray (Mass.) 36; State v. Pendergrass, 19 N. C. 365, 31 Am. Dec. 416; a teacher his scholar, within reason; State v. Mizner, 45 Ia. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 769; State v. Alford, 68

N. C. 322; Starr v. Liftchild, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 541; Marlbury v. State, 10 Ind. App. 21, 37 N. E. 558; and a superior officer, one under his command; Kellw. 136; Buller, N. P. 19; Bee, Adm. 161; Flemming v. Ball, 1 Bay (S. C.) 3; Brown v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 119; Sampson v. Smith, 15 Mass. 365. And see Cowp. 173; Hannen v. Edes, 15 Mass. 347; 3 C. & K. 142; but a master, ordinarily, not his servant; Com. v. Baird, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 267; Davis v. State, 6 Tex. App. 133; and the mate of a steamboat has no legal right to enforce his orders by beating one of the crew; The General Rucker, 35 Fed. 152. See ASSAULT; BEAT; CORRECTION. Doubtless these cases, or some of them, would hardly now be followed.

As a means of preserving the peace, in the exercise of an office, under process of court, and in aid of an authority at law. See ARREST.

As a necessary means of defence of the person against the plaintiff's assaults in the following instances: in defence of himself, his wife, 3 Salk. 46, his child, and his servant, Ow. 150 (but see 1 Salk. 407); but he is not justified in using force against a man to prevent his wife leaving him at the persuasion of such other; State v. Weathers, 98 N. C. 685, 4 S. E. 512. So, likewise, a person may defend any member of his family against an assault as he could himself, the wife may justify a battery in defending her husband, the child its parent, and the servant his master; 3 Salk. 46; Com. v. Malone, 114 Mass. 295; Smith v. Slocum, 62 Ill. 354; Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314, 100 Am. Dec. 173; State v. Greer, 22 W. Va. 800; Staten v. State, 30 Miss. 619; Webb, Poll. Torts, 255. In these situations, the party need not wait until a blow has been given; for then he might come too late, and be disabled from warding off a second stroke or from protecting the person assailed. Care, however, must be taken that the battery do not exceed the bounds of necessary defence and protection; for it is only permitted as a means to avert an impending evil which might otherwise overwhelm the party and not as a punishment or retaliation for the injurious attempt; Stra. 593; 1 Const. S. C. 34; Watrous v. Steel, 4 Vt. 629, 24 Am. Dec. 628; Shain v. Markham, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 578, 20 Am. Dec. 232; Poll. Torts 255. The degree of force necessary to repel an assault will naturally depend upon, and be proportioned to, the violence of the assailant; but with this limitation any degree is justifiable; 1 Ld. Raym. 177; Young v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 200; Shorter v. People, 2 N. Y. 193, 51 Am. Dec. 286; Stewart v. State, 1 Ohio St. 66; Holmes v. State, 23 Ala. 17; Carroll v. State, 23 Ala. 28, 58 Am. Dec. 282; Rapp v. Com., 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 614; Campbell v. People, 16 Ill. 17, 61 Am. Dec. 49; Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 85.

Evidence justifying an assault and battery is not admissible under a general denial; Hathaway v. Hatchard, 160 Mass. 296, 35 N. E. 857.

A battery may likewise be justified in the necessary defence of one's property; State v. Miller, 12 Vt. 437; Filkins v. People, 69 N. Y. 101, 25 Am. Rep. 143. If the plaintiff is in the act of entering peaceably upon the defendant's land, or, having entered, is discovered, not committing violence, a request to depart is necessary in the first instance; 2 Salk. 641; Abt v. Burghelm, 80 Ill. 92; see Low v. Elwell, 121 Mass. 309, 23 Am. Rep. 272; Townsend v. Briggs, 99 Cal. 481, 34 Pac. 116; and if the plaintiff refuses, the defendant may then, and not till then, gently lay hands upon the plaintiff to remove him from the close, and for this purpose may use, if necessary, any degree of force short of striking the plaintiff, as by thrusting him off; Skinn. 28. See Everton v. Esgate, 24 Neb. 235, 38 N. W. 794. If the plaintiff resists, the defendant may oppose force to force; Com. v. Clark, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 23; 1 C. & P. 6. But if the plaintiff is in the act of forcibly entering upon the land, or, having entered, is discovered subverting the soil, cutting down a tree, or the like, 2 Salk. 641, a previous request is unnecessary, and the defendant may immediately lay hands upon the plaintiff; 8 Term 78. A man may justify a battery in defence of his personal property without a previous request, if another forcibly attempt to take away such property; 2 Salk. 641. One from whom property has been wrongfully taken may regain the momentarily interrupted possession by the use of reasonable force, especially after demanding possession; Com. v. Donahue, 148 Mass. 529, 20 N. E. 171, 2 L. R. A. 623, 12 Am. St. Rep. 591.

BATTONIER. In French and Canadian law, a member of the bar selected as the head of the bar.

BATTURE (Fr. shoals, shallows). An elevation of the bed of a river under the surface of the water; but it is sometimes used to signify the same elevation when it has risen above the surface. Morgan v. Livingston, 6 Mart. (O. S.) 19, 216. See Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 123, 36 Am. Dec. 624; Hollingsworth v. Chaffe, 33 La. Ann. 551.

The term battures is applied principally to certain portions of the bed of the river Mississippi, which are left dry when the water is low, and are covered again, either in whole or in part, by the annual swells.

If it rises high, to be susceptible of ownership it does not pass in a grant of the adjacent land; Producers' Oil Co. v. Hansen, 132 La. 691, 61 South. 754.

BAWDY-HOUSE. A house of ill-fame, kept for the resort and unlawful commerce of lewd people of both sexes. State v. Evans, 27 N. C. 603. See HOUSE OF ILL FAME.

BAY. An enclosure, or other contrivance, to keep in the water for the supply of a mill, so that the water may be able to drive the wheels of such mill. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 19. (This is generally called a forebay.)

A bending or curving of the shore of the sea or of a lake, so as to form a more or less inclosed body of water. State v. Town of Gilmanton, 14 N. H. 477.

BAY WINDOW. A window projecting from the wall of a building so as to form a recess or bay within and, properly speaking, rising from the ground or basement, with straight sides only; but the term is also ordinarily applied to such projecting windows with curved sides, properly called bow windows, and also to projecting windows supported from the building, above the ground, properly called oriel windows.

The footways of streets being under municipal control, the authorities may determine the extent to which the sidewalks may be obstructed by such projections beyond the building line; their erection will not be enjoined by a court of equity if it appear that they will cause no appreciable injury, either by the finding of the master to that effect; Livingston v. Wolf, 136 Pa. 519, 20 Atl. 551, 20 Am. St. Rep. 936; or from the affidavits submitted on an application by the attorney-general to prevent the erection as a public nuisance; Gray v. Baynard, 5 Del. Ch. 499. Equity will not interfere in such cases at suit of a private person; Blanchard v. Reyburn, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 529; but will at suit of the attorney-general to prevent the erection of bay windows extending over the street; Commonwealth v. Harris, 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 10; Com. v. Reimer, 39 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 108; and a second story bay window is a nuisance and will be restrained; Appeal of Reimer, 100 Pa. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 373.

BEARER. One who bears or carries a thing.

If a bill or note be made payable to bearer, it will pass by delivery only, without indorsement; and whoever fairly acquires a right to it may maintain an action against the drawer or acceptor.

It has been decided that the bearer of a bank note, payable to bearer, is not an assignee of a chose in action within the eleventh section of the judiciary act of 1789, c. 20, limiting the jurisdiction of the circuit court; Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mas. 308, Fed. Cas. No. 17,944.

BEARERS. Such as bear down or oppress others; maintainers.

BEARING DATE. Words frequently used in pleading and conveyancing to introduce the date which has been put upon an instrument.

When in a declaration the plaintiff alleges that the defendant made his promissory note on such a day, he will not be considered as having alleged that it bore date on that day, so as to cause a variance between the declaration and the note produced bearing a different date; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 160; 2 Dowl. & L. 759.

BEAST. Any four-footed animal which may be used for labor, food, or sport; as opposed to man; any irrational animal. Webst. A cow is a beast; Taylor v. State, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 285; and so is a horse; Winfrey v. Zimmerman, 8 Bush (Ky.) 587; and a hog; State v. Enslow, 10 Ia. 115; but a dog was held not to be; U. S. v. Gideon, 1 Minn. 292 (Gil. 226); but see Morewood v. Wakefield, 133 Mass. 241.

BEASTS OF THE CHASE. Properly, the buck, doe, fox, martin, and roe, but in a common and legal sense extending likewise to all the beasts of the forest, which beside the others are reckoned to be the hind, hare, bear, and wolf, and, in a word, all wild beasts of venery or hunting. Co. Litt. 233; 2 Bla. Com. 39. See ANIMAL.

BEASTS OF THE FOREST. See BEASTS OF THE CHASE.

BEASTS OF THE WARREN. Hares, coney, and roes. Co. Litt. 233; 2 Bla. Com. 39.

BEAT or BEATING. To strike or hit repeatedly, as with blows.

To beat, in a legal sense, is not merely to whip, wound, or hurt, but includes any unlawful imposition of the hand or arm. The slightest touching of another in anger is a battery. Goodrum v. State, 60 Ga. 511.

The beating of a horse by a man refers to the infliction of blows; Com. v. McClellan, 101 Mass. 35. See BATTERY.

BEATING OF THE BOUNDS. An ancient custom in England by which, once a year, the minister, etc., of a parish walked about its boundaries to preserve a recollection of them. Cent. Dict. (Perambulation).

BEAUPLEADER (L. Fr. fair pleading). A writ of prohibition directed to the sheriff or another, directing him not to take a fine for beaupleader.

There was anciently a fine imposed called a fine for beaupleader, which is explained by Coke to have been originally imposed for bad pleading. Coke, 2d Inst. 123. It was set at the will of the judge of the court, and reduced to certainty by consent, and annually paid. Com. Dig. Prerogative (D, 52). The statute of Marlebridge (52 Hen. III.) c. 11, enacts, that neither in the circuit of justices, nor in counties, hundreds, or courts-baron, any fines shall be taken for fair pleading; namely, for not pleading fairly or aptly to the purpose. Upon this statute this writ was ordained, directed to the sheriff, bailiff, or him who shall demand the fine; and it is a prohibition or command not to do it; New Nat. Brev. 596; Fitzh. N. B. 270 a; Hall, Hist. Comm. Law, c. 7. Mr. Reeve explains it as a fine paid for the privilege of a fair hearing; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law 70. This latter view would perhaps derive some confirmation from the connection in point of time of this statute with Magna Carta, and the resemblance which the custom bore to the other customs against which the clause in the charter of nulli vendemus, etc., was directed. See Com. Dig. Prerogative (D, 51, 52); Cowell; Co. 2d Inst. 122; Crabb, Eng. Law 150.

BED. The channel of a stream; the part between the banks worn by the regular flow of the water. See Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. (U. S.) 426, 14 L. Ed. 189.

The phrase divorce from bed and board, contains a legal use of the word synonymous with its popular use.

BED-ALE or BID-ALE. A friendly assignation for neighbors to meet and drink at the house of newly married persons or other poor people and then for the guests to contribute to the housekeepers. Cowell.

BEDHOUSE. A hospital or almshouse for bedesmen or poor people who prayed for their founders and benefactors; from the Saxon biddan, to pray. Cunningham.

BEDEL. In English Law. A crier or messenger of court, who summons men to appear and answer therein. Cowell. An inferior officer in a parish or liberty, or in an institution, such as the Blue Coat School in London.

A subordinate officer of a university who walked with a mace before one of the officers on ceremonial occasions and performed other minor duties ordinarily.

A herald to make public proclamations. Cent. Dict.

The more usual spelling is BEADLE, q. v.

BEDELARY. The jurisdiction of a bedel, as a bailiwick is the jurisdiction of a bailiff. Co. Litt. 234 b; Cowell.

BEDEREPE. A service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, as to reap their landlord's corn at harvest. Said by Whishaw to be still in existence in some parts of England. Blount; Cowell.

BEDEWERI. Those which we now call vanditti; profligate and excommunicated persons. Cunningham.

BEEF. This word is used frequently to mean an animal of the cow species and not beef prepared for market. A beef or one beef is an expression frequently used to designate an animal fit for use as beef, instead of designating it as a steer, a heifer, an ox, or a cow. Davis v. State, 40 Tex. 135.

BEER. A malt liquor of the lighter sort and differs from ordinary beer or ales, not so much in its ingredients as in its processes of fermentation.

BEES are animals feræ naturæ while unreclaimed; Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 546; Cock v. Weatherby, 5 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 333. See Inst. 2. 1. 14; Dig. 41. 1. 5. 2; Gillet v. Mason, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 16; 2 Bla. Com. 392. If while so unreclaimed they take up their abode in a tree, they belong to the owner of the soil, but not so if reclaimed and they can be identified; Goff v. Kilts, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 550. See Ferguson v. Miller, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 243, 13 Am. Dec. 519; Idol v. Jones, 13 N. C. 162. See ANIMAL.

BEGGAR. One who obtains his livelihood by asking alms. The laws of several of the states punish begging as an offence. See TRAMP; VAGRANT.

BEGIN. To originate. To come into existence. As to the right to begin at a trial, see OPENING AND CLOSING.

BEGOTTEN. "To be begotten" means the same as "begotten," embracing all those whom the parent shall have begotten during his life, quos procreaverit. 1 Maule & S. 135; Wager v. Wager, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 377.

BEGUN. In a statute providing that nothing contained in it should affect prosecutions "begun" under any existing act, the word "begun" means both those which have already been begun and those which may hereafter be begun. Lang v. U. S., 133 Fed. 201, 66 C. C. A. 255.

BEHALF. Benefit, support, defence, or advantage.

BEHAVIOR. Manner of having, holding, or keeping one's self; carriage of one's self, with respect to propriety, morals, and the requirements of law. Surety to be of good behavior is a larger requirement than surety to keep the peace; Dalton, c. 122; 4 Burns, Just. 355. See GOOD BEHAVIOR.

BEHETRIA. In Spanish Law. Lands situated in districts and manors in which the inhabitants had the right to select their own lords.

BEHOOF (Sax.). Use; service; profit; advantage. It occurs in conveyances.

BELIEF. Conviction of the mind, arising not from actual perception or knowledge, but by way of inference, or from evidence received or information derived from others. See DECEIT.

Belief may evidently be stronger or weaker according to the weight of evidence adduced in favor of the proposition to which belief is granted or refused; Thompson v. White, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 137; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 7-13. See

1 Stark. Ev. 41; 2 Powell, Mortg. 555; 1 Ves. Ch. 95; 12 id. 80; Dy. 53; 2 W. Bla. 881; Carmalt v. Post, 8 Watts (Pa.) 406; Bennifield v. Hypres, 38 Ind. 504; Hatch v. Carpenter, 9 Gray (Mass.) 274; Humphreys v. McCall, 9 Cal. 62, 70 Am. Dec. 621; Ventress v. Smith, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 171, 9 L. Ed. 382.

BELLIGERENCY. In International Law. The status of de facto statehood attributed to a body of insurgents, by which their hostilities are legalized. Before they can be recognized as belligerents they must have some sort of political organization and be carrying on what in international law is regarded as legal war. There must be an armed struggle between two political bodies, each of which exercises de facto authority over persons within a determined territory, and commands an army which is prepared to observe the ordinary laws of war. It is not enough that the insurgents have an army; they must have an organized civil authority directing the army.

The exact point at which revolt or insurrection becomes belligerency is often extremely difficult to determine; and belligerents are not usually recognized by nations unless they have some strong reason or necessity for doing so, either because the territory where the belligerency is supposed to exist is contiguous to their own, or because the conflict is in some way affecting their commerce or the rights of their citizens. Thus in 1875 President Grant refused to recognize the Cubans as belligerents, although they had been maintaining hostilities for eight years, because they had no real and palpable political organization manifest to the world, and because, being possessed of no seaport, their contest was solely on land and without the slightest effect upon commerce; Moore, Int. Law Dig. I, 196. One of the most serious results of recognizing belligerency is that it frees the parent country from all responsibility for what takes place within the insurgent lines; Dana's Wheaton, note 15, page 35.

When revolutionists have no organized political government and it becomes necessary to recognize them in some way, a status of insurgency (q. v.) is sometimes recognized. In this way the parent state avoids the necessity of treating the insurgents as pirates and third Powers obtain certain of the rights of neutrals. In 1895 President Cleveland recognized a status of insurgency in Cuba and enjoined the observance of the Neutrality Laws. Moore I, 242. See Hall, 6th ed. 31-42; Hershey 118-123.

BELLIGERENT. In International Law. As adj. and noun. Engaged in lawful war; a state so engaged. In plural. A body of insurgents who by reason of their temporary organized government are regarded as conducting lawful hostilities. Also, militia, corps of volunteers, and others, who although not part of the regular army of the state, are regarded as lawful combatants provided they observe the laws of war; 4 H. C. 1907, arts. 1, 2. See WAR; BELLIGERENCY.

BELONG. To appertain to; to be the property of. Property "belonging" to a person has two general meanings: (1) ownership; (2) the absolute right of user. A road may be said with perfect propriety to belong to a man who has the right to use it as of right although the soil does not belong to him; 31 L. J. Ex. 227. See FIXTURES.

It may also signify a legal residence. As, the town to which a slave belongs is that alone in which he has a legal settlement; Columbia v. Williams, 3 Conn. 467.

BELOW. Inferior; preliminary. The court below is the court from which a cause has been removed. See BAIL.

BENCH. A tribunal for the administration of justice.

The judges taken collectively, as distinguished from counsellors and advocates, who are called the bar.

The term, indicating originally the seat of the judges, came to denote the body of judges taken collectively, and also the tribunal itself. The jus banci, says Spelman, properly belongs to the king's judges, who administer justice in the last resort. The judges of the inferior courts, as of the barons, are deemed to judge plano pede, and are such as are called in the civil law podanei iudices, or by the Greeks χαμαδουκασταί, that is humī iudicantes. The Greeks called the seats of their higher judges βήματα, and of their inferior judges βάθρα. The Romans used the word sellæ and tribunalia to designate the seats of their higher judges, and subsellia to designate those of the lower. See Spelman, Gloss. Bancus; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law 40, 4th ed.

"The court of common pleas in England was formerly called Bancus, the Bench, as distinguished from Bancus Regis, the King's Bench. It was also called Communis Bancus, the Common Bench; and this title is still retained by the reporters of the decisions in the court of Common Pleas. Mention is made in the Magna Charta 'de iusticiariis nostris de Banco,' which all men know to be the justices of the court of Common Pleas, commonly called the Common Bench, or the Bench." Viner, Abr. Courts (n. 2).

BENCH WARRANT. An order issued by or from a bench, for the attachment or arrest of a person. It may issue either in case of a contempt, or where an indictment has been found.

BENCHERS. Seniors in the Inns of Court, intrusted with their government.

They have the absolute and irresponsible power of punishing a barrister of their Inn guilty of misconduct, by either admonishing or rebuking him, by prohibiting him from dining in the hall, or even by expelling him from the bar, called disbaring. They may also refuse admission to a student, or reject his call to the bar. Wharton, Lex. But see BARRISTER, as to the sole right of the judges to admit to the bar and to debar.

See INNS OF COURT; COUNCIL OF THE BAR.

BENEFICE. An ecclesiastical preferment.

In its more extended sense, it includes any such preferment; in a more limited sense, it applies to rectories and vicarages only. See BENEFICIUM; SIMONY.

BENEFICE DE DISCUSSION. See BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION.

BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS. Voluntary associations for mutual assistance in time of need and sickness, and for the care of families of deceased members. Niblack, Ben. Soc. and Accid. Ins. These associations form in substance a very effective system of co-operative life insurance. The payment to the beneficiary is not a gift, but a right arising from the contract of membership, and when the conditions of membership have been fulfilled may be enforced at law; id. ch. xxvi. The suspension of a subordinate lodge will not defeat a recovery unless legally done; Young v. Grand Lodge of Sons of Progress, 173 Pa. 302, 33 Atl. 1038.

In a suit for sick benefits the constitution and by-laws of the society constitute the contract between the parties, and the mode which they provide to ascertain the right to benefits must be pursued in order to recover; Delaware Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F., v. Allmon, 1 Pennewill (Del.) 160, 39 Atl. 1098. When after a certificate had been issued under the law as it then stood payable at death to a creditor (named), a subsequent law prohibiting payment to other than relatives or dependents of the insured could have no retroactive effect nor compel him to designate a new beneficiary; Emmons v. Supreme Conclave, I. O. H., 6 Pennewill (Del.) 115, 63 Atl. 871; Peterson v. Gibson, 191 Ill. 365, 61 N. E. 127, 54 L. R. A. 836, 85 Am. St. Rep. 263; Sargent v. Knights of Honor, 158 Mass. 557, 33 N. E. 650; Mulderick v. Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W., 155 Pa. 505, 26 Atl. 663; Wist v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 22 Or. 271, 29 Pac. 610, 29 Am. St. Rep. 603; Hadley v. Queen City Camp No. 27, W. O. W., 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 413; Roberts v. Cohen, 60 App. Div. 259, 70 N. Y. Supp. 57. The beneficiary has not a vested right and a change could have been made by the member but the legislation was intended to be prospective and could not proprio vigore disturb existing relations; Hadley v. Queen City Camp No. 27, W. O. W., 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 413.

Where a statute authorizes a beneficial association to issue certificates for the benefit of certain enumerated relatives or dependents, and a person outside the specified classes is named in the certificate, that fact will not avoid the right in the fund of the beneficiaries designated by law; Royal League v. Shields, 251 Ill. 250, 96 N. E. 45, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 208. A servant is not a dependent; Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of New Jersey v. Gandy, 63 N. J. Eq. 692, 53 Atl. 142; a mother, under certain facts, has been held not to be; Elsev v. Odd Fellows Mut.

Relief Ass'n, 142 Mass. 224, 7 N. E. 844; or a brother; Supreme Council American Legion of Honor v. Smith, 45 N. J. Eq. 466, 17 Atl. 770; an adopted child may or may not be a dependent, and the dependency will not rest upon whether there has been a legal adoption; Murphy v. Nowak, 223 Ill. 301, 79 N. E. 112, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393. A person who assisted a deceased member and took care of him in his last illness was held not to be a dependent; Groth v. Central Verein der Gegenseitigen Unterstuetzungs Gesellschaft Germania, 95 Wis. 140, 70 N. W. 80; a creditor is not; Skillings v. Benefit Ass'n, 146 Mass. 217, 15 N. E. 566; nor an illegitimate child, even though the father had been boarding with the mother and paying therefor; Lavigne v. Ligue des Patriotes, 178 Mass. 25, 59 N. E. 674, 54 L. R. A. 814, 86 Am. St. Rep. 460; Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees of the World v. McAllister, 132 Mich. 69, 92 N. W. 770, 102 Am. St. Rep. 382; James v. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum, 130 Fed. 1014. Dependency for favor or affection or companionship is held to be excluded; Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 366, 33 N. E. 183, 19 L. R. A. 187, where an affianced wife was held not to be a dependent; contra, McCarthy v. Supreme Lodge, 153 Mass. 314, 26 N. E. 866, 11 L. R. A. 144, 25 Am. St. Rep. 637.

It is held in some courts that a woman is a dependent who in good faith lives with a member in the belief that she is his wife, although there is no legal marriage; Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W., v. Hutchinson, 6 Ind. App. 399, 33 N. E. 816; Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees of the World v. McAllister, 132 Mich. 69, 92 N. W. 770, 102 Am. St. Rep. 382; contra, Severa v. Beranak, 138 Wis. 144, 119 N. W. 814. Where the association has charter power to pay sums to the family and heirs of deceased members, a contract to pay to his legal representatives was construed to mean his heirs; Harton's Estate, 213 Pa. 499, 62 Atl. 1058, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 939.

A failure to apportion the proceeds of a benefit certificate between the beneficiaries entitles one to the entire sum upon the other proving ineligible; Cunat v. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur, 249 Ill. 448, 94 N. E. 925, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1192, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 213.

For most purposes mutual benefit associations are insurance companies and certificates issued by them are policies of life insurance. There are, however, some essential differences, one of which is the power on the part of the assured in mutual benefit associations to change the beneficiary; Holland v. Taylor, 111 Ind. 121, 12 N. E. 116. In a policy of life insurance, the beneficiary has a vested right. In a benevolent society the beneficiary has no vested right in the certificate before the death of the member; Masonic Benevolent Ass'n v. Bunch, 109 Mo. 560, 19 S. W. 25. The certificates of such associations are said to partake of the nature of testamentary dispositions of property; Woodruff v. Tilman, 112 Mich. 188, 70 N. W. 420. They may be disposed of by will unless the rules of the society prohibit it; Woodruff v. Tilman, 112 Mich. 188, 70 N. W. 420; Catholic Ben. Ass'n v. Priest, 46 Mich. 429, 9 N. W. 481; High Court Catholic Order of Foresters v. Malloy, 169 Ill. 58, 48 N. E. 392. The member may change the beneficiary without the latter's consent; Masonic Ben. Ass'n v. Bunch, 109 Mo. 560, 19 S. W. 25; he may change as to a portion of the insurance; Woodruff v. Tilman, 112 Mich. 188, 70 N. W. 420; contra, McClure v. Johnson, 56 Ia. 620, 10 N. W. 217.

If the by-laws point out the mode in which the beneficiary may be changed, another beneficiary can be substituted only in the manner provided, and an attempt of the member to dispose of the fund by will is held ineffectual; Stewart v. Trustees of College, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 409 (where the objection was raised by the society); Holland v. Taylor, 111 Ind. 121, 12 N. E. 116; Stephenson v. Stephenson, 64 Ia. 534, 21 N. W. 19; McCarthy v. New England Order of Protection, 153 Mass. 314, 26 N. E. 866, 11 L. R. A. 144, 25 Am. St. Rep. 637; Fink v. Fink, 171 N. Y. 616, 64 N. E. 506. Opposing this rule, it is held that such a provision was for the benefit of the association which might waive it or insist upon it, and if waived by the association, the member might change his beneficiary by will; Splawn v. Chew, 60 Tex. 532; Kepler v. Supreme Lodge, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 274.

Where no method of changing the beneficiary is provided, a letter mailed to the company directing the payment to a new beneficiary completes the change; Hirschl v. Clark, 81 Ia. 200, 47 N. W. 78, 9 L. R. A. 841; Fink v. Mutual Aid Society, 57 App. Div. 507, 68 N. Y. Supp. 80.

Such association has power to amend its by-laws so as to increase the assessments on its members, where the existing rate has proved inadequate, under charter authority to provide for the payment of a certain death benefit to be secured by assessment; Reynolds v. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum, 192 Mass. 150, 78 N. E. 129, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1154, 7 Ann. Cas. 776; Gaut v. Life Ass'n, 121 Fed. 403; Miller v. National Council of Knights & Ladies of Security, 69 Kan. 234, 76 Pac. 830; contra, unless there was an express agreement that a member should be bound by future by-laws, varying or modifying his contract; Covenant Mut. Life Ass'n of Illinois v. Kentner, 188 Ill. 431, 58 N. E. 966; Pearson v. Indemnity Co., 114 Mo. App. 283, 83 S. W. 588; Wright v. Knights of Maccabees of the World, 48 Misc. 558, 95 N. Y. Supp. 996 (though the proposed increase was necessary to keep the association solvent). A member cannot be assessed for losses that occurred prior to his membership unless he had so agreed; Clark v. Traveling Men's Ass'n (Ia.) 135 N. W. 1114, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 631; or for the creation of an emergency fund; id.

If at the time one becomes a member of a beneficial order, its constitution and by-laws expressly reserve the right to make amendments thereto, he is bound by a subsequent amendment injuriously affecting him; Robinson v. Templar Lodge, 117 Cal. 370, 49 Pac. 170, 59 Am. St. Rep. 193. Such an amendment must be reasonable; Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 104 Fed. 638, 44 C. C. A. 93; Modern Woodmen of America v. Wieland, 109 Ill. App. 340; Smith v. Supreme Lodge, 83 Mo. App. 512; O'Neill v. Supreme Council, 70 N. J. L. 410, 57 Atl. 463, 1 Ann. Cas. 422. The power to make it, not being a power to destroy the contract rights of the members; Parish v. Produce Exchange, 169 N. Y. 34, 61 N. E. 977, 56 L. R. A. 149; but where it makes so radical a change as to amount to a repudiation of a contract it will be void; Beach v. Supreme Tent, 177 N. Y. 100, 69 N. E. 281. The voluntary acceptance of by laws providing for the imposition of coercive fines does not make such fines legal and the standing threat of their imposition may properly be classed with the ordinary threat of suits upon groundless claims; Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 42 Atl. 607, 43 L. R. A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746.

A discussion of the effect of an erroneous description of the beneficiary in a certificate by Cyrus J. Wood, 57 Cent. L. J. 383, reaches the conclusion that the courts are inclined to take into consideration the benevolent character and purpose of these societies and, in order to effectuate this purpose, liberally construe by-laws and statutes, giving a broad interpretation to such terms as relatives, families and dependents, so that one wrongfully described as a relative may obtain the benefit on proving dependency, and if the beneficiary cannot be brought within the prescribed limits, those who are within the rules may receive the benefit as against both the insured and the society since a misdescription seems to be ignored and the rights of all concerned are decided according to the benevolent purpose of the society with regard to the real relation of the appointed beneficiary to the deceased. BENEFICIAL INTEREST. Profit, benefit, or advantage resulting from a contract, or the ownership of an estate as distinct from the legal ownership or control.

A cestui que trust has the beneficial interest in a trust estate while the trustee has the legal estate. If A makes a contract with B to pay C a sum of money, C has the beneficial interest in the contract.

BENEFICIAL POWER. It is used in New York and has for its object the donee of the power, and is to be executed solely for his benefit, in contradistinction to trust powers, which have for their object persons other than the donee and are to be executed solely for their benefit. Jennings v. Conboy, 73 N. Y. 234.

BENEFICIAL SOCIETIES. See BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS.

BENEFICIARY. A term suggested by Judge Story as a substitute for cestui que trust, and adopted to some extent. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 321.

The person named in a policy of insurance to whom the insurance is payable upon the happening of the event insured against.

The beneficiary of a contract is not a cestui que trust; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 564.

BENEFICIO PRIMO (more fully beneficio primo ecclesiastico habendo). A writ directed from the king to the chancellor, commanding him to bestow the benefice which shall first fall in the King's gift, above or under a certain value, upon a particular and certain person. Reg. Orig. 307.

BENEFICIUM (Lat.). A portion of land or other immovable thing granted by a lord to his followers for their stipend or maintenance.

It originally meant a "benefaction" from the king, usually to a noble. The analogous English institution was the laen or loan; Maitl. Domesd. Book & Beyond 301.

In the early feudal times, grants were made to continue only during the pleasure of the grantor, which were called munera; but soon afterwards these grants were made for life, and then they assumed the name of beneficia. Dalrymple, Feud. Pr. 199. Pomponius Laetus, as cited by Hotoman, De Feudis, c. 2, says, "That it was an ancient custom, revived by the Emperor Constantine, to give lands and villas to those generals, prefects, and tribunes who had grown old in enlarging the empire, to supply their necessities as long as they lived, which they called parochial parishes, etc. But between (feuda) fiefs or feuds and (parochias) parishes there was this difference, that the latter were given to old men, veterans, etc., who, as they deserved well of the republic, were sustained the rest of their life (publico beneficio) by the public benefaction; or, if any war afterwards arose, they were called out not so much as soldiers as leaders (magistri militum). Feuds (feuda), on the other hand, were usually given to robust young men who could sustain the labors of war. In later times, the word parochia was appropriated exclusively to ecclesiastical persons, while the word beneficium (militare) continued to be used in reference to military fiefs or fees.

A general term applied to ecclesiastical livings. 4 Bla. Com. 107. See BENEFICE.

In Civil Law. Any favor or privilege.

BENEFICIUM CLERICALE. Benefit of clergy, which see.

BENEFICIUM COMPETENTIE. In Scotch Law. The privilege of retaining a competence belonging to the obligor in a gratuitous obligation. Such a claim constitutes a good defence in part to an action on the bond. Paterson, Comp.

In Civil Law. The right which an insolvent debtor had, among the Romans, on making cession of his property for the benefit of his creditors, to retain what was required for him to live honestly according to his condition. 7 Toullier, n. 258.

A defendant's privilege of being condemned only in an amount which he could pay without being reduced to a state of destitution. Sand. Justinian iv. vi. 37.

BENEFICIUM DIVISIONIS. See BENEFIT OF DIVISION.

BENEFICIUM INVENTARII. See BENEFIT OF INVENTORY.

BENEFICIUM ORDINIS. In Scotch and Civil Law. The privilege of the surety allowing him to require that the creditor shall take complete legal proceedings against the debtor to exhaust him before he calls upon the surety. 1 Bell, Com. 347.

BENEFIT. Profit, fruit, or advantage.

The acceptance of the benefits of a contract estops a party from denying its validity; City of St. Louis v. Davidson, 102 Mo. 149, 14 S. W. 825, 22 Am. St. Rep. 764; Spencer v. Jennings, 139 Pa. 198, 21 Atl. 73; Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 324, 25 N. E. 67, 7 L. R. A. 304; Palmerton v. Hoop, 131 Ind. 23, 30 N. E. 874; Gladstone Exch. Bank v. Keating, 94 Mich. 429, 53 N. W. 1110; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Foltz, 52 Fed. 627.

BENEFIT ASSOCIATION. See BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS.

BENEFIT OF CESSION. In Civil Law. The release of a debtor from future imprisonment for his debts, to which he is entitled upon the surrender of his property for the benefit of his creditors. Pothier, Procéd. Civ. part 5, c. 2, § 1.

This was something like a discharge under the insolvent laws, which releases the person of the debtor, but not goods he acquires afterwards. See BANKRUPT; CESSIO BONORUM; INSOLVENT.

BENEFIT OF CLERGY. Originally it meant that an ordained clerk charged with felony could be tried only in the Ecclesiastical Court. But, before the end of Henry III.'s reign, the king's court, though it delivered him to the Ecclesiastical Court for trial, took a preliminary inquest as to his guilt or innocence. The latter court tried him by compurgation. It could sentence him to degradation, imprisonment or whipping. Benefit of clergy did not apply to treason, breach of forest laws, trespasses or misdemeanors. In time it changed and became a complicated series of rules exempting certain persons from punishment for certain criminal offences. It was extended to secular clerks, then to all who could read. In 1705 this requirement was abolished. Till 1692 a woman commoner could not claim it. By act in 1487, all persons except those in orders were, if convicted of a clergyable felony, branded and disabled from claiming the privilege a second time. A peer, even if he could not read, had the privilege (1547). By act in 1717, persons (not peers or clerks in orders) were if convicted of clergyable larcenies transported for 7 years. Gradually the number of non-clergyable offences was increased and new offences, when created, were made non-clergyable. It was abolished in England in 1827. 1 Holdsw. H. E. L. 381.

Kelyng reports, "At the Lent Assizes for Winchester (18 Car. II.) the clerk appointed by the bishop to give clergy to the prisoners, being to give it to an old thief, I directed him to deal clearly with me, and not to say legit in case he could not read; and thereupon he delivered the book to him, and I perceived the prisoner never looked on the book at all: and yet the bishop's clerk, upon the demand of 'legit? or non legit?' answered 'legit.' And thereupon I told him I doubted he was mistaken, and had the question again put to him; whereupon he answered again, something angrily, 'legit.' Then I bid the clerk of assizes not to record it, and I told the parson that he was not the judge whether the culprit could read or no, but a ministerial officer to make a true report to the court; and so I caused the prisoner to be brought near, and delivered him the book, when he confessed that he could not read. Whereupon I told the parson that he had unpreached more that day than he could preach up again in many days, and I fined him five marks." An instance of humanity is mentioned by Donne, of a culprit convicted of a non-clergyable offence prompting a convict for a clergyable one in reading his neck-verse. In the very curious collection of prolegomena to Coryat's Crudities are commendatory lines by Inigo Jones. The famous architect wrote, "Whoever on this book with scorn would look, May he at sessions crave, and want his book."

When one who could read had the privilege, it was enough to read a line in a book, and the same verse of Psalms li. 1, was said to be used with each prisoner, called the "neck-verse."

See 1 Soc. Engl. 297; 1 P. & M. 429; 1 Stephen H. C. L. 464.

The benefit of clergy seems never to have been extended to breach of forest laws, trespass or high treason, nor misdemeanors inferior to felony. In time it became a complicated series of rules exempting certain persons from punishment for certain criminal offences. It has been usually acknowledged as belonging to the common law of most of the United States; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 938. See 1 Chit. Cr. L. 667; 4 Bla. Com. ch. 28; 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 936.

By act of congress of April 30, 1790, R. S. § 5329, the benefit of clergy shall not be used or allowed upon conviction of any crime for which the punishment is death. Repealed by act of March 4, 1909; apparently the doctrine thus becomes obsolete.

See BURNING IN THE HAND.

BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION. The right which a surety has to cause the property of the principal debtor to be applied in satisfaction of the obligation in the first instance. La. Civ. Code, art. 3014. See BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION.

BENEFIT OF DIVISION. In Civil Law. The right of one of several joint sureties, when sued alone, to have the whole obligation apportioned amongst the solvent sureties, so that he need pay but his share. La. Civ. Code, arts. 3014-3020.

BENEFIT OF INVENTORY. In Civil Law. The privilege which the heir obtains of being liable for the charges and debts of the succession, only to the value of the effects of the succession, by causing an inventory of these effects within the time and manner prescribed by law. La. Civ. Code, art. 1025; Pothier, des Success. c. 3, s. 3, a. 2. See Spence, Eq. Jurisd. 585. See also Paterson, Comp. as to the Scotch law.

BENERETH. A service which the tenant rendered to his lord with his plow and cart. Cowell.

BENEVOLENCE. A voluntary gratuity given by the subjects to the king. Cowell.

Benevolences were first granted to Edward IV.; but under subsequent monarchs they became anything but voluntary gifts, and by the Petition of Rights (3 Car. I.) no benevolence shall be extorted without the consent of parliament. The illegal claim and collection of these benevolences was one of the prominently alleged causes of the rebellion of 1640. 1 Bla. Com. 140; 4 id. 436.

The love of humanity; the desire to promote its prosperity or happiness. When used in a bequest with charity, it is synonymous. Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen (Mass.) 446. See CHARITABLE USES.

BENEVOLENTIA REGIS HABENDA. The form in ancient fines and submissions to purchase the king's pardon and favor in order to be restored to place, title or estate. Paroch. Antiq. 172.

BENHURST. In Berkshire, a remedy for the inhabitants thereof to levy money recovered against them on the statute of hue and cry. 39 Eliz. c. 25.

BEQUEATH. To give personal property by will to another. Lasher v. Lasher, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 106. The word may be construed devise, so as to pass real estate; Wigram, Wills 11; or devise and bequeath; Laing v. Barbour, 119 Mass. 525; Dow v. Dow, 36 Me. 216; Lasher v. Lasher, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 109. See LEGACY.

BEQUEST. A gift by will of personal property. See LEGACY.

BERTILLON SYSTEM. See ANTHROPOMETRY.

BESAILE, BESAYLE. The great-grandfather, proavus. 1 Bla. Com. 186.

BESIDES. In addition to; moreover. In provisions in a will for children "besides" an eldest son, no children take unless there be a son; 4 Dr. & War. 235.

BESOT. To stupefy, to make dull or senseless, to make to dote; and "to dote" is to be delirious, sill or insane. Gates v. Meredith, 7 Ind. 441.

BEST. Of the highest quality. Of the greatest usefulness for the purpose intended. Where one covenants to use his best endeavors, there is no breach if he is prevented by causes wholly beyond his control and without any default on his part; 7 H. & N. 92. A contract to erect a building of the best lumber means the best lumber of which buildings are ordinarily constructed at that place; McIntire v. Barnes, 4 Col. 285.

BEST EVIDENCE. The best evidence of which the nature of the case admits, not the highest or strongest evidence which the nature of the thing to be proved admits of: e. g. a copy of a deed is not the best evidence: the deed itself is better. 1 Greenl. Ev., Lewis's ed. § 82; State v. McDonald, 65 Me. 467; Taylor v. Riggs, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 7 L. Ed. 275; Whitehead v. School Dist., 145 Pa. 418, 22 Atl. 991; 15 Q. B. 782.

The rule requiring the best evidence to be produced is to be understood of the best legal evidence; Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 34; 3 Bla. Com. 368, n. 10, by Christian. It is relaxed in some cases, as where the words or the act of the opposite party avow the fact to be proved. A tavern-keeper's sign avows his occupation; taking of tithes avows the clerical character; Cummim v. Smith, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 440; 1 Saund. Pl. 49.

Letterpress copies of letters are the best secondary evidence of their contents; Ford v. Cunningham, 87 Cal. 209, 25 Pac. 403. Where a note and the deed of trust given to secure it differ in describing the payee of the note, the note will prevail as evidence over the deed of trust; Magee v. Burch, 108 Mo. 336, 18 S. W. 1078.

Prof. Thayer (Evid. 484) treats the subject and expresses the opinion that this phraseology tends to confusion; though admitting that in the earlier days it may have been useful and may become so again as the discretion of the courts is enlarged. He prefers "primary" and "secondary." Id. 505.

BESTIALITY. A sexual connection between a human being and a brute of the opposite sex. Buggery seems to include both sodomy and bestiality; Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 356, 71 Am. Dec. 331. See SODOMY.

BETROTHMENT, BETROTHAL. A contract between a man and a woman by which they agree that at a future time they will marry together.

The contract must be mutual; the promise of the one must be the consideration for the promise of the other. It must be obligatory on both parties at the same instant, so that each may have an action upon it, or it will bind neither; 1 Freem. 95; 3 Kebl. 148; Co. Litt. 79 a, b.

The parties must be able to contract. If either be married at the time of betrothment, the contract is void; but the married party cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and set up a marriage or previous engagement as an answer to the action for the breach of the contract, because this disability proceeds from the defendant's own act; 1 Ld. Raym. 387; 3 Inst. 89; 1 Sid. 112; 1 Bla. Com. 432.
